GOD is not Pharisaical. When our Lord bid Peter forgive seventy times seven, He was not laying a burden upon man which He Himself would not touch. God is willing to forgive far more than all He requires from his creatures. With God forgiveness is infinite; but "that He may be feared," that each time He may gain fuller control over heart and life, and that each forgiveness may make it more impossible to grieve or sin against Him. A forgiveness which does not impress us more deeply with the holiness of God, which does not advance our sanctification and likeness to Him, which does not set us more free from the sin forgiven, makes to sink deeper in the mire. We fail to learn the love of God.—Pastor Stoekmayer.

> Tell me no more of praise and wealth,
> Tell me no more of ease and health,
> For these have all their snares;
> Let me but know my sins forgiven,
> But see my name enrolled in heaven,
> And I am free from cares.

SECRET PRAYER.

In secret prayer, does thy heart never urge thee to cut it short, frequently making a motion to have done. Charge it in the name of God to stay, and not do so great a work by halves. Say to it, Foolish heart, if thou beg awhile and goest away without thine alms, is not thy begging lost labour? Thou camest hither in hope to have a sight of the glory which thou must inherit, and wilt thou stop when thou art almost at the top of the hill? Thou camest hither in the hope to speak with God; wilt thou go before thou hast seen Him? Thou camest to bathe thy soul in the streams of consolation, and to that end didst unclothe thyself of thy earthly thoughts, and wilt thou only touch the bank and return? Thou camest to spy out the land of promise; go not back without one cluster of grapes to show thy brethren for their encouragement. Let them see that thou hast tasted of the wine by the gladness of thy heart; and that thou hast been anointed with the oil, by the cheerfulness of thy countenance; and hast fed of the milk and honey, by the mildness of thy disposition, and the sweetness of thy conversation.—Traill.

THE LATE

JOSEPH BARBER LIGHTFOOT, D.D.,

Bishop of Durham.

THIS scholar, divine, and bishop, whom Englishmen of every class have recently followed to the tomb, was a native of Liverpool, where he was born in 1828. He was the younger son of Mr. J. J. Lightfoot, accountant in that city. He was educated in King Edward the Sixth's Grammar School, Birmingham, under the famous Dr. J. Prince Lee, and among his intimate fellow pupils were the present Archbishop of Canterbury and Canon Westcott. The outstanding dates of his subsequent life were briefly as follow. In 1847 he was entered at Trinity College, Cambridge; in 1849 he was scholar, in 1851 B.A., wrangler, and senior classic; in 1852 fellow, and soon afterwards tutor of his College; in 1861—1879 Hulsean and Margaret Professor of Divinity; in 1879, until his death at Bournemouth on December 21, 1889, Bishop of Durham.

He had a stupendous memory, and was unflinching in his application to study. To the end he considered no exertion thrown away when truth was at stake. In a note to his essay on "Paul and Seneca," he informs us how, in order to substantiate some dozen lines in the text, he had read through Epictetus and M. Antoninus. That a man who was singularly well acquainted with his authorities should act so conscientiously as to read them through again specially, in order to seek a few coincidences, might well teach a lesson to less accomplished students who would do really reliable work.

As a preacher, Dr. Lightfoot owed everything to character and rare mental endowments. He never spoke without being thorough, and in manner he was essentially unassuming and simple-minded. As a divinity professor for eighteen years, he commanded such audiences that he was obliged to lecture in the Great Hall of Trinity College, other rooms at the disposal of the University being found too small. There, it is said, he gathered all sorts and conditions of men around him, to listen to those expositions of Paul's writings which formed the basis of his now celebrated Commentaries.

As a theologian, Dr. Lightfoot did not found the structures which he raised, in the depths of abstract principles, as Butler and Berkeley may be said to have done, but on philology, criticism, and history. In these subjects he began his apprenticeship as a young M.A. in March, 1854, when, in conjunction with Hort, of Trinity, and Westcott, of Trinity (but then of Harrow), he started at Cambridge The Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology, which the three allies carried on until February, 1860. This was Lightfoot's first appearance in learned letters, and it was while he was College Tutor. His greatest performances were within the period of his professorships, in the Epistles of Paul and the writings of a Father of the early Church. Let it not be imagined that in his patristic labours Professor Lightfoot was toiling for the cloister. On the contrary, by his achievements in this department, plain, unlearned Christians have gained, whether they know it or not. What then was it that induced a man of his times, as Lightfoot was, and a man of such times, to turn aside from the work of his heart, Paul's Epistles, in order to investigate the problems besetting a short Greek uninspired tract, and to write three bulky octavos in the process, without heeding the remonstrances addressed to him?

In a few words, the case may be stated thus: Nearly fifty years ago a controversy arose as to the letters attributed to Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, martyred somewhere about A.D. 107, about forty years after the death of the Apostle Paul. To the discredit of the seven brief letters bearing his name, a brief Syriac version was put forward as representing the writings of the well-known Father. It was by no means a merely academic contention, for German Rationalists were propounding views of Christianity which gave the Gospels an origin much later than the days of Ignatius. Now, as the Ignatian letters exhibit palpable references to the Gospels, the proof of their genuineness was a disproof of one great argument of the Rationalists. Lightfoot devoted himself to the production of an edition of Ignatius, as complete as learning, criticism, and history could make it, and the accomplishment of this, in 1885, was the great literary work of his episcopal period. Establishing the genuineness of the letters, Lightfoot's patristic studies tended to strengthen a much-threatened link in the chain of Christian evidences. The Bishop also edited other works of the Apostolic Fathers.

Deeply interested in the revision of the Authorised Version, the Bishop wrote a work entitled "On a Fresh Revision of the New Testament." More recently he published a volume of articles in reply to the disquieting work "Supernatural Religion." Though engaged in controversy, he maintained a quiet spirit, for he never discussed for the sake of argument, but always for love of truth and with a desire to let it shine through the strife of words.

Dr. Lightfoot's Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles, occupying three volumes, have attained their universally acknowledged merit from the circumstance that, besides the wealth of philology, criticism, and history lavished on them, there is manifested a clear insight into the Apostle's doctrine and a supreme endeavour to set it in its right light independently of all bias to party views. In "Galatians" (1865) he shows himself thoroughly alive to the bearing of the Epistle on momentous questions of the present day. When he refers to Luther on the Galatians in such terms as these, that "no man was better fitted by the sympathy of like experiences to appreciate the character and teaching of Paul," he shows, as we cannot but think, that he understood both Luther and Paul. In "Philippians" (1868) he seeks to present the Apostle's view of the Gospel of Christ on its positive side, having no occasion to deal with perversions or corruptions; and here he warns us against the error of slighting the doctrines in order to lay the chief stress of the Gospel on its ethical precepts, thus cutting off the stream from its source. In "Colossians" (1875) the Person of Christ, in Paul's conception of it, is uppermost in his thoughts. Dr. Lightfoot's dissertation on the Christian ministry in "Philippians" has not ceased, and probably will never cease, to present an obstacle to mischievous opinions in that direction.

In the administration of his diocese, he had many difficulties to encounter, and naturally all his acts did not please all parties in the church. His influence as a scholar was perhaps greater than his work as a bishop. In a recent issue The Record well said: "If his gifts of head made him distinguished, it was his gifts of heart which made his success a thing which all were glad of, and rendered his influence over individual lives so potent and so salutary. His disciples were fascinated by the sweetness of his character. It is seldom that strong natures are so strong as not to be irritable; Dr. Lightfoot, though always immersed in literary work—the most trying of all to the nerves—was as free as possible from flurry and hastiness. It was this singular combination of strength and gentleness which attracted men, and specially young men. His immunity from egoism gave him leisure to be interested in others, and thus it was that, while absorbed in guiding the career of literally hundreds of others, he unconsciously shaped the grandest of all for himself."

In the current issue of The Contemporary Review, Archdeacon Farrar pays a hearty, though discriminating, tribute to his celebrated friend. We make the following extracts from the article:—

He has left his diocese one of the best organised and one of the most united in England. The secret of this success lies in his own words on the day of his enthronement: "I have but one idea for the administration of the diocese—that we should all strive to work together; that, as we contemplate the awful amount of sin around us, we should one and all resolve to do our best, by God's help, to lessen this gigantic mass of evil, and should be careful not to give or take unnecessary offence at what is done by those who are labouring earnestly and faithfully in the same cause?" Under his rule the diocese was divided; the diocesan work flourished; he preached in nearly every church in his diocese. Churches were built; home and foreign missions were promoted. Social efforts of all kinds were set on foot. The dense crowds of pitmen who watched in silence the funeral procession as it passed through Tudhoe and Spennymoor, showed how deeply the heart of the people had been touched by the work of the shy scholar who had been transformed into their Bishop.

By unswerving diligence, by early rising, by steady use of the fragments of time, he was still able to contribute to the higher branches of scholarly and historic research, while yet he was an active and most useful prelate. His charity, his tolerance, his magnanimity, tending to the annihilation of all that is petty and Pharisaic, gave to his diocese a singular sense of brotherliness, as well as an energy of devoted service. He found time to train gratuitously, in Auckland Castle, a succession of youths who, having enjoyed the advantage of seeing the daily spectacle of his example, are now, to the number of seventy, working as clergymen in the Church of England. Into two great movements he flung himself with clear-sighted energy. He could not live in the midst of a district inhabited by multitudes of pitmen and miners without observing the ravages of those two great enemies of mankind—intemperance and impurity. He became by choice and conviction a total abstainer, and a prominent advocate of temperance legislation. . . . Of the White Cross Society he was the president, and, if I mistake not, the principal founder. When he spoke on the platform he showed the power of handling a difficult subject with absolute precision, yet with the most refined delicacy; and we cannot doubt that by his words and his example he has greatly contributed to establish among young men a holier and more chivalrous view of the relations which should prevail between the sexes in a Christian society.

In no man whom I have ever known was there less of egotism or self-seeking. Called upon to face death at an age comparatively premature, when years of fruitful work might have lain before him, and when it seemed open to him to win a secure and lasting memorial in the minds of all men, by completing his editions of St. Paul's Epistles, and gratifying his longing to write a history of the fourth century, he rose at the call of God, and left his unfinished work and his accumulated materials, not only without a murmur, but without so much as a sigh of regret or a single backward glance.

Among Dr. Lightfoot's occasional publications we read with interest (in a college sermon on the death of Dr. Whewell, 1866) a mention of that great master's "simple Christian faith." In a comparison of the success of ancient missions and modern (1880), he will not allow the modern to have "failed," or to have any reason for discouragement. In a discourse on the drama, in St. James's, Piccadilly, 1873, he utters some very powerful warnings on the corruption of the stage. Finally, at Cambridge on Sunday evening, March 2, 1879, preaching his farewell sermon in the University Church before a dense throng of gownsmen, on the text: "Ye are bought with a price," the cross of Christ was his theme, declared in all its simplicity, in the language, not of a professor, but of a father and a pastor; "his rugged voice," says The Record, "quivering with emotion," as he ended with the touching sentences of the twenty-third Psalm. Eighteen years had he then been a teacher of divinity to six generations of students. May our Universities never lack such instructors of their sons—such fathers, such friends, such witnesses for solid, unadulterated, unperverted Christian truth!

PENNY DREADFULS.—A lady writer in The Sun for February describes the contents of some of the popular catchpenny papers for boys which she had purchased, and adds: "Nothing actually wrong has met me in these pages. But is this good, animating, elevating reading for our street boys? How does common life look after all the stage glare and false sentiment? Will they buckle on their armour for any brave and manly stand against evil, after reading such rubbish? Will not a morbid love of horrors and atrocities be thereby engendered? Nay, is this not one cause of the many deeds of violence committed in our civilised country? Can nothing be done to elevate the standard of what our boys are reading?"

OPEN DOORS IN INDIA.

IN a letter dated Calcutta, January 5, Lord Radstock writes to us as follows:—

There are so many of your readers who are praying for India, that they will be glad to have news from this most deeply interesting country. On all sides I hear of progress. In one place two thousand were baptized in four years; in others several hundreds. In Poona, Bombay, Allahabad, and here, I have had natives listening by hundreds with the deepest interest, not unmixed with sympathy, to the glorious news that God has come down to man. Multitudes are earnestly groping in the dark, and need but the message of the Gospel that He is come to give light and life. All zenana workers bear witness to doors open on all sides, and that ample new fields will be open to as many workers as may come.

THE LATE MR. J. DENHAM SMITH.

A GRACEFUL tribute of love and esteem has been paid to the memory of the late Mr. Denham Smith by his friends living in Dublin, and in other parts of Ireland. A sum of two hundred and sixty pounds has been subscribed with the object of having some permanent, and, at the same time, useful memorial to him in Dublin, and this has been carried out by endowing two beds—one in the male, and the other in the female ward, of the Adelaide Hospital. Inscribed on a shield over each bed are the following words:—

"In memory of Mr. J. Denham Smith. Collected by his friends at Merrion Hall. 'He being dead, yet speaketh' (Heb. xi. 4)."

Merrion Hall was the chief scene of his labours during the latter years of his life in Ireland, and was built in connection with the revival, in which he bore so honoured a part.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

DEAR SIR,—Our new house in Myrtle-street is doing capitally, and as a band of workers we are all very much improved in health and cheer by the change from Byrom-street. Our inmates number over a hundred now, and we are daily admitting little ones from the hard life outside, and spreading warmth and comfort around them. We are making our short but loving training as effective in every department as we possibly can before going forward to distribute them to situations in our great Canada.

We are getting the new year letters in from the hundreds who regularly write at this time in reply to ours of Christmas. Our hearts are made to burn with joy and delight at the testimony of their standing true for Christ. Truly it is a delightful and blessed work thus to rescue the helpless and innocent young ones, and put them beyond the vice and misery that must drag down mind and body.

One tells us he is endeavouring to become a teacher. Another looks to become a preacher of the glad tidings. A third is waiting patiently to hear if he is accepted as a missionary to China. His father for many years was a missionary in Liverpool; surely his spirit must rejoice to see his son following in his steps.—Yours faithfully, LOUISA BIRT.

1, Sugnall-street, Liverpool, January 30.

THE BALTIC PROVINCES.—Prayer is earnestly sought (says Mr. C. H. Spurgeon) for the Protestant Churches in the Baltic provinces of Russia, which are now being grievously oppressed by an attempt at forcible conversion to the Greek Church. We have had great pleasure in associating at Mentone with tried ones from this region, and our belief is that prayer for their deliverance will be heard and answered. May true religion also be revived in those districts!

"COME, TAKE MY YOKE."

"COME, take my yoke," the Saviour said,
"To follow Me be not afraid;
For I in heart am lowly, meek,
And offer you the rest you seek.

"The yoke of pleasure may allure,
And promise bliss that will endure;
But when it has thy manhood spoiled,
'Twill cast thee off as garment soiled.

"Take not on thee the yoke of wealth,
'Twill eat thy soul, destroy thy health,
And make thee feel how cheap the cost,
If worlds could buy the peace it lost.

"Ambition, too, its yoke displays,
And hangs out its seductive bays;
Be not, poor soul, by it misled,
I offer you a crown instead.

"Then take my yoke, 'tis soft and light,
No burden it by day or night;
'Twill guide thee to a world above,
Where yoke is none but yoke of love."

ROBERT SMITH.

CHRISTIAN BLIND.

THE Christian Blind Relief Society gave their annual tea to one thousand blind and their guides on Tuesday, January 28, in the school-room of the East London Tabernacle. This annual tea is the great treat of the year, and is most eagerly looked forward to. Although the weather was anything but favourable, the blind arrived in their customary large numbers. To watch their arrival was a study. Here, a group of blind, dressed alike, hailed from the workhouse close by; there, old men and women going down to the grave without ever having seen God's blessed sunlight, yet many of them showing that they had seen the Sun of Righteousness; again, young men and women, some of them having been suddenly, in their prime, struck by this terrible blow; others, and saddest sight of all, little children (in one case three sisters), who will never on the earth see the forms of those who love them.

The tea, a very substantial one, being over, some time was spent in singing Mr. Sankey's hymns, which are great favourites with the blind. "The Light of the World is Jesus" was especially enjoyed. The meeting was presided over by Pastor Archibald Brown, and earnest Gospel addresses were delivered by various friends. At the close of this very interesting gathering, each blind person was presented with an orange and a new shilling. Such a gathering must do good, not only to the blind, but to those taking part, in bringing home to their mind the sorrows and needs of those around them. Any particulars relating to the principles and workings of the Society will be gladly furnished by the hon. sec., Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, St. Stephen's Vicarage, North Bow, E.

MR. GLADSTONE'S ARTICLES on "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture" will begin in the April number of Good Words.

REV. JOHN McNEILL'S SERMONS, published from week to week (Nisbet & Co. 1d.) throb with abounding life and rousing calls to service; while heavy blows are dealt at modern idolatries in the Church and out of it. In a discourse on "The Queen of Sheba and Solomon," the preacher thus unburdens his soul: "The gad and fad of to-day is too much to run to the philosopher and the man of science. You run to these false kings, and say, "Who am I?" and they cannot tell you. They are not sure whether you are a monkey developing up or down. The wise men of the latter part of the nineteenth century have made asses of themselves. I despise no man's researches and no man's science, but I trust I have increasingly a healthy and perfect contempt for their contempt of the Christ of God. Let us all be dowered with the hate of their hate, the scorn of their scorn.

BOYS IN VENICE.

BETWEEN eight and nine years ago a noble work was commenced in Venice under remarkable circumstances. A lady attended a prayer-meeting there, conducted by the minister of the Italian Free Church, who was feeling deeply grieved at the state of many destitute ignorant boys, living in misery and vice. He was led to pray earnestly that God would interpose on their behalf, and raise up friends who should teach them of his ways, and guide their feet into the way of peace. The lady's heart was touched. God had prepared her for the work He would have done; and she and Signor Bernatto, the excellent minister, have earnestly laboured together in this cause ever since.

There is now a commodious Home, with fifty-four inmates, who learn wood-carving, shoe-making, printing, &c.; for these there are workshops attached. A few boys who have superior abilities are prepared to be schoolmasters, evangelists, &c.

We regret to know that the funds of this most useful Institution sorely need replenishing. If any kind readers are moved to help, they may send their gifts to Mrs. Hammond, Casa Scandiani, San Felice, Venice. Miss F. S. Plumptre, Southborough, Tunbridge Wells, receives communications in this country.

SEAMEN IN GLASGOW.

ONE of the institutions of practical value in Glasgow is the Seamen's Friend Society. In such a city, no one is more in need of friendly help, and this the Society very efficiently renders. Its anniversary was held last week under the chairmanship of Councillor Dickson.

Mr. R. H. Hunter, the hon. secretary, submitted the annual report. It stated that the unfortunate strikes among the sailors during the year were much to be regretted; but out of the evil it was trusted some good had come, for more of the men were detained on shore for a time, and the agents of the Society took every opportunity of meeting them; it was believed that many during the year had really begun a new life, and were now striving to live as Christians. The operations of the Society are chiefly centred in the Seamen's Institute and Chapel in Broomielaw and Brown-street on the north side of the river, and in the Seamen's Bethel, Eaglesham-street, Govan-road, on the south side of the river; but the whole harbour is regularly and systematically visited, as well as the vessels lying in the river. During the year 73,098 visits had been made by sailors to the Seamen's Institute, and they had there enjoyed their quiet games, or the advantages of the reading-room and library. In the Home for Distressed Seamen the Society had given 386 nights' free lodgings to sailors, as well as supplied them with food. The loan libraries were much appreciated by the men on long voyages. Families of seamen were regularly visited and looked after, and the widows of seamen were specially attended to by the ladies who formed the Ladies' Auxiliary.

It had long been felt that something more definite should be done for the orphan children of seamen, and this matter had occupied attention for some years. During the year a Sailors' Orphan Society had been instituted by the chairman, hon. secretary, and another of the directors, who had made themselves specially responsible for this work. Already a considerable number of children had been received. The funds of the Orphan Society would be kept distinct from those of the Seamen's Friend Society; but the directors commended this new work to the interest of all friends.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

MR. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, who for many years past has taken a deep interest in dock labourers, in January resumed the free teas, which will be continued for some weeks. The object is to bring the Gospel of Christ to bear upon them, and past efforts among this class have been most encouraging. Some are still bearing witness to the power of the Lord Jesus to deliver and to keep.

Much prayer is made before these gatherings that the power of the Holy Spirit may attend the word. Will friends kindly remember this work before the Lord, that we may be filled with the Spirit of Christ, and made wise to win souls to Him. JAMES SHARPLESS, 14, Sidney-square, E. Superintendent.

THE EARL AND STREET TRADERS.

A VERY enthusiastic reception was accorded to the Earl of Aberdeen, at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, last week. The Earl, at the time of Lord Shaftesbury's death, accepted the presidency of the comprehensive Mission which Mr. Councillor Orsman still superintends; but he visited the Costers' Hall last week for the first time. Amid the banners and music of the benefit societies, his progress was something like a triumphal procession, whilst the unfurling of a new banner was almost as good as a pageant in itself. The Earl spoke to the costers as a member of their fraternity, after Mr. Orsman had given him the right hand of fellowship, adding that he was proud to succeed to a position which was held by Lord Shaftesbury. The costers were reminded that they were an ancient fraternity, and supplied a great want. He pointed out the advantages which arose from their organisations being founded on a Christian basis. His lordship alluded to the interest which Lady Aberdeen felt in the work, and said she was only prevented by illness from being present.

Mr. E. Compton, Comptroller of the Post Office Savings' Bank, impressed upon the men the importance of total abstinence. He knew of a man who could save nothing before the Post Office Savings' Bank was established, but who now was the owner of fifteen cottages.

Mr. Councillor Orsman explained some things connected with coster life, its ups and downs, hardships, &c., comforting the men with the assurance that their president would always use his influence in their favour.

The Earl distributed several medals to men who had rendered service to the benefit societies. The meeting, as a whole, was a gratifying illustration of what can be done by a working mission church in a working-class neighbourhood. The winter work is now at its height; and the general meetings, as well as the Sunday-school, were never better attended. Nor were the cocoa breakfasts to famishing Board-school children, which are now resumed, ever more gratefully received.

THE JEWS OF SPITALFIELDS.—A good deal of quiet labour is done at the Mission House, 28B, Church-street, Spitalfields, by Mr. E. O. Roeder, missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. Divine service is held three times every week, and loving efforts are put forth to show that Christ is the Messiah of whom the prophets did speak. Mrs. Zuckerhandl goes about among the Jewish women of the neighbourhood, and a medical practitioner attends twice weekly at the Mission House to give advice and medicine to the many poor people who may need them. On a recent date Mr. Roeder invited the regular male attendants at the services to a tea-meeting. About sixty attended, and afterwards listened to the story of the life of John Bunyan, illustrated by means of dissolving views.

The Temperance Cause.

THE friends of temperance in Lincoln are taking steps to have a new hall erected in the city, where the principles of abstinence can be advocated.

It appears that Mr. Gladstone favours some kind of compensation to publicans deprived of their licence. We do not think that in this matter he will get a large following in the House of Commons.

The drink traffic is doing deadly work in Madagascar, and the coast tribes are suffering terribly from its effects. A deputation from the Congregational churches lately petitioned the Queen and Government, asking them to do their utmost to prevent the importation of rum.

It is stated by one of their number that some four-fifths of the members of the London County Council are interested in temperance work. A motion will be submitted proposing that no land be let for the erection of public-houses without the concurrence of the Council.

A leading medical practitioner in ocular diseases in London has recently stated that affections of the eye are largely induced and aggravated by the use of alcohol and tobacco. In treating such cases he invariably imposes abstinence from both, with the result that cures are made much more easy.

The extent to which drink is cursing the colony of New South Wales is appalling. In Sydney, especially, the evils of intemperance, impurity, and infidelity are rampant. When will Christian people, and when will statesmen (says a contemporary), come to deal as they ought to deal with the drink fiend?

The New York Independent gives its heartiest goodwill to the call for a non-partizan Woman's Christian Temperance Union. A convention to organise such a body was called to meet in Cleveland, O., on Jan. 22. The old organisation sadly crippled its usefulness by going over to the Prohibition Party, and a great many women refuse to have anything to do with it.

A correspondent of the Belfast Witness says he knows a large provincial town with two Presbyterian churches, one of which is supported by nine publicans, and the other by five; that a publican is superintendent of the Sabbath-school, that many of those publicans act on committees, and that in the case of one of the congregations the committee meetings are sometimes held in a member's tap-room!

The tenor of the despatch from the British minister at Washington, with respect to the laws affecting the liquor trade in the United States, is reported as adverse to compulsory prohibition, and favourable to high licence. We rather distrust official despatches from those who are probably not in personal sympathy with temperance legislation. Where prohibition has been put to a thorough test it has produced splendid results.

The advent of the white man (says The Daily Graphic) and the civilisation which follows in his train is, generally speaking, anything but an unmixed blessing to the native races that come within the sphere of his influence. Wherever he goes, the trader, eager to make as much money in as little time as possible, carries with him the vilest of drink; for the worse the compound, the better the profits. Nowhere, perhaps, are the evils which result from the unrestricted sale of this horrible stuff more marked than among the native races of South Africa. Magistrates, missionaries, and everybody else interested in their welfare, have urged again and again that the sale of spirits should be regulated in some way; the authorities at home have been addressed upon the subject, and, recently, the better disposed of the natives of Swaziland have themselves protested. Up to the present, however, all this has had no effect, and the South African native is still at liberty to spend every coin he has earned, or to barter away anything of value he may possess, in order that he may drink himself into a state of brutal insensibility or fiendish quarrelsomeness. Drink is answerable for by far the greater portion of the crime of South Africa.

The Edinburgh Town Council, by 18 votes to 14, has rescinded its recent resolution not to provide intoxicants at the Corporation conversaziones.

The New York Herald (London Edition) states that, in the coming Session of Parliament, Lord Randolph Churchill will introduce a Bill proposing to give to County Councils power to deal with licensing matters, through a special Commission popularly elected.

At the annual meeting of the Dominion Alliance at Montreal, it was arranged to begin a vigorous campaign in several counties in favour of the Scott Act, and one of the resolutions passed declared that every parliamentary candidate receiving the support of the Alliance should be a total abstainer.

In reviewing a temperance work, Mr. Spurgeon says:—"That good men can enjoy brandied concoctions and ardent spirits, and smile as if the Scriptures sanctioned them in their evil habit, is not to be explained except upon the charitable assumption that they know not what they do."

A licensing bill, which has been under the consideration of the Tasmanian Legislature, contains a barmaid's clause, by which females, with the exception of the landlord's wife, are prohibited from serving in bars after ten o'clock at night, except to serve lodgers or other inmates of the house.

The Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicants on Sunday recently held its annual meeting at Manchester. Notwithstanding the somewhat slow progress of the movement in England, a spirit of enthusiasm prevailed, and strenuous efforts will be made to secure legislative enactment for England during this year's session of Parliament.

One of the clauses in the new Samoan Treaty settled at the recent Conference in Berlin provides:—"No spirituous, vinous, or fermented liquors, or intoxicating drinks whatever shall be sold, given, or offered to any native Samoan or South Sea Islander resident in Samoa, to be taken as a beverage, under adequate penalities, including imprisonment."

A large demonstration in support of Sunday closing in London was lately held at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. Canon Leigh, who presided, said that the difficulty in obtaining a sober Sunday in London lay with the classes, and not with the masses; it was feared that, if public-houses were closed, the clubs would have to be shut also. Testimony was given from different parts of the Metropolis, showing that the bulk of the people would hail Sunday closing.

Rev. M. White, Blairgowrie Free Church, in a recent bold utterance against the use of intoxicants, said: "I know how texts of Scripture will be perverted. Drunken lips will slaver out the words, 'Take a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and for thine often infirmities.' But what infirmity have they, except their insatiable craving? And is it wine they have been taking? At a great distance we can tell it has rather been Scotland's curse, strong drink. Is it a little they have taken? No! or their foul tongues would not have been so loose."

Sad as are the statistics of our drinking customs, we have not yet sunk as low as some of the European countries. Recent returns show that, whereas in Belgium the annual consumption per head is 9·20 litres of spirits and 16·9 beer, in France, 7·29 spirits and 11·9 litres of wine and 21·10 beer, for the British Islands the consumption is 5·87 spirits and 14·80 beer. Denmark has the unenviable notoriety of being the most drinking country in Europe, with a consumption per head of no less than 18 litres of spirits and 88 of beer. Looking at these figures it is not to be wondered at that poverty is spreading so rapidly.

A THIRD EDITION has been issued of the pamphlet, "A Terrible Crime under British Rule in India"; it contains detailed particulars of the legal and other action taken in India and England with respect to the case of Luchminia, the Christian Hindu girl, at Patna. We hope it will be widely distributed. (Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square. 2d.)

THE STORY OF A PICTURE.

BY GAWIN KIRKHAM.

As many of your readers are already to some extent acquainted with the story of the picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way," it will interest them to know that I have now expounded it in public one thousand times. The thousandth exposition was given in this city on Jan. 22. The large Concert Hall of the Lieder Hall was secured, into which more than a thousand people crowded, while hundreds more were turned away. Three German hymns were impressively sung, led by four brass instruments on the platform.

After prayer, Mr. ADOLF REIHLEN told how his mother, Mrs. Charlotte Reihlen, whose death occurred on that day twenty-two years ago, designed the picture during the last year of her life, and how it was painted by Mr. Conrad Schacher, who also died soon after. Then it was lithographed in this city, and some six or seven thousand sold. In the year of its publication it was taken to Holland by Pastor Israel, and a Dutch edition issued by Mr. H. de Hoogh, of Amsterdam; and fifteen thousand of the Dutch edition sold. Then he related the story of my finding it in Amsterdam early in 1868, and how I had explained it in England from John o'Groat's to Land's End, and had in twenty years done this 999 times, and that more than sixty thousand copies had been sold in England since it was published by Morgan & Scott little more than six years ago; and had thus been carried all over the world, and had been made a blessing to hundreds of souls.

I then briefly explained the picture, my lecturing copy being suspended on the platform, and had for my translator Rev. Adolphus Mann, for a long time a missionary on the West Coast of Africa for the Church Missionary Society. My friend, Mr. Charles L. Young, of Mildmay Park, who has accompanied me thousands of miles in England to point out the objects on the picture, most kindly came with me 600 miles to render the same service here. Translation is slow work, but the audience was patient and well conducted, and I sincerely trust that the bringing of the picture back to the place of its birth in this singular way may be the means, by the Spirit of God, of the new birth of some dead souls.

Not only was the family of the honoured lady who designed the picture represented at the meeting, but also that of the artist who painted it. His venerable mother, Mrs. Schacher, over eighty years of age, and at least one of his children were there. The mother wept tears of joy to know how God had used the work of her son. Pastor Israel, too, was there, still vigorous and warm-hearted. Among the general public was Mr. Crane, the American Consul.

In the providence of God this meeting was arranged to be taken on my way to Egypt and Palestine. In a few days I embark at Trieste for Alexandria.

Stuttgart, Wurtemburg, January.

REV. W. ROBY FLETCHER, who has been for many years a prominent figure in Australia as pastor of Stow Memorial Church, Adelaide, is about to visit England. He proposes to spend a short time in Egypt, spend Easter in Jerusalem, and reach London in time for the May Meetings, returning to Australia vid India. He purposes leaving one of his sons at Mansfield College, and hopes to arrange the details with the London Missionary Society for some more direct missionary work in Southern India on the part of Australia.

THE LATE GENERAL GORDON.—A short article in The Contemporary Review of February throws an interesting light on the character and peculiarities of the hero of Khartoum. In 1882, being commissioned to proceed from Mauritius to the Cape, he sailed in a trading schooner as the speediest means of reaching his destination. A diary was kept by the captain's wife, and extracts are given in the article. In conversation, General Gordon expressed his ardent belief that the Seychelles Islands, to the north-east of Madagascar, are the site of the Garden of Eden. One reason given was that a tree grows there to be found nowhere else, and this, he was confident, was the tree on which grew the forbidden fruit. While on the voyage he devoted a large part of the Sunday forenoons to a close and careful study of the Bible. He wrote out extensive notes and comments on the Scripture that had engaged his attention.

Letter to the Editor.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

SIR,—The supplement to your last issue will be understood by the public to carry with it your concurrence in the picture it draws, by statements and suggested inferences, of the history and work of the British and Foreign Bible Society. You have thus, innocently no doubt, given your apparent sanction to grave charges resting upon misquotations and misstatements, which you had not had the opportunity for verifying before doing so. In these circumstances you will, I hope, be ready to give the Society an opportunity of showing how unfounded those charges are, with the same publicity you have granted to the misrepresentations. The short interval between the circulation of one of your numbers, and the date at which you go to press with the next one, prevents our doing more on this occasion than asking your readers to suspend their judgment on what has been asserted of this Society, till they have its reply.—Your obedient servant,

JOHN SHARP, Secretary.

"APOSTOLIC WARFARE,"

BEING THE ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1889 OF THE SALVATION ARMY.

DEAR SIR,—If "Apostolic Warfare" were simply an account of the Salvation Army's proceedings during the past year, or a record of the prosperity which has thus far accompanied their efforts, I, for one, would not have suffered a line of criticism to have escaped my pen. It is worse than useless in these days of confusion to stand in the way of any agency which, however unadvisedly, shapes in the right direction. In the great harvest field of the world, there is abundant call and abundant room for all workers, if workers indeed, to serve as unto Him, and the time and energy spent in criticising each others' methods might, as a rule, be more wisely employed. It is, therefore, not without a reason I venture to animadvert somewhat on the elaborate apology which the Salvation Army authorities have issued as a Report for 1889, under the name of "Apostolic Warfare."

While rejoiced to believe that the Salvation Army is an important agency, under God, in saving souls, and has the promise apparently of becoming more so, it does pain me, and doubtless many more besides, to note the extremely accusative spirit in which that whole report has been compiled. Why should Christians or Christian ministers be despised and ruled out as nought, simply because they are outside of a religious military organisation which is but of yesterday?

As an evangelical minister, I read with anger—I hope righteous anger—the insulting question: "Where are the men who dare to say that the Bible, and the whole Bible, is really true; that the God who hates iniquity and pardons and renews the guilty soul really lives?" Bad as things are in the churches, no Salvation Army officer has a right to make us all out infidels. There is a noble army of ministers yet who do believe in the Divine inspiration of the Bible, and who are just as certain that the sin-pardoning God lives as is General Booth himself or any of his subalterns. To put such a question is an extraordinary breach, I will not say of charity, but of ordinary candour. Will anyone deny that C. H. Spurgeon believes in the whole Bible as from God, or H. C. G. Moule, or Mark Guy Pearse, or George Holland, or Andrew Bonar, or Principal Cairns, or scores whose names I could as easily supply?

On what ground, then, do the Salvation Army authorities justify their sweeping accusatory generalisations? Is it necessary to their success to black-ball others who, I venture to think, are quite as devoted as themselves to the cause of God and quite as successful in winning souls to Christ? Is there no way of compiling a report for the year without contemning other followers of the Lamb? I have only given one sample of this accusative spirit from the report, but I could as easily supply a dozen as one. No doubt such means of building up the Salvation Army system must be considered helpful, or they would not be adopted; but I cannot believe that the Master Himself can commend them.

Leaving that unsavoury feature of the report, I do not think our Salvation Army friends are to be congratulated on their attempt to arrogate to themselves Apostolic authority. There has been far too much of this in the history of Christendom already, and not much good is to be looked for from ex parte pleading in this direction. This report, however, is an attempt so to construe Scripture that the Salvation Army shall possess a manifold Apostolical imprimatur. Regard for your space prevents me from entering into any detailed examination of this far-fetched claim. Let me ask one thing. On what Scriptural foundation does the absolutism of General Booth depend? What Apostle can be instanced as occupying such a place or fulfilling such a function as he does? The Papists argue in behalf of the primacy of Peter, but we know that Paul did not receive his marching orders from him, nor did Barnabas, nor, indeed, any of the others. He was the Apostle to the circumcision, as Paul was to the Gentiles. But where were the field-marshal's vested rights in any Apostolic case? We submit that there is no Apostolic ground for the position General Booth assumes. None of the Apostles held such a place, nor did any one of them exercise such an authority.

The like remark applies to the militarism of the whole institution. There is nothing in Apostolic action to justify the formation of Christians into corps, officered and drilled on the model of military life. It is a conceit inborn of individual caprice, and stands in marked contrast with the Apostolic action in the formation of churches, and in the appointment of bishops and deacons, and of ordinances which the Salvation Army distinctly disallows.

Besides, militarism is an express invasion of Christ's own prerogative. Militarism is despotic, and what room is there for this in any Christian system of things when Christ alone is Despot? The Protestant objection to the Papacy is largely founded on its despotism. But the same objection applies to the head of the Salvation Army. The power vested in General Booth's hands is an invasion of Christ's prerogative.

Nor are matters made better, but worse, by the line of defence pursued in the report under consideration. If the despotism of General Booth be Apostolic, the evidence of it should be adduced from Scripture, and not from Divine action in providence. It is the latter method, however, which the compiler of this report adopts. His words are:—"That this universal subjection to one will and one rule should be regarded as a product of human energy or scheming is to us more astonishing than the thing itself. How could an unknown stranger, without the prestige of any traditional influence, acquire unequalled authority over men and women living thousands of miles out of his sight, in spite of the entire weight of every influence of modern society thrown into the opposite scale, unless by the power of an Almighty Spirit at work everywhere?"

Every true-hearted Christian must feel a kind of horror in the presence of such argumentation as this. The Almighty Spirit of God is assumed to have created General Booth's position of despotic sway, because there are so many thousands of people all over the world ready to do his bidding. The argument is worse than none at all. The question is not, "What do Salvationists concede to General Booth?" but, "What does God's Word admit or warrant?" That Salvationists everywhere are subject to one man's will is no proof of the Holy Spirit's mind. The only glass wherein to see that mind is the inspired Word. That the Holy Spirit in that Word proposes any other man as universal despot save the Man Christ Jesus is utterly fallacious.

Let it be noted that the claim to absolute authority implies the claim to infallibility. In regard to morals and religion, no man can rightly claim implicit obedience from others, unless his orders come infallibly from God. The Pope affirmed this principle when, in 1870, he claimed infallibility. This is a necessary corollary of the assumption of command over the consciences and actions of others. General Booth does not claim infallibility, and in so far admits his disqualification for absolute authority. Spiritual domination is the essence of Popery.

There is not space at my command to cope with the special pleading of this report in detail. Your readers must judge how far, if at all, Salvation Army methods are supported by the Acts of the Apostles. Their trading operations strike one as at a great remove from the Apostolic counsel: "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." We read the Acts of the Apostles in vain for any account of the formation of Army corps, or of assaults on enemy's quarters with bands of music and banners flying. In Apostolic tactics there was no attempt at display; no drilling of troops; no placarding of banners; no din of tambourines. The Apostles were preachers and teachers—witnesses for Christ—whose methods were, like their Master's, plain and direct, savouring neither of militarism nor sensation. I believe in universal subjection to one will, but I believe the Holy Ghost means that one will to be the will of Christ.—Yours faithfully, JAS. DOUGLAS, Pastor.

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE.—Rev. Dr. Bullinger is delivering a course of lectures on this subject, at the Clapham Conference Hall. The first, devoted to the language of Scripture, with illustrations of the figure "Ellipsis," was timed for Thursday this week; the remainder of the course will be given on successive Thursday afternoons, at four o'clock. The syllabus shows that much important information will be presented in an admirably systematic manner.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY CONFERENCE. — The Indépendance Belge says that the new proposal to be made to the Anti-Slavery Conference by the British delegates, as an alternative measure for their original proposition relative to the right of searching ships, will consist in a strict surveillance to be exercised by each of the Powers in order to prevent the importation of arms intended for slave hunters. A rather heavy import duty is to be levied on alcoholic liquors. The First Committee of the Anti-Slavery Conference has discussed the penalties to be provided for in the law applicable to the importation of arms. The proposals formulated on this subject will be submitted for the approval of the various Governments.

CASTLE GARDEN, at the southern extremity of the city of New York, is to be disused as the landing-place for emigrants, and in future the establishment for that purpose will be on Governor's Island, which is the property of the Federal Government. In this connection it may be mentioned that for many years a very unobtrusive system of diffusing the Gospel had been carried out at Castle Garden. Among the emigrants who had just been landed, a pleasant-faced elderly gentleman walked slowly about. Having ascertained the mother tongue of a new arrival, he would stop and ask the person addressed, in a cheerful friendly way, to take as a souvenir a copy of a book. The gift was generally gratefully received and stowed away, more for the sake of the kindly speech than anything else. It was found to be one of the Gospels, or perhaps the whole of the New Testament, in the native tongue of the emigrant. Not a few of the good results are known; but the fulness of this harvest can only be known hereafter. No doubt this presentation system will be continued on Governor's Island.

The Book World.

Rome's Rottenness Exposed.

IF there be any belated Protestant in the present day who thinks that the Papal Apostasy is a branch of the true Church of Christ, and that it is capable of being used by God as an instrument for the elevation of mankind, we would advise him to read the Nun of Kenmare's new book, LIFE INSIDE THE CHURCH OF ROME. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Miss Cusack, like many others, was beguiled for a season, but painful experience opened her eyes to the true nature of this cleverly devised, but corrupt and tyrannical organisation. Our only wonder is that she should have been so long in shaking off the shackles that bound her; but, of course, nobody likes to confess that they have been deceived and imposed upon. It is clear from her recital that the continued existence of Popery as a religious (or, rather irreligious) system, rests on the dense ignorance of its votaries. We are not surprised that the priesthood withhold their Scriptures from their deluded flocks. Even a slight knowledge of revealed truth would be fatal to the pretensions of the Papacy. The author tells us that the best educated of Roman Catholics are entirely ignorant of the Bible. The great duty of the hour is to enlighten these unhappy people as to the true nature of the system that enslaves them. Under the circumstances, that is no easy task, but we are hopeful that it is being gradually accomplished; and Miss Cusack's book would go far to bring it about if the mass of Romanists could have the opportunity of reading it. If even her preface could be printed as a tract and scattered abroad in Popish countries, it would surely inflict a deadly blow on this foul edifice.

The author's exposure of the inherent and actual rottenness of the Papal hierarchy and the priesthood, is truly damning in its completeness. The picture she draws from observation and experience is without a redeeming feature. She impeaches the enforced celibacy of priests as the inevitable mother of all sorts of abominations. She proves her case up to the hilt from indisputable facts, ancient and modern. The chapter on the "Historical Frauds of the Roman Catholic Church" shows it to be, what Mr. Froude lately predicated of the Pope—"the Father of lies." The hollowness and deceits and immoralities of convent life are emphatically established. The persecuting and murderous intolerance, the confessional infamies, the grasping greed, and the many other iniquities of this unchristian, devilish system are faithfully laid bare. Surely the period of Divine forbearance with such a world-wide curse must be fast expiring. May He hasten the day when the nations shall awake from this hideous nightmare, and shall step out into the light and freedom of the pure and righteous faith of his Son, Jesus Christ.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OLD MARGARET: OR, A SAINT AT LAST, by Dr. Elder Cumming, is a true story of the triumphs of God's redeeming love and refining grace. Margaret in her earlier life had sunk into a pretty deep pit, but the Lord's long right arm lifted her up and set her on high among the very princesses of his kingdom. The little book should encourage workers to seek the salvation and sanctification of those who appear to be the worst and most unlikely, from a human standpoint. (6d. paper, 1s. cloth. Morgan & Scott.)

OUR JENNIE, by Isabel Maude-Hamill, is a very good and helpful story, notwithstanding one or two of the remarkable coincidences that are only to be found in the pages of fiction. It describes the influence for good exercised by a well-nurtured country girl who took service in London; and generally illustrates the value of Christian work among that class. The dialogue is natural, and the tale is marked by a genuine human interest. (S. W. Partridge & Co.)

Rev. W. Haslam has gathered into a neat volume, entitled, LEAVES FROM MY NOTEBOOK, some forty striking incidents out of the many that have come to his knowledge in the course of an earnest and thoroughgoing evangelistic career. Most of the narratives have appeared in our columns, so that it is scarcely needful for us to descant upon their stimulating character and their value as illustrative expositions of the Gospel of God's grace. The "Leaves" contain about an equal number of recitals of anxious sinners converted and believers set free for fuller life and service. (Morgan & Scott.)

WRINKLES AND NOTIONS FOR EVERY HOUSEHOLD. By Mrs. de Salis. 2s. 6d. Longmans. Though not so voluminous as some domestic manuals, this is a very useful book. The hints and recipes are such as will be certain to prove of service in house-keeping.

FOOD IN MOTHERHOOD: OR, HOW TO MAINTAIN HEALTH. By Ephraim Cutter, M.D. 1s. David Stott. Many a mother will be the better for reading this little book. The pages are filled with advice which generally commends itself as sound, while it is always expressed with admirable clearness.

THE CONVERTED CATHOLIC, edited by Rev. James A. O'Connor, formerly a Romish priest, is a monthly of special value in Gospel testimony among Papists. Volume vi., containing the numbers for last year, is like its predecessors in boldness of attack upon the corruptions of Romanism, and in opposing the religious and political designs of the Pope and the power embodied in his name. Father O'Connor maintains a Christian spirit in his controversial pages; so his magazine is deserving of cordial recommendation. (1 dollar 50 cents. J. A. O'Connor, 72, Bible House, New York.)

FAITH CURES: THEIR HISTORY AND MYSTERY. By Aurelius J. L. Gliddon. 2s. 6d. "Christian Commonwealth" Publishing Co. The author has brought together in a handy form much curious and interesting matter on a subject which has for some time been attracting wide attention. Ample evidence is afforded of mysterious cases of healing associated with heathen religions, as well as of faith cures in ancient and modern times. After stating the facts, Mr. Gliddon examines the evidence and arguments, always evincing a charitable disposition and good judgment. He believes in the prayer of faith; at the same time he is not for neglecting the employment of medicinal remedies. In an appendix particulars are given of some recent cases of faith healing.

HAZELL'S ANNUAL FOR 1890. Edited by E. D. Price. 3s. 6d. Hazell, Watson, & Viney. This is the fifth year of issue of this "Cyclopædic Record of Men and Topics of the Day." The book contains over 3500 concise and explanatory articles on topics of political, social, biographical, and general interest such as are constantly cropping up in daily conversation, and being referred to in the newspapers. No other annual publication so definitely answers the many questions which thinking people are asking day by day as to institutions and events, men and measures. Over 700 closely printed pages make a bulky volume, such as few would forego, when once acquainted with its great practical utility. There is a remarkably full list of London charities, and many of the leading persons and organisations in religious life are described in an eminently satisfactory manner.

IS LIFE WORTH LIVING? An Eightfold Answer. By John Clifford, D.D. 2s. 6d. Marlborough & Co. This is the sixth edition, enlarged, of a volume of sermons in answer to a question which has often been asked by cynical philosophers and disappointed sceptics. Preached some years ago, the discourses are remarkably eloquent, and weighted with nothing of the nature of pessimism. Dr. Clifford shows that, estranged from God, man's life cannot but be poor; the life that is most worth living is that of the true disciple of Christ. Characterised by freshness of thought and vigour of expression, the book is an able reply to many of the questions of present-day unbelievers. Dr. Clifford is peculiarly experimental in showing that "Christ not only bears our sin away, but bears into us all the forces of a new and strong, pure and glad life here and hereafter."

THE EXTINCTION OF EVIL. By Rev. Dr. Pétavel. Translated from the French by C. H. Oliphant. 75 cents. Boston (U.S.A.). Charles H. Woodman. Three essays, from the pen of one who is widely known as a philosopher and a theologian. With judicial gravity and Christian reverence, he discusses themes of the highest interest. Broadly speaking his point of view is that which is commonly defined as Conditional Immortality. Many who cannot agree with him on that issue will, nevertheless, regard the essay on "Universal Salvation" as a masterly refutation of a highly pernicious doctrine. Seeing that the Universalists of America have determined, as a religious denomination, to undertake foreign mission work, it is important that the delusiveness of this theory should be effectually exposed from every point of view. In this volume Universalism is shown, by ample facts and conclusive arguments, to be a doctrine at once irrational, unscriptural, and morally dangerous.

A HANDBOOK OF SCIENTIFIC AND LITERARY BIBLE DIFFICULTIES. Edited by Rev. R. Tuck. Issued in monthly parts, 6d. each. Elliot Stock. Two instalments of this work have already been published. The object is not so much to show how apparent discrepancies may be harmonised, as to present facts and suggestions for the solution of perplexing questions which modern criticism has raised. The pages contain much useful matter, well brought together, but they require to be read with great caution, for facts and opinions are not always discriminated. In the introductory note, Mr. Tuck says: "We may regard Moses as the Divinely guided compiler of the early history from legendary materials which had been preserved in the memory as folk-lore." We are as indisposed to acquiesce in this position as Mr. Tuck is certainly unable to vindicate it. The light which Moses gave forth to the world came from God. How can he have written from legendary materials of man's fall, and of God's promised salvation? It was because the Jews of old did not from their hearts believe Moses, that they rejected the Saviour (John v. 46). Can we believe Christ, while rejecting Moses?

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

Echoes of Service (1d. J. E. Hawkins) records labour for the Lord in many lands. Half of this issue is devoted to letters from Central Africa, including intensely interesting communications from Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Arnot. Friends of missions should not overlook this unpretending little visitor.

Three capital penny monthlies are issued from 7, Paternoster-square. The February issue of Home Words contains a portrait and sketch of Canon Wynne, of Dublin. Rev. George Everard writes on "Our Church's Saints' Days."—In The Day of Days, Rev. Charles Bullock has an article on the late Dr. Horatius Bonar.—The interest of Hand and Heart is well sustained by articles on H. M. Stanley and "Faraday at Work."

The Fireside, edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, always exhibits attractive features. This issue contains a portrait of the late Robert Browning, with biographical sketch, and extracts from his works. W. Davenport Adams writes on Ida Pfeiffer; and Canon Bell contributes an article on Thomas Gray, the author of the famous "Elegy." There is also a portrait and sketch of the late Bishop Lightfoot. (6d. "Home Words" Office.)

Lippincott's Monthly Magazine (1s. Ward, Lock & Co.) affords varied reading, largely of an entertaining order. Julian Hawthorne is editing, in instalments, Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Elixir of Life." Francis Galton, F.R.S., writes on "Why do we Measure Mankind?" "The Newspaper and the Individual," by A. E. Watrous, is a plea for Press censorship. The opening chapters of "A Dead Man's Diary" are worth reading. There is much that is attractive in these pages, in which light and shade are very happily combined.

Scribner's Magazine for February contains another article in the African series, by Herbert Ward, for five years an officer in the Congo Free State. Mr. Ward's "Life among the Congo Savages" is a comprehensive and picturesque description of that vast country opened up by Stanley and his followers, from the mouth of the Congo to Stanley Falls, in the very heart of Africa—a distance of fifteen hundred miles. The author's residence in that country has enabled him to present much new and strange material about the cruel and barbarous tribes. The illustrations are of unusual richness and value, being made directly from the author's own photographs and drawings, and under his personal direction. The article also contains the most complete map of Central Africa ever published, drawn from advance sheets of the "Scribner-Black Atlas of the World."

NORMANDY AND BRITTANY, AND THREE WEEKS IN A CHÂTEAU. By S. M. Holworthy. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A racy little book, sure to interest visitors to northern France.

Mr. Spurgeon's thirty-fifth volume of sermons is issued by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster, and from this it appears that he has put into print no fewer than 2100 of these discourses. The weekly sermon has been published continually since 1855. The sermons not only circulate wherever English is spoken, but some of them are translated into nearly every tongue.

Mr. A. Holness, 14, Paternoster-row, has published a series of choice booklets, each containing precious hymns helpful to believers. They are attractively got up, and being inscribed "With Best Wishes," are suitable for birthday or other remembrancers. "Leaves of Healing," "Meliora; or, the Servant's Portion," and "Retrospection," are by Mrs. Anna Shipton; "Communion," "Lo, I am with thee," "Complete in Him," and "He careth for you," by another author. (4d. each.)

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 9.—2 Chron. XXII.

AHAZIAH, also called Azariah (6) and Jehoahaz (xxi. 17), was the youngest and only surviving son of Jehoram (1). He began to reign when he was twenty-two years old (2 Kings viii. 26). The statement that he was forty-two (2) is either owing to an error of the transcriber, or refers to the age of his mother, Athaliah.

The bitter fruit of Jehoshaphat's unholy alliance with the house of Ahab still appears (3). What hope was there that Ahaziah would do right when he had such an evil counsellor in his own mother? She and her relatives were his counsellors to all wickedness (4). What a curse even a good man can bequeath to his posterity by a single step taken to secure a present advantage.

Yet the responsibility for Ahaziah's wickedness must not be laid upon his counsellors. "He walked after their counsel" (6). The guilt of prompting to evil lay with them; but the guilt of yielding to their promptings was his. There is no sin in being enticed by sinners, unless we consent (Prov. i. 10).

History repeats itself. Like Jehoshaphat (xviii. 1-3), Ahaziah joined with the house of Ahab against Ramoth-Gilead (5). He showed sympathy with the king of Israel by visiting him at Jezreel during his sickness (6). Associated with him when Jehu, by God's appointment, was cutting off the house of Ahab (7, 8), he shared in the judgment which fell upon that wicked house (9). He had lived a dishonourable life, so that no one thought of paying him respect after his death. Decent burial was granted to him, not for his own sake, but only because he was the grandson of Jehoshaphat (9). His brief reign of only one year solemnly warns young men of the folly and danger of choosing evil associations, bids them be strong to resist the counsels of wicked men, and shows that destruction surely follows sin (Ps. xxxiv. 21; Prov. i. 32).

The wickedness and cruelty of Athaliah appear in her destruction of the royal seed (10). She was prompted to it partly by fear of the sword of Jehu (7), and partly by ambition to retain the crown for her own family. What will not a wicked woman do to gratify an evil ambition! God defeated her purpose through the wife of Jehoiada the priest, who secured the safety of Joash (11).

MONDAY, FEB. 10.—2 Chron. XXIII.

For the six years of Athaliah's reign, Joash remained hidden (xxii. 12); but in the seventh year, Jehoiada, with other officers (1), commenced a movement in favour of Joash.

(1) Their purpose was to set the rightful king upon the throne in place of the cruel usurper. The promise of God made sure the accomplishment of their purpose (3). The counsel of the Lord shall stand. Have we not a similar purpose before us now? The prince of this world still reigns; but God's promise ensures the triumph of Him who is our King (Ps. lxxii.).

(2) Their methods.—They acted with great prudence, energy, and courage. God's promise concerning the house of David (2 Sam. vii. 12, &c.) did not make them neglectful of the use of means. By human instrumentality God still accomplishes his purposes. They began by entering into solemn covenant with the king (3). Let us do the same. If Jesus is not King to us, we cannot do anything in making Him King to others.

Were not the methods wisely chosen? Every man had his own work, and did it (8); care was taken on the one hand to allow the enemy no advantage, and, on the other, not to offend God by profaning his house (6). God's work must be done in the spirit of obedience to his Word. The house of the Lord furnished all the weapons (9). Do we not fail by seeking to use other weapons? Carnal weapons are of no value for spiritual work (2 Cor. x. 4, 5). And was it not faith that proclaimed Joash king, while the usurper yet reigned (11)? Faith is needed for our fearless testimony to Jesus.

(3) Their success.—Note how great the changes when the rightful king reigns. They have their antitype in the heart of every believer when the authority of Jesus is fully recognised. The joy of the people (12, 13).—The life is filled with praise when Jesus reigns. The usurper destroyed (13-15).—No one seconded her cry of "treason." She was driven out of the house of the Lord and slain. So the prince of darkness flees before the presence of the true king. The worship of God restored (16-20).—The people took once more their position as the covenant people of God (16); Baal was destroyed with his house and his priest, and the service of the house of the Lord was set in order (18-20). Where Jesus is admitted to be King, every idol is cast out, and the whole life becomes "holy unto the Lord."

What a blessing to the nation was the death of Athaliah (21). Is it not sad to live such a life that the only blessing we can confer upon our contemporaries is to die?

TUESDAY, FEB. 11.—2 Chron. XXIV.

In the early life of Joash, we see the advantage of young people being under the direction of good and wise men. During the life of Jehoiada Joash did right (2). It had been well for Joash if he had treasured in his heart Jehoiada's counsel and instruction, and had been strong enough to act upon it in after years. Note:—

(1) His zeal for repairing the temple (4-14).—The reign of Athaliah had left the house of God in a terrible condition (7). In the work of repairing it, Joash appeared more zealous than Jehoiada (6). One plan having failed to secure the funds required (5), a new method was adopted (8). This is probably the first collection box of which we read. The same method does not always produce the same satisfactory result (10, 11). The free-will offerings of the people were not only sufficient for repairing the house, but for providing numerous vessels for the service of the temple (13, 14). Strange that Joash should show such zeal for this excellent work, and yet should afterwards be so unfaithful. Many whose hearts are not right with God can be zealous for the mere externals of religion.

(2) His apostasy and ruin (15-27).—This began with the death of Jehoiada (15, 16). Joash lost his opportunity. The good priest had been preserved to a great age, surely in order that Joash might be established in righteousness. But after the death of Jehoiada his wholesome counsels were soon forgotten, and the counsels of his flattering princes were heeded (17). Their request was probably that they might not be subjected to the inconvenience of constantly going up to Jerusalem to worship. It was "only" a little thing; but it meant ruin to Joash, and distress to his kingdom. Terrible disasters have often very small beginnings. See what gross sins followed. God's warning message was unheeded (19); Zechariah, who had probably had a share in anointing Joash king (xxiii. 11), was stoned, at the king's command, in the court of the temple (20-22). The ingratitude and the impiety of this deed made it memorable (Matt. xxiii. 35). Sin brought disaster, first, upon the kingdom. "A great host" were defeated before a "small company" of Syrians (23, 24). Disastrous failure awaits the people who forsake God. Further disaster fell upon himself (25, 26). Great diseases tormented his body; by conspiracy among his servants he was slain; and, after his death, he was not even allowed a place among the kings of Judah. Such was the end to which his weak yielding to the flattering princes led him.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 12.—2 Chron. XXV.

Amaziah began well. The statement "he did right" (2) refers to the beginning of his reign. But "his heart was not perfect," hence the sad failures that followed (Mark iv. 5-6). See how retribution falls upon the murderers of Joash (3, 4). "Vengeance is mine" (Rom. xii. 19).

In preparing for an expedition against the Edomites (11), Amaziah committed the serious mistake of hiring help from the people of Israel (6). The experience of Jehoshaphat (xix. 1, 2), and of Ahaziah (xxii. 5-10), ought to have warned him of the danger of any such confederacy with Israel. But the hire of the men was paid (6-9), what must he do? Send the men home at the prophet's demand (7, 8), lose his hundred talents, and risk the consequences (13)? Or, rejecting the prophet's counsel, take them with him, and risk the failure of his expedition? His folly has brought him into a strait. Difficulty and loss are before him whichever course he take. But God's direction is clear. Let him sacrifice his talents and trust God. Duty often involves present sacrifice; but none who are prepared to make it at God's command will be the losers in the end. His victory over the Edomites (11, 12) proved the truth of the prophet's message.

The fall of Amaziah commenced with his idolatry (14). This was as foolish as it was wicked. Had not his own victory over the Edomites proved that their gods were powerless to defend them? Why, then, should Amaziah worship them? What a senseless thing sin is! Sin and folly mean almost the same thing.

His refusal to hear God's warning message (15, 16) aggravated his guilt. When a man gets too proud to hear God's word of reproof his fall is not far off.

The same foolish pride led him to challenge Jehoahaz, the king of Israel (17), whose warning reply Amaziah refused to hear (18-20). He needed chastisement for his idolatry, and God makes use of Jehoahaz to inflict it. The defeat of his army (22), the destruction of part of the wall of Jerusalem (23), and the loss of the temple treasures (24), all resulted from his folly. Such disasters led to the formation of a conspiracy which secured his death (27, 28).

THURSDAY, FEB. 13.—2 Chron. XXVI.

The reign of Uzziah is marked with the same extremes. He began well, but pride led him into sin.

(1) His prosperity (1-15).—This was connected with his piety (5). All his life long he remained true to the worship of God. Even up to his death he does not seem to have turned aside to idols. Hence God prospered him (6). True prosperity is inseparable from true religion. Proofs of his prosperity are found in his successful wars (6, 7); his widespread fame (8); his buildings and husbandry (9, 10); and his armies and engines of war (11-15). In all these things he prospered, "for he was marvellously helped." How many there are who bear the same glad record concerning themselves. The best preventive of pride is to recognise all blessing as coming from the marvellous help of God.

(2) His sin and death (16-23).—Pride began his fall (16). "His heart was lifted up to his destruction." It is more difficult to abound than to suffer need. Prosperity more often leads to failure than adversity. His sin was in attempting to invade the priest's office (16). This was a direct disobedience to the Divine command (Exod. xxx. 7; 1 Chron. xxiii. 13). It was a transgression, not against the priests, but "against the Lord" (16). The warning of the faithful priests (17, 18) aggravated his guilt. But this was met with rage (19). What folly to think that one who was filled with wrath against God's faithful messengers could offer acceptable service to Him! To obey is better than such sacrifice. His punishment is speedy and effectual (19-21). As a leper, he hasted out of the temple. God had settled the controversy between him and the priests. He lost even the religious privileges he formerly enjoyed, as the result of his attempt to invade an office to which he had no right. Cut off from the house of the Lord (21), he continued a leper until the day of his death. Such a summary judgment was calculated to lead him to true repentance, and to impress the people with deep veneration for the services of God's house.

FRIDAY, FEB. 14.—2 Chron. XXVII.

A very few verses suffice to describe the reign of Jotham. The brevity of the record is to his honour. There was no disastrous failure to lengthen out the narrative. Note: (1) His character (2-7).—He copied his father's example so far as it was good, but avoided his sad mistake (2). His constancy resulted from the fact that "he prepared his ways before the Lord" (7). He sought to know the will of God, and was cautious and constant in fulfilling it. This is the more to his credit because the people still "did corruptly" (2). He had to go against the stream. He dared do right when the popular example made it easier to do wrong.

(2) His prosperity.—He "became mighty" (7). Right is true might. In buildings (3, 4); in wars (5); and in the tribute paid to him by the Ammonites (5), his might appeared.

SATURDAY, FEB. 15.—2 Chron. XXVIII.

Ahaz the son of Jotham inherited none of his father's goodness. His extreme wickedness made him notorious. "This is that king Ahaz" (22). Sad that the good work done by Jotham should be entirely destroyed by his wicked and foolish son.

His commencement was bad (1-4).—Baal (1), and the abominations of the Canaanites (2), took the place of the worship of God. Even the inhuman practice of burning his children to Moloch (3), which God had so strongly denounced (Lev. xviii. 21, xx. 25), appears to have been first introduced by him. Such a commencement did not promise well either for him or his kingdom.

His chastisement soon followed (5, 15).—The instruments used for his punishment were the King of Syria (5), and Pekah, the king of Israel (6). His punishment was severe. The King of Israel slew 120,000 in one day (6); and, besides the great multitude taken in captivity to Damascus (5), 200,000, including women, boys, and girls, were taken to Samaria (8). Yet see how God keeps his hand upon those through whom He chastises his people (9-11). It is to the honour of the leaders of Israel (12) that they heeded the message of the prophet, and conducted their captives back again to Jericho (13-15).

His distress increased (16-21).—The Edomites (17) and the Philistines (18) smote Judah, and weakened the kingdom. They were the instruments; but it was "the Lord that brought Judah low" (19). The King of Assyria, to whom he appealed (16), and for whom he pillaged the house of God (21), secured him some temporary relief (2 Kings xvi. 7-9), but in the end only weakened and distressed him the more (20). None can help the man who has cast off the help of God. If God be against us, who can be for us?

He was unblest by chastisement (22-27).—The more he was distressed, the more he trespassed (Isa. i. 5, 6). With a blind infatuation he went farther away from the God in whom alone he could find help, and sacrificed to the gods of Damascus. More than this, he offered wanton insult to the house of God (24), and seemed ready to provoke God to do his worst (25). It is a marvel that such a king was tolerated for so long a time. During his reign idolatry had a fair chance of proving what it could do for the nation.

Sunday Afternoon, February 16.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN.—Luke iii. 1-22.

GOLDEN TEXT: MATT. iii. 2.

VERSES 1-6.—"The fifteenth year" of Tiberius counts back, not to the death of Augustus, but to two years earlier, during which Tiberius shared his father's throne. The ministry of John thus commenced about 26 or 27 of our era. Pilate became procurator of Judea a little before John's ministry commenced, and occupied that position for ten years. Herod Antipas was tetrarch of Galilee for forty-two years. Our Lord's ministry was accomplished during his reign. The tetrarchy of Philip lasted for thirty-seven years. The district of Iturea lay to the south-east of the Libanus. Lysanias is not mentioned in profane history, but is supposed to have been a descendant of that Lysanias who was assassinated by Antony, 36 B.C. Abilene was situated to the north-west of Damascus. Two high priests are mentioned. Annas, though deposed some years before, continued to exercise authority with his son-in-law, Caiaphas, who filled the office for about nineteen years. Politically and ecclesiastically the nation was in a sadly divided condition. The time for the appearance of the Deliverer has come. "Word of God came to John" (2).—How, we cannot say. He did not begin to preach until God gave him his message, and impelled him to deliver it (Jer. xxiii. 21, 22). "Baptism of repentance," &c. (3).—The people had a false conception of what salvation meant; John's first work was to correct their mistake (i. 77). "Remission of sins," not deliverance from the Roman yoke, was their great need. This blessing was symbolised by the ordinance of Baptism. Connect the two words Baptism and Repentance; the first is nothing without the other. It was a humbling, yet an encouraging rite. To submit to it was a confession of sin; but its institution was God's declaration of pardon. The outward sign is nothing where true repentance is wanting. Don't mistake what repentance is. It is not mere feeling, however deep; nor is it reformation. It is change of mind, leading the soul from sin to God. The words (4-6), quoted from Isa. xl. 3-5, well describe the work of John. His very remarkable humility (John iii. 29, 30) appears in his being called "a voice." His own personality seems lost in his message. He came to "prepare the way," as a herald. "The image is taken from an Oriental custom, according to which the visit of a sovereign was preceded by the arrival of a courier, who called on all the people to make ready the road by which the monarch was to enter."—Godet. Is not the work of the Baptist and of the Messiah figuratively described in ver. 5? Are not the proud humbled, the lowly exalted, through the Gospel?

Verses 7-20.—John was evidently very popular. He did not go to the cities—the people from the cities flocked to him. When he described some as "generation of serpents," he referred to the Pharisees and Sadducees (Matt. iii. 7), who came expecting his baptism. It was a severe term, but it faithfully represented their craft and wickedness, and hinted at a parentage which Jesus afterwards announced (John viii. 37-44). That passage teaches us also that they were boasting of themselves as "children of Abraham." Even they cannot receive John's baptism except their repentance be proved sincere. The judgment which the Messiah would bring was not first of all for their political oppressors, but for themselves. The axe lying at the root of the trees was a merciful warning of the coming judgment. Would they heed it? Luke vii. 30 and Matt. xxi. 25 give the answer. "What shall we do?"—The question was asked by the people (10), publicans (12), and soldiers (14). Not by the proud Pharisees. Note the answer in each case (11, 13, 14). The evidence of repentance is to be found in the daily duties of life. Unselfishness, benevolence, integrity, considerateness—these are still necessary fruits of true repentance. But the testimony of John did not stop there; if it had done so, it would have been a poor Gospel. He proceeded to answer the heart-questionings (15) of the people, by announcing the coming Messiah (16, 17). Greater than John. He should also baptize with a better baptism. "If the pardon granted in the baptism of water was not followed by the baptism of the Spirit, sin would soon regain the upper hand, and the pardon would be speedily annulled."—Godet. The "fire" (16) with which Jesus baptizes, and which expresses the Spirit's action in judging and destroying what is sinful, is opposed to the "fire unquenchable" with which the chaff is burned up (17). Every man must be either baptized with the fire of holiness, or consumed by the fire of wrath. Among the hearers of John was Herod the Tetrarch. The reference to him (19, 20) is anticipatory. It shows how faithful John was—how personally he applied his theme of repentance, even to Herod, and how foolishly Herod acted in imprisoning the messenger, because he objected to the message.

Verses 21, 22.—That Jesus should submit to the baptism of John (3) appears strange at first sight, and was so to John (Matt. iii. 14). He had no sins to confess, why submit to an ordinance connected with "the remission of sins." He thus manifested his oneness with his people. He became so identified with them that He took their sins as his own. The whole ordinance was to Him a foreshadowing of the cross. The spirit of prayer (21) in which Jesus submitted to the ordinance is a pattern for all other candidates for baptism. The wonders which followed his baptism were three: the opened heavens represented the result of his work. He already got a glimpse of the joy set before Him. The descent of the Holy Ghost marked Him as the Messiah (John i. 32, 33), and qualified Him for his work (iv. 18). The voice from heaven publicly announced his Divine Sonship, and his Father's good pleasure. "Go to Jordan, if you would see the Trinity." Here is the Son entering on his great work; the Spirit anointing Him; and the Father expressing his delight.

YOUNG MEN IN CENTRAL LONDON. — A series of special Gospel addresses to young men will be given in Exeter Hall by Rev. H. Montgomery, of Belfast, from to-morrow (Saturday) to February 17 inclusive at 8 p.m.; Sundays 3.45 and 7.30. According to the announcement the addresses will be "brief, bright, and brotherly." To continue the alliteration, we may express the hope that the Christian young men of central London will busy themselves in bringing their unconverted brethren to this centre of blessing.

A MODERN READING.—If the Evangelist Luke were describing modern instead of primitive Christianity, he would have to vary the phraseology of Acts iv. 32-35 somewhat as follows:—"And the multitude of them that professed were of hard heart and stony soul, and everyone said that all the things which he possessed were his own; and they had all things in the fashion. And with great power gave they witness to the attractions of this world and the love of gold, and great selfishness was upon them all. And there were many among them that lacked love, for as many as were possessors of lands bought more, and sometimes gave a small part thereof for the public good, so their names were heralded in the newspapers, and distribution of praise was made to everyone according as he desired."—Regions Beyond.

Obituary.

REV. DR. T. WITHEROW.

THE death is announced of Rev. Thomas Witherow, D.D., Professor of Church History, Magee College, Londonderry. He entered the ministry in 1845, and laboured for twenty years at Maghera. Church history was, during a goodly part of the time, a favourite study with him, and in 1865 he was appointed Professor. His life was one of unremitting toil, pursued with fidelity and success.

THE BISHOP OF TUAM.

The venerable Bishop of Tuam, the Hon. and Right Rev. C. B. Bernard, D.D., died on Jan. 31, in the eightieth year of his age. He was second son of John, second Earl of Bandon, and had held the bishopric since 1867. For some years he had been in failing health; but, retaining the warm affection and sympathy of the clergy, he administered the diocese with unabated care to the last. His open-handed charity was extended to all, irrespective of creed. Holding evangelical principles, he was an earnest worker in the cause of Scriptural education.

MR. ISAAC BRAITHWAITE.

This gentleman, one of the oldest members of the Stock Exchange, died a few days ago at Hastings. Born at Kendal in 1810, he came up to London about 1830, and soon afterwards joined his relative, the late Mr. James Foster. He was related to Dr. Wordsworth, the late Bishop of Lincoln, and was the intimate friend of Dr. Bickersteth, the late Bishop of Ripon, and of the first Earl Cairns. Though he was so long resident in the Metropolis, the charities of his native town received his generous sympathy and support; and many institutions, both there and in London, will feel that in his death they have lost a wise counsellor and friend.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS.—The Committee of the French Society for the evangelisation of the Jews has rented the premises 16, Rue de Birauge, Paris, as a centre of mission operations. The work is in the hands of M. Emile Burger.

MLLE. E. KIENER has volunteered for work in South Africa in connection with the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions. She will assist M. and Mdme. Coillard in their school work at Léfula. Another lady has paid the expenses of Mlle. Kiener's voyage, so that she will be able to start shortly.

TURKEY.—It is calculated that there are 70,000 Protestants in the Turkish Empire, Egypt included. Of this number 15,200 are communicants, the majority of them Armenian and Greek converts, the outcome of American, English, Scotch, and Dutch missions. The aggregate is increased by about 1500 members yearly.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY OF FRANCE is going forward. Its friends rendered generous help last year in order that the Scriptures might be disseminated during the Exhibition, and many thousands of New Testaments and Gospels were put into the hands of visitors. Altogether the Society circulated last year 65,199 copies of Holy Writ—5981 Bibles, 11,145 New Testaments, and 5,073 portions.

TEMPERANCE ON THE CONTINENT. — The Paris Committee of the Society of the Blue Cross includes some of the foremost evangelical workers of the city. The movement grows gradually, and while the frightful evils of intemperance are daily showing themselves on all hands, the advantages of total abstinence are being more definitely realised in Protestant circles. In Switzerland the Society is increasingly popular among the working classes. Another society, with similar objects, called "The Future," has recently been launched in Canton Vaud, and it has received encouraging support.

AUSTRIA.—Until the abolition of the Concordat, the University of Vienna, founded in 1365 under the Emperor Charles IV. of Germany, had been a Romish institution. During the past thirty years' religious disabilities having been removed, Jewish students have become increasingly numerous, until now they are more than half of the whole body. The Romanists are now calling for the exclusion of Israelites. Impartial onlookers, on the other hand, are remarking upon the serious neglect of education among the Papists. Rome inclines to darkness and ignorance, so her hostility to the development of Jewish culture need surprise no one.

THE SWISS SOCIETY FOR THE OBSERVANCE OF THE LORD'S DAY is making headway in several directions. A conference on the subject was recently held at Zurich, at which an account was given of efforts in some cities, not as yet successful, however, on behalf of the hard-worked journeymen bakers and confectioners. Attention was also called to the servitude of the employés of certain steamboat companies; these poor men work incessantly without knowing anything of Sabbath rest. By degrees the social and religious phases of the Sabbath question are becoming impressed upon the public.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. James Jones, of Wednesbury, is conducting services at Cumberland Hall, Hotwells, with much acceptance.

Miss Bax and Miss Smith have conducted a very successful mission at Moyallon, co. Down. The Gospel was faithfully preached, and much Holy Spirit power rested on the meetings. The work was largely among the young men and boys, though not confined to any class or age.

Hartford, Conn.—Union services have been conducted in this city for two weeks by Rev. E. P. Hammond. The results have been very encouraging. Many affecting scenes have taken place in the meetings. Some of the young converts have written interesting letters telling of their conversion.

Rooksbridge, Somerset.—During the past fortnight special services have been conducted in the Baptist Chapel here by Mr. C. Boyle, of the London Evangelisation Society. The meetings have been very well attended, and not without spiritual results.

Rhyl, N. Wales.—Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, has been holding a number of mission meetings in this town, under the auspices of the English Nonconformist Churches. Meetings were held at the various churches alternately, and were numerously attended. Two meetings were held for women only. Miss Radcliffe (says a local paper) is a very forcible speaker, and handles her subjects with much ability, convincing all of her earnestness. She has been assisted by the various ministers, and the promoters of the mission are rejoicing in the apparent good results likely to follow.

Ireland.—Very successful evangelistic meetings have been held by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, Methodist Conference evangelist, in Tralee and Newtonbarry; by Mr. P. Powers, of England, at Corlispratten, where forty-seven persons have professed to have decided for Christ; by Mrs. Caldwell, of America, at Tullamore; by Rev. G. T. Rea at Pettigo; by Messrs. Dixon and Donnelly at Littlemount, where seventy-three persons professed to have given themselves to the Lord; at Ballymena by Rev. James Stewart; and at Stewartstown by Miss Greer, through whose instrumentality much good is believed to have been done. The Gospel Mission, in Hermon Hall, Belfast, by Messrs. Johnson, Grubb, and others, continues to attract large audiences, and at almost every service souls profess to be converted.

THE CONSUMPTIVE HOME, ECHUCA, VICTORIA, has met a decided want. Patients have been blessed spiritually as well as benefited by the essentially favourable climate of the region. A larger house than was at first fitted up has had to be taken, and now there is accommodation for twenty-four beds. Some of the inmates are able to pay a little towards their support. The matron is an earnest Christian woman. Though the Australian people have generously found funds so far, other help is needed. Communications may be addressed to the hon. secretary, Mrs. Henry Varley, D'Estcaville, Kew, Melbourne.

EMIGRATION.—A meeting, called by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Mr. Walter Hazell, was held on Thursday week at the residence of the latter, when it was proposed that a farm near Clacton-on-Sea, well suited for the experiment, should be rented for three years for £40 per annum, and to this farm should be sent, from time to time, men who from various causes have lapsed from the ranks of self-supporting labour. None but those who from their constitutions are fitted for rough farm work would be placed on this farm. On proving their suitability for the pursuit of agriculture, they would be drafted to the colonies by means of the Self-Help Emigration Society.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.—Mr. Daniel Matthews has recently addressed meetings on behalf of the Maloga Mission to the Aborigines of Australia at Bristol, Newport, Cardiff, Weston-super-Mare, Taunton, Barnstaple, Exeter, and other towns in Devon and Cornwall. Mrs. Matthews writes of her safe arrival in Austalia some weeks ago, with Paddy and Jennie Swift. On their return voyage they had many opportunities of engaging in conversation with the passengers on board, and were the means of leading some to find peace in Christ. For this, Mrs. Matthews desires to praise God, and also asks prayer for blessing on future efforts amongst the neglected blacks of Australia.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

On Saturday the Bishop of Rochester opened a general mission for the district of Camberwell, special mission preachers having been provided for all the churches in that populous neighbourhood.

In a total poll of 983 out of the 10,000 ratepayers of St. George's Southwark, only seventy-eight persons voted for the continuance of the church rate; 905 voted against further payments of this kind.

Rev. A. H. Kelk, of the London Jews' Society, writes from Jerusalem that he baptized nine Jews and Jewesses in Christ Church on Christmas Day. Of these six were adults; a man and his wife with three children, three men, and a young woman.

The Bishop of Exeter is "visiting" his diocese after a new pattern. He is now (The Record says) conducting what might almost be called a mission in the Three Towns (Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse). To survey the parochial machinery, to preach in the churches, and personally to cheer the incumbents and their workers is not enough. He is passing from factory to factory, greeting the men and addressing meetings gathered on the spot.

The Bishop of Liverpool, preaching at St. Matthew's, Scotland-road, Liverpool, on Sunday week, dwelt at length upon the immense importance of prayer, particularly in these days, when so much attention was paid to outward religion. There were ornaments, ceremonies, demonstrations, processions, and all kinds of things to catch the eye and tickle the ear; but were the hearers in these grand places becoming better in consequence, and was there more secret and private holiness amongst them? They might have great numbers of choristers clothed in surplices, and organists playing grand music, but the principal thing, after all, was to know that the people were praying and leading better lives.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new mission-hall, capable of seating 250 persons, has been erected by the Presbyterian congregation at Croydon.

Rev. C. A. Salmond, late of Rothesay, has been inducted to the pastorate of the South Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan's congregation at Clapham have held their annual meetings, when reports were given in of the various departments of work, which showed that they were all in a vigorous and prosperous condition. There had been a substantial increase to the membership. Their Trinity Hall Mission in Battersea was making steady progress. Great service had been rendered to the poor by the soup kitchen and mothers' meeting.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel, to seat about 1000 persons, is to be erected for the congregation at Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton, under the pastorate of Rev. John Bain.

Rev. G. S. Reaney has resigned the pastorate of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, and will close his ministry there on the last Sunday in April. It is stated that he will not seek another pastorate.

The third anniversary of the settlement of Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens at Teddington was observed on Sunday last. During the past three years the congregations have largely increased, new schoolrooms have been erected, six new societies have been formed, and the contributions of the church much augmented.

Godalming Church (Rev. A. J. Creighton, pastor) reports thirty-two additions to the fellowship during the past year. A new society for young persons over seventeen years of age has been established, the object being the study of Scripture, and the strengthening of the Christian life; there are eighty-nine members, with an average attendance on Wednesday evenings of about seventy. At the monthly Sunday evening one-hour services, a crowded attendance has been maintained throughout the year.

METHODIST.

Rev. Dr. Rigg, speaking at the Westminster Training College, on Saturday, said the introduction of the free school system would kill the Wesleyan schools and injure their training colleges. The system if introduced was, he considered, bound to break down, though not before it had done an enormous amount of harm.

In connection with the Portland-street Wesleyan Circuit, Bristol, the new Wesley Hall, recently erected in one of the most crowded centres of the east-end of Bristol, has been opened for worship. In the afternoon on the opening Sunday there was a united thanksgiving service, addresses being given by the vicar of the parish, a Congregational minister, and others.

The union between the Methodist New Connexion and the United Methodist Free Church in England is likely to be carried out. Joint committees have met during the past week to discuss the matter. It is believed that all points of difference will easily be adjusted. In the New Connexion body there are nearly 200 ministers and 36,000 members, and in the United Methodist Free Church body over 400 ministers and nearly 86,000 members.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Dr. Pentecost is now at Greenock, where he is addressing crowded meetings with most encouraging tokens of blessing.

The new Christian Institute at Stirling was, last week, opened by Professor Henry Drummond, of Glasgow, who gave an excellent address on "The Temptations of Small Cities."

The Tramps' Mission at Coatbridge has done good work during the past year, over 1100 poor wanderers having received breakfast on Sunday mornings, followed by a Gospel service.

Through the kindly efforts of Rev. Dr. Oliver, of Glasgow, the amalgamation of the Free Churchmen with the United Presbyterians in the island of Lismore has been successfully accomplished.

NOTES FROM WALES.

The Pontypridd and Rhondda Valley Congregational Union met lately at Cwmpark, when there was a discussion on "The need of securing some means to bring the churches into greater sympathy with the thousands in the Rhondda Valley that never attend a place of worship."

At Cardiff there is a strong and active Welsh Sunday-school Union. A board of examiners examine the schools annually in Biblical knowledge and exposition. By way of infusing warmth and interest into the work the "Union Banner of Honour" is given to that school that obtains the highest percentage of marks. This innocent rivalry produces excellent results. It is pleasing to see the various denominations joining to encourage and direct the study of God's Word.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The annual collection on behalf of foreign missions was made in all the Presbyterian churches in Ireland on Sunday week; it is believed that the amount contributed will be in excess of that of any previous year.

The Young Women's Christian Association has prospered greatly in Ireland; there are now 280 branches. In Belfast especially it has, during the past year, done a very great amount of spiritual good, and has grown so much that it is now necessary to secure a larger Institute.

A new department of Christian work, which has for its aim the visiting of members of the Presbyterian Church in the different hospitals in Dublin, has been inaugurated by Rutland-square congregation, and has already been the means of bringing comfort and joy to invalids.

Limerick has recently been visited by Messrs. McCann and Bailey, travelling secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. Since then several young men have been active in organising an Association in connection with South of Ireland District. They hope soon to obtain suitable premises for carrying on their work.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. C. J. Wall, Scarborough, until recently vicar of Sproatley-in-Holderness, Yorkshire. — Rev. Mark Howard, Congregational minister at Heckmondwike.—Mr. Thomas Burley, a well-known merchant of Liverpool, and a deacon of Church-road Congregational Church.—Rev. E. L. Bowman, until recently vicar of Alston Moor, Carlisle, and formerly a naval chaplain for twenty-one years.—Rev. Wm. Beckett, senior pastor of the Free Church, Rutherglen, N.B.—Rev. H. S. Fagan, rector of Great Cressingham, Norfolk.—Rev. Robert Owen, of Moss, Denbighshire, who for thirty years was minister of the Welsh Baptist Church there.—Rev. John D. Martin, Presbyterian minister, Tullyallen, co. Armagh.—Mrs. Skinner, of Bath, mother of the writer of the well-known series of "Friendly Letters."—Mr. D. Cookson, for many years an active Christian worker and superintendent of the Sunday-school at West-street Baptist Chapel, Dunstable.

Appeals.

North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind (71, 73, and 75, Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, London, N.—Rev. HENRY and Mrs. BRIGHT write:—"At present we are sorely pressed for help. So many of our aged charges being ill and seriously, never would help and sympathy be more timely than now, when so much extra warmth, care, and attention must be given."

United Kingdom Benevolent Association.—Curtains, carpets, furniture, clothing, and other things no longer needed and stowed away may be disposed of without difficulty in aid of the many honest people who, by pressure of circumstances, can scarcely make ends meet. Communicate with Miss KIRBY, Kelsey Park, Beckenham (head of one branch of the U.K.B.A.); parcels should be addressed to Miss Kirby, at Fitzallen House, Arundel-street, Strand, W.C.

Piershill Soldiers' Home.—One of the main objects of this Home is to supply the soldiers' want of "some place to go to." A new building is about to be erected close to the barracks, and directly on the road leading to the city with all its temptations. The cost, including a hall in which to carry on evangelistic work, will be about £2700. The sum of £1170 has already been received, and it is hoped that the remainder will soon be sent in. The hon. treasurer is Mr. D. SCOTT-MONCRIEFF, W.S., 17, Duke-street, Edinburgh.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1890.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LEFT LUNG DISEASED.—CASE at MIDDLESBOROUGH.

The patient is Miss HENRIETTA GREATREX, of Willow-street. The gentleman corresponding with me on her behalf, who is interested in her family, had seen an account of my treatment in the Christian. His name is Mr. JOSEPH H. TAYLOR, of Queen's-square, MIDDLESBOROUGH-ON-TEES.

The statement of her case, written by herself, was forwarded to me April 4th. Her mother and sister had died of consumption. Her illness had commenced about six months before with a cough; violent pain in the side followed this. Then vomiting of blood and profuse expectoration. Secretions all wrong. Flesh and strength rapidly failing. The doctor had reported her left lung diseased.

Advice and medicine were forwarded. She persevered and recovered.

In less than six months after the first communication, Mr. Taylor writes me:—"H. Greatrex reports herself well. She has taken a situation again. She and her friends are very thankful that your treatment has been attended with such good results. Very soon after commencing to use your liniment the pains ceased.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION

TO DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

CRITICAL STATE OF FINANCES.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,

MR. WHEATLEY and myself are much concerned at the serious diminution in the receipts at Christmas time. For many years past we have been enabled to pay up all claims at the end of the year, and leave a substantial balance in hand; but this time we are some hundreds of pounds behindhand, and unless some fifteen hundred pounds is forthcoming within the next few weeks, we shall be compelled partially to abandon at least some of our efforts.

The work accomplished in the Prisoners' Branch during the last year has been enormous, and it is difficult for us to believe that the Christian public will suffer so serious a calamity to befall the Mission.

We have made, and are still making, the matter a subject of constant prayer, and leave it now in our heavenly Father's hands, waiting for His clear and distinct will.

Any donation should be sent either to our Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. WHEATLEY, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.; or to myself, at 4, Ampton-st., Regent-square, W.C.

Yours sincerely, GEORGE HATTON,
Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission.

4, AMPTON STREET, REGENT SQUARE, W.C.

WORK AMONGST MEN

THERE are large bodies of men among the myriads of toilers in our metropolis who entirely neglect public worship.

Left to themselves, these masses of men become unchristianised, infidel and depraved, adding largely to the dangerous classes.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

in addition to its 393 Missionaries on ordinary districts, by its staff of 105 special and well-qualified Missionaries, is bringing large numbers of these men under the upraising influence of the Gospel of Christ.

Last year 72,827 visits were paid to poor Foreigners in our City, and 1,049 religious services were held for them in their various languages.

In upwards of 10,000 public-houses, quite 200,000 persons were reasoned with upon religion and temperance. Upwards of 85,000 factory people were instructed in the Gospel, and many attended the 1,782 meetings held for their benefit.

The Sabbathless tram-car, omnibus and railway-men received upwards of 200,000 visits in the public ways, at the stations, and in their homes.

The known results of this earnest seeking to save the lost is most satisfactory. Tens of thousands have been rightly influenced, and during the past year, 486 communicants have been won from amongst them, hundreds of drunkards have been reformed, and many thousands who have sunk back from the hard struggle of life have, in the time of sickness and approaching death, received consolation.

To support and extend this great work for the Lord Jesus, large funds are urgently needed. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.; or by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS:"

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Terse, trenchant, and suggestive."—Life of Faith.

"A most masterly treatise on the Evidences of Christianity. The book is full of argument and of suggestion, and lighted up with striking illustration. The volume is a very 'readable' one, and those who have to do with 'honest doubters' could scarcely find a better to put into their hands."—The Church.

"We have read the book with interest and profit, and we cordially commend it to our readers as a volume which is likely to gain a hearing where a more set and sober treatise would hardly be looked at. The writer has the faculty of expressing himself in simple language, and the almost raciness of style which he adopts, and his frequent illustrations, force the reader to go on."
Church Sunday School Magazine.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God, and Christ the Son of God. May it help many others out of Doubting Castle!"
Methodist Times.

"Would that all our young men—and especially such as are exposed to sceptical influences—could get hold of this able work! It would fortify them in the faith of the Gospel, and supply them with powerful weapons against opponents."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"For half-a-crown any one may obtain here all that is best in the way of fact and argument on prophecy and miracles, on the scientific accuracy and the ethical beauty and sublimity of the Bible, and on the person and teaching of Christ." Methodist Recorder.

SUITABLE FOR A GIFT-BOOK.

The Christian Portrait Gallery:

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED Life-like Portraits and Biographic Sketches of Prominent Christian Workers of the Present Day.

Handsomely Bound, Demy Quarto, Cloth,
Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a superb book. It is entitled The Christian Portrait Gallery, and contains portraits and biographic sketches of one hundred present-day Christian workers. The whole get-up of the book is first-class."—Divine Life.

"This handsome volume will be valued by all who are interested in the Christian life and work of our day. The portraits are very good, and the accompanying sketches are models of brief, terse, and adequate biographies. The volume will form a handsome feature for the drawing-room, and be especially suitable for presentation."—Baptist Magazine.

"This volume contains well-executed and life-like portraits of about a hundred of the best known Christian workers of the present day, with a short account of the life and labour of each. All who can purchase the volume will be very pleased with it."
Christian Progress.

"This handsome, large, quarto volume, beautifully bound, is one of more than ordinary interest to the Christian reader. It contains upwards of one hundred biographical sketches, with remarkably life-like portraits of men and women who have been—and some of whom still are—eminent workers for God at home and in foreign lands."—English Churchman.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs in all Parts of the World.

By JOHN FOXE.

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"This is a neat, attractive, and strongly got-up edition of a first-class work. The edition before us is brought down to date by Rev. Ingram Cobbin, who also writes an introductory Essay on Popery. The notes and comments of the Rev. John Milner are very valuable, and add much to the interest and permanent value of the volume. . . . . No Protestant ought to be without this marvellous history. It will repay many a perusal."
Oldham Chronicle.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in Sword and Trowel.

"A new edition of this useful and standard work; and a most masterly exposure of what Romanism really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery can find no favour where Foxe's Martyrs is studied."
Christian Progress.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED AND IMPROVED.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH SEVENTY SMALL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"There is great wealth of information in this well-condensed, well-written book. Think of 537 miles of passages of CATACOMBS! The CATACOMBS have been a hiding-place for truths as well as for martyrs, and the sermons in stones, which have been there preserved, preach very forcibly against certain errors of the apostate church. Half-a-crown will bring a large return if spent upon this book."—Sword and Trowel.

"We have read this book with great satisfaction. It is sound, healthy, and interesting. It furnishes a most convincing chapter of Christian evidences, and is an effective exposé of the lies and shams of Romanism. It is an admirable volume to place in the hands of our intelligent youth." Divine Life.

"There is no volume equally moderate in price giving to English readers so full and clear an account of these sepulchral remains of the early Christians. The work is executed with strict accuracy as well as enthusiasm; it is copiously illustrated; and in an age of revived sacerdotalism among the Anglican clergy its appearance is specially opportune."—Christian Leader.

"We have looked carefully through this volume, and find it most interesting. It practically contains all that is necessary to know about these subterranean vaults. The style of the author is popular and the book is really within the comprehension of the uneducated as well as the educated, and in this consists much of its usefulness. We heartily wish it may be read by thousands of people."
Christian Commonwealth.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the Empress of Germany.

News of a startling and shameful character have come to light in connection with the political prisons of Siberia. A refined and highly educated lady, Madame Sihida, confined in the prison at Khara, appears to have been insulted by the Director of the prison. This act she resented by slapping the man on the face; whereupon the infuriated Director ordered her to be stripped and flogged. The poor woman poisoned herself to escape future insults, and a fellow-prisoner did the same. It is rumoured that other women have followed their example. The inmates of an adjoining men's prison who had heard of these events, seem to have risen in revolt, and what the full results may be it is difficult to say. It is to be hoped the Russian authorities will see to it that such disgraceful behaviour on the part of officials is visited with its due punishment.

Surely, if slowly, the rights of the women of India are being asserted by the Government. Last year a Bhattia merchant, in a book entitled "The Whole Duty of Woman," taught the doctrine of the absolute submission of the wife to the husband in all cases. Copies of the book were presented as prizes in the non-Government schools in Bombay, whereon there was prompt protest against its abominable teachings. In due course the Director of Public Instruction pronounced the book immoral, and declared that schools in which it was given as a prize would be disqualified from receiving Government aid. The Bhattia community becoming indignant, the writer of the book appealed to the Government, who, in reply, held that though "not essentially immoral or pernicious to the class for whose use it is intended," the book nevertheless contained "certain passages opposed to English notions of delicacy and enlightenment." The question, however, is not one of delicacy, but one of slavery. And as slavery is essentially immoral and pernicious under all circumstances, it is to be regretted that the Government of India did not plainly say so.

An American minister writes to us from Glasgow, protesting against the dictum of The New York Independent, quoted in our last issue, to the effect that the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America has crippled its usefulness by favouring a political "Prohibition party." Our correspondent's letter is largely an attack on the political partisanship of our New York contemporary, and into that subject it is not fitting that we should enter. We cited the paragraph as an item of news, and must not be supposed to endorse all the projects in connection with temperance reform that are alluded to in our columns. But we would once more bewail the fact that the friends of temperance, both in this country and in America, are so sharply divided in opinion as to methods of dealing with the evils that all are seeking to destroy. Until temperance reformers are willing to meet each other half-way, the baneful liquor interest will remain triumphant.

The German Emperor has taken steps with a view to bringing about an international understanding on labour questions. By a stroke of policy, which is as creditable as it is bold, he has directed the representatives of the Fatherland in Paris, London, Brussels, and Berne, to ask whether the Governments to which they are respectively accredited are disposed to come to an understanding, in the hope of satisfying the demands of the working-classes. The young Emperor has a great desire to ameliorate the condition of the German labourers, and he expects effectually to accomplish his noble purpose by acting in co-operation with other powers. Should his proposal be agreed to in principle, he intends inviting to a conference representatives of all the Governments interested in the labour question.

Socially the subject is of capital importance. The Emperor sees that great evils follow in the train of disputes between employers and workmen, and he is desirous of preventing the evils by obviating the disputes. What interests him and his people also touches other Governments and nations. A conference will result in the accumulation and dissemination of all available information. From a moral and religious point of view, the proposal is in a high degree important. Discontent is a soil in which all that is hurtful to the individual and society grows and thrives. To remove causes of discontent is to secure peace and goodwill.

By the explosion which occurred on Thursday last at Llanerch Colliery, near Pontypool, over 170 men and boys were hurried into eternity. The villages round about were in one moment plunged in grief, and, while parents were robbed of bread-winning sons, many women were made widows, and children left to face life's battle without a father's support and care. Such disasters as this at Abersychan, whatever their immediate cause, are sad reminders of the fact that, with all his attainments, man has no such control of his circumstances as to justify boasting or self-confidence. We all need to realise more completely that we are imperfect and passing away. While commending the hundreds of bereaved to the great Consoler, we must not forget the duty of showing them practical sympathy in this hour of sore need.

Mr. T. Wintle, hon. superintendent of the Christian Mission and Ragged Schools, Pontymoile, writes to us:—

> This is indeed a terrible calamity. We have never experienced anything like it so near home. Many of those brought out have not yet been recognised, but there are already five from our George-street branch, and three of Cwmffrwdoer, brought home. But in some homes there are father and three sons lying dead; others father and four and even five sons. My poor heart is almost broken. I never heard such wailing, and in so many cases the most bitter pang comes from the fact that "there is no hope." So sudden did the end come, not so much as time to say, "God be merciful to me." Six bodies were found in a sitting posture, as though they were having a chat, amongst them some that I have entreated again and again in tears to come to Christ. How little the great mass of rich people think of the great risk and terrible hardships our people have to endure to provide fuel for their comfort; if they did, I feel sure they would supply ample means to carry the glad tidings of God's salvation to them.

Mr. Wintle is about to build an institute for the young people in the Pontymoile and neighbouring works. Lord Tredegar and Mr. Richard Cory subscribe £200 each, two other friends £100 each, and the people themselves £100, towards the £1500 needed. We hope the remainder will speedily be provided.

The meeting at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. last week provided a very effective and timely protest against the wide-spread evils of gambling. Sir Albert Rollit, M.P., hurled mathematical problems at the habit in order to prove its folly. Bishop Barry, whose exhortations were the weightier because of the calm, dispassionate tone in which they were uttered, had an easy task in showing that gambling and betting transactions are at once a vice, a crime against society, and a sin against God. Rev. A. Rowland supplied some startling examples of the ruin that is wrought in young lives by this indulgence. Rev. F. B. Meyer's few closing words clenched the preceding addresses. So far as reason and argument went, the thing was slain beyond hope of recovery, and one may fairly hope that the crowd of young men who listened so intently, and cheered so lustily, were all enrolled in the ranks of the Anti-gamblers.

Many friends of the late Rev, Dr. Somerville will be glad to know that a volume containing a selection of his evangelistic addresses has been published under the title of Precious Seed.

Mr. Railton, the author of "Apostolic Warfare," the Salvation Army Report for 1889, writes us that he will reply to Rev. James Douglas's letter in time for our next issue. We have received letters from others; but the author has a right to the first word in reply. It is desirable that the principles on which this great organisation is founded should be fairly and exhaustively considered. Now that it claims to be Apostolic, it would seem that all Christians should join it, or show the reason why they do not. We are willing to give such space as we can afford for communications pro and con, written in a courteous spirit, and confined to the twelve points in which the claim to Apostolicity is asserted. Such communications must appeal to Scripture. We have not space for mere acclamation on the one hand, nor declamation on the other.

The recent declaration of Mr. Hopwood, the Recorder of Liverpool, in favour of the imposition of lighter sentences upon those who have frequently been convicted, has been followed by much discussion as to the results which follow long and short imprisonments, and not a few letters have been written to the public press both for and against the Recorder's opinion. It has been urged, on the one hand, that short sentences are most beneficial to the offenders, and on the other it is insisted that by these short sentences the criminals lose the benefits of a prolonged course of reformatory treatment. Mr. Murray Browne, the Honorary Secretary to the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, expresses the latter view. As opinion is so divided, it seems desirable that reformers should not wait for the somewhat sluggish machinery of a Parliamentary Commission. Could not a conference be arranged of those who are interested in the welfare of our criminal classes, and those who have unfortunately come more than once within the meshes of the law, in order that the important question may be thoroughly discussed and prepared for treatment in Parliament?

The following extract from a notice in The Athenæum of the recent death of a once well-known dramatic author also constitutes a serious reflection upon the character and tendency of the stage plays of the present day:—

An inflexible believer in the virtue and purity of woman, he could not be induced to present those features of womanhood which the present generation demands. After a dawn of unusual brilliancy, accordingly, he faded into comparative poverty and neglect.

Mr. Connellan, the converted priest, is now working in his native parish in Connaught, holding well-attended cottage meetings, and praying and expounding the Scriptures in the homes of the people, where he is heard gladly. An Irish contemporary finds in this fact evidence that "though the Roman Catholic mind were hermetically sealed against Protestantism, it certainly is not hermetically sealed against the Gospel." The avoidance of controversy, as far as possible, and the simple preaching of the Gospel, is the best way to reach the Irish people. The testimony which Mr. Connellan's work affords shows that the Gospel, unhampered by sectarianism, is found to be potent even in districts where Popery has held sway.

Lord Wolseley is entitled to all the respect and admiration that can be given to military skill and physical bravery. The temperance reform is also indebted to him for his testimony to the fact that the greatest hardships can be borne, and the most arduous duties cheerfully performed, without the adventitious aid of intoxicating drinks. But this illustrious general, if he is anything, is the very incarnation of the military spirit that flourishes among Continental peoples, and is also popular in certain sections of British Society. We are, therefore, somewhat apprehensive at the way in which his presence and speech are being sought after, in order to give prestige to Christian movements.

In a meeting of the Boys' Brigade at Regent-square Presbyterian Church last week, Lord Wolseley is reported to have given utterance to some sentiments that appear to us to be more than doubtful from the Christian point of view. He favoured the adoption of a system of "military" training as a part of the educational course in all our schools. Obedience to superiors, he said, was the essence of military discipline, and such obedience led up to faith! Soldiers he regarded as the most respectable citizens in the world, and the army offered inducements to young men to be found in few other callings. His lordship went so far as to wish that the members of the Boys' Brigade might be allowed by the Government to carry real guns that would go off, instead of the sham rifles they now possessed. All this kind of doctrine, propounded under the ægis of a professedly "Christian" organisation, seems to us very strange indeed, and we hardly like to think of what the outcome of it may be on the impressible young minds of the boys. Yet nobody, so far as we can gather, protested against it.

While we fairly recognise the unhappy fact that the nations of this world have by no means arrived at that halcyon state of millennial amity in which the weapons of war have been turned into implements of peaceful industry, it is surely the mission of the Christian Church to pray and labour towards that end. But, if such ideas of military glory, to the ignoring of other and more righteous methods of settling international disagreements, are to be put forth and meekly accepted, all we can say is that our Christianity has done very little for us as a nation, and we may as well postpone indefinitely the advent of the reign of the Prince of Peace. If the Boys' Brigades are serving any permanently useful function, we wish them well; but we entirely fail to see why habits of obedience, discipline, and self-respect, or the furtherance of physical development, must be associated with this militarism which is as far as possible removed from the spirit of Christ.

An Invitation to Thirsty Souls.

By Principal OSWALD DYKES.

To invite the thirsty among men is a very wide call indeed; for who is there that thirsteth not? It is not by any means in religious services alone (like the profitless ritual of later Judaism) that Jesus beholds the vain labour of souls who thirst. In the market, in the office, at court, at the bar, by the student's lamp and in the lady's boudoir; in men's severe toil to win, or in their feverish haste to spend; everywhere He meets those who are ignorant, to be sure, of their true wants, and still more forgetful of the true supply for them, yet testifying, by their weary effort to hew out for themselves a cistern, that they are athirst!

Among the cultured, who have leisure and can make their own comfort a study, it will, I believe, be confessed that every pleasure in life leaves behind it a certain after-taste of dissatisfaction. Possibly that dissatisfaction may only occur at occasional moments of quiet reflection. Possibly it may only deepen as the years wear on into any distinct sense of disappointment with life. Still, it is there; and to it under every form does this voice of the Son of God make its appeal. Vague though it be and unconfessed, not consciously a religious need, still He meets it with loving offer, who, sad and patient and pitiful, stands for ever by the side of life's broad road, accosting every wayfarer as he hurries or loiters by, "If any of you are athirst, come unto Me, and drink!"

With what sublime self-confidence does He thus testify to his own ability to quench the deep and restless desires of the human heart! As the golden vase dipped into Siloam came up full, yet Siloam brimmed up no whit the less, so shalt thou, who art indeed no golden vase, but only an earthen pitcher, be filled full out of this exhaustless Saviour, of whose fulness we have all received.—The Expositor.

The Old Testament.

A paper called "The Critical Study of the Old Testament," by Canon Driver, D.D., appears in the Contemporary Review, as noted last week. Although the writer says that such criticisms have no bearing upon faith and practice, I deeply regret that such papers are unaccompanied by an adequate counteractive for the scepticisms they originate among readers of magazines. It may be true that there are preferences among the sacred writers for designations of the Divine Being, a diversity of sources, and differences of style and phraseology, which point to a joint authorship of separate books of Scripture. Upon all these matters, however, there is anything but agreement among critics, and if this cold dissection of the human element in the writing of the Bible were admittedly correct, from clergymen and Canons of the Church something more might be expected.

In these days of an unbelief from which are flowing selfishnesses and immoralities that menace our national life, it were greatly to be desired that clerical writers would guard against a style of criticism that is destructive of faith among the uncritical. These writers know that the Old Testament, with its complex contents, if despised by the impure, has commanded the devoted veneration of the best and greatest among men; that it is responsive to the deepest yearnings of man for proofs of a providence in human history, and hopes for the future; that it is an inexhaustible treasure of consolation in all the ills, and of instruction in all the duties of life; and that its moral lessons of reward for righteousness, and of an exactness of retribution upon wickedness, give it the loftiest place in all literature. Criticism upon the composition of the Old Testament can do no harm when these, and a thousand other proofs of its inspiring influence are remembered; but criticism from the clergy may do much harm when these things are ignored.

If, however, literary criticism is sometimes made destructive, there is a historical criticism now appearing which is wonderfully confirmative. If the reasonings of the former are disputed and uncertain, those of the latter are fixed and incontestible. Mr. Harper's book, published by the Palestine Exploration Committee, entitled, "The Bible and Modern Discoveries," might with great advantage be condensed, and placed in the hands of the doubters of our period. It furnishes splendid and unexpected confirmations of the wonderful accuracy of the Old Testament books. Such a book as that of Judges becomes marvellously vivid, as watercourses, pasture-lands, and breadth of plains are shown to be exactly in accordance with what the book tells us of the routes of armies, the strongholds and possessions of its ancient inhabitants. So it is with other books. Dothan to-day (as in Gen. xxxvii.) is the best pasture-ground for sheep, and, far off, Joseph's figure would tell on the sky line as he came from Shechem; there to-day is the steep gorge which Jonathan climbed up, and the cliffs full of caves (as in 1 Sam. xiv.); and (as in 1 Chron., a book so much objected to by literary criticisers) there to-day in the duct of the water supply is the evidence of the very plug Hezekiah put in when Sennacherib invaded Judah. Thus almost every foot of ground in Palestine, as now explored, is made to bear its silent witness to the truthfulness of Old Testament narratives. W. G.

Chariots of Fire.

2 KINGS vi. 8-17.

As the curtain rises, we see a commander-in-chief surrounded by his staff, communicating the plan of a campaign. "In such and such a place shall be my camp." Wise, however, as may have been the military arrangements of the king of Syria, and great as may have been the value of the strategic points indicated, he found himself checkmated at every move. Availing himself of the information given him by the prophet Elisha, "the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice."

The Syrian king, like a great many men, left one important "if" out of his calculations. The Apostle James teaches us to say, "If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that." Men continually think, speak, and act, as if God had nothing whatever to do with the success of their undertakings. They forget that

> There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
> Rough-hew them as we will.

Their calculations often prove at fault, though wise and shrewd enough from a human point of view, because one important factor is left out. They provide, as they think, for every emergency; they exercise forethought; they strain their own resources to the utmost; they lay under contribution all possible means of assistance; they subsidise nature and art to enable them to compass their ends; but they leave out—GOD. They ignore the fact that there is such a thing as a Divine overruling and interposition. If they admit the existence of God at all, He is to them like an Oriental monarch who withdraws himself from all interest in the affairs of his kingdom, and is all but a myth to his subjects.

This was the trouble with the king of Syria and his military plans. He was warring not against Israel, but against Israel's God. He left out of account all spiritual influences and powers, and therefore suffered humiliating reverse and failure. The same thing is occurring continually. Ungodly men array themselves against the kingdom of Christ. They often have on their side heavy battalions of learning, wealth, and power; they have at their command large resources of human skill; they are proud of their numbers and strength. But there is one element of weakness and disaster in their calculations of which they make no account. They are against God. Such is the presumption and vain confidence of men that they think to succeed in their plans and undertakings while opposed to God. They seem to think that they are stronger than He; that they can cope with the Almighty; that their wisdom is a match for his. So multitudes have thought, as well as the king of Syria, and have found themselves discomfited and defeated; their plans thwarted, their wisdom turned into foolishness, and all their pride and power scattered like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor.

Contrast with the king's presumption, the prophet's faith. Shut up in the city of Dothan, surrounded by the Syrian army, the king of Syria, mortified and enraged by his humiliating failure, determined upon vengeance, Elisha's position was no enviable one. Appearances were against him. To the eye of sense, things looked disheartening enough. And, if the prophet had been a man of little faith, he might well have despaired. But Elisha was a man of heroic spiritual character; his faith was of a kind that made the invisible world real and present, that penetrated the veil, that saw the unseen forces drawn up for his defence. His servant was a man of different mould. He saw the host of the Syrians compassing the city "both with horses and chariots"; and he came to the prophet with the despairing cry, "Alas, my master, how shall we do?" He saw, like a great many men, only the earthly and visible; he saw only the obstacles and discouragements in the way; he could not look beyond and above them, to the everlasting hills, to "the munitions of rocks," to the array of spiritual allies, the invisible hosts of God. A great many are doubting and fearful for just the same reason. The prophet's servant was really as safe as the prophet himself. But he did not have the comfort of knowing it. Many have fled to "the city of refuge," are actually trusting in Christ, and are safe from "the avenger of blood." But through imperfect knowledge and weak faith they know nothing of "the joy of salvation." They are safe, but have not the comfort of knowing it. They need to have their eyes opened that they may see "the mountain full of chariots of fire and horses of fire"—the armies of God encamped for their defence. Salvation is one thing; assurance of salvation is another thing. We may have the former without the latter. The former is what is really essential; but the latter, much as it has been often abused and caricatured, is very desirable. Therefore Paul prayed for the Ephesians, "...the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." Many Christians need for their own comfort and for their usefulness, to have their eyes opened to the greatness of their "purchased possession," the richness, and fulness, and satisfying nature of the things which God has prepared for them that love Him; which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man to conceive"; but which "God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit." Too many of God's dear children even, when placed in circumstances of trial and danger, are as perplexed and fearful as the prophet's servant, and begin anxiously to inquire, "How shall we do?" The remedy for such doubt and misgiving, the secret of calmness and courage, is an increase of faith, having the eyes open, not only to the dangers and difficulties, but to the forces of safety and help. To the worldling, or the weak believer, there are always armies of enemies, hosts of difficulties, battalions of doubts lying in wait. But to the clear-sighted spiritual Christian there appear far above the field of conflict the "chariots of fire," the unseen, spiritual ranks of heavenly allies, marshalled for victory.

Christians in this world are engaged in a great conflict. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against wicked spirits in heavenly places." They are often, like the prophet at Dothan, beleaguered with enemies, surrounded by hostile hosts; but there are encamped around them, unseen by mortal eye, "chariots of fire and horses of fire"—the armies of heaven arrayed for their defence. We need not be dismayed at the number or strength or skill of our enemies, if we have for our allies the hosts of God. To the eye of sense all may be dark and hopeless; the worldling, or the man of little faith may see only causes of discouragement; but the man of God whose eyes are open to see spiritual realities can say with confidence when all is disheartening to human appearances, "They that be with us are more than they that be with them."

Equally safe is Christ's Church, though besieged and assaulted by whole armies of aliens. She has often been like Dothan with the encircling ranks of the Syrians menacing her on every side. Her enemies have exulted in anticipation of her destruction. But the Lord has been "a wall of fire round about her." When necessary, He will summon his unseen hosts for her defence. "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels." The foes that are mustering against the Church are many and mighty: rationalism and superstition are made friends by their common enmity against Jesus of Nazareth! the distant hills are black with gathering multitudes, arrayed under the banners of the Prince of Darkness; but we need have no fear: "God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved; God shall help her when the morning appeareth." Even in "the great tribulation" of the last days, whose portentous shadows darkened the horizon of the seer on Patmos, when the embattled hosts of evil shall "compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city," deliverance will be at hand; in that last mighty conflict reinforcements will not be wanting; at the decisive moment God's reserves will appear on the field: "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels." The hosts of the pit will encounter the armies of the sky. Their number, as seen by the beloved disciple, was "as the sand of the sea"; but "fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them" (Rev. xx. 8, 9).

EVANGELISATION IN MEXICO.

DEAR SIR,—A letter from Mr. Bright, of Venezuela, on the subject of his going to Mexico, to take up the late Mr. Pascoe's work, comes opportunely, and shows in a remarkable way the leadings of the Lord. I have also been much cheered by a conversation with Mr. Stanger, of Canada, who expresses a desire to go to Mexico. The friends of Mexico have to confront a change in the history of this Mission, demanding consideration as to whether they will sympathise practically with this fresh start to carry on the work of our lamented brother.

Mr. Bright seems a most likely man. The fact that he will be able to carry on the printing work, to which he attaches much importance, is a cause for thankfulness. He is an able and spiritually minded man. Mr. Stanger is a very godly and intelligent young man. He intended to go back to Canada, having laboured seven or eight years there; but the claims of Mexico have so stirred his heart that he cannot throw them off. With him it is no sudden impulse, but the result of prayerful consideration. I commend the whole matter to God, and should like to have a renewal of interest from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN in this very needy and important field of labour.—Yours faithfully, JOHN MERCER.

Caution.—Rev. T. Jackson, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, Hackney, E., asks us to caution our readers respecting a man named Crisp, who has been imposing upon the benevolent by pitiful appeals in sanctimonious language, using Mr. Jackson's name as a reference. Friends are requested not to send any money in response to such appeals.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXII.—THE BREATH OF ETERNITY.

1 PETER iv. 3-7.

THERE is a great contrast between the believers of the Apostolic age and ourselves. And this contrast is shown, not so much in the truths held and believed, or in devotion towards the Lord Jesus, as in the different attitude taken up and maintained towards the great future.

With them eternity had already begun. It dated from the moment in which they received Christ into their hearts. The fact of their being in the body did not obscure their perception of the union subsisting between them and their risen Lord, so close and intimate that where He was, there they also were. His death had cut them also off from the world which had crucified Him. His grave lay as an impassable barrier between them and the course of human society, which had refused and rejected Him. In his resurrection and ascension they had participated. Where their treasure was, there their hearts were also. In Him they had already become denizens and citizens of the world where He was King, sitting in the heavenlies. True, they made excursions into the world to do their necessary business according to the will of God, to learn lessons that could only be learnt under the conditions of our present mortal life, and to act as an antiseptic to the evil around. But, having done what was required, they retired again into their true home and rest, confessing that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

The voyager detects the near proximity of land by the fresh land-breeze which breathes in his face, wafting the sounds and scents of forest, or prairie, or heather-covered hill. So through these Epistles, we inhale another atmosphere than that with which we are so familiar in Christian societies. WE live in the world and pay occasional visits into the unseen and eternal; they lived in the unseen and eternal, and paid periodic necessary visits into the world. WE conform to the world; they were transformed by the daily renewing of their minds. WE read the society papers, discuss society gossip, send our children into society, and strive to hold our own in dress and appointments with the cream of society around us; they, on the other hand, were thought strange and ridiculous, because they lived amongst men as "the children of the resurrection." Surely the contrast is not to our credit, although we vaunt our undoubted superiority.

There are many symptoms of this state of mind in the passage before us. The limited time or duration of our life as contrasted with the infinite stretch of future existence. The reference to Him who is ready to judge, as if the great white throne were already erected in mid-heaven, and men were being arraigned before it, preparatory to the solemn session of the Judge; the piercing cry as of the last herald angel, that the end of all things was at hand—all these indicate the mood of the Apostle's soul. He stood in the light of eternity. Its breath was upon his face. Its spirit was in his heart. He was too absorbed in its towering grandeur to be too much moved by the sorrows and sufferings which were falling thickly and heavily on the Church. And it was amid the sure impression of these momentous realities that he exhorted those whom he addressed, as pilgrims and strangers, to abstain from fleshly lusts. And what stronger motive could he have employed?

I. A BLACK ENUMERATION.—"Lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries." It is a dark picture, reminding us of 1 Cor. vi. 9-11. But it is a faithful delineation of the state of the world, in spite of the loftiest teachings of philosophy and morals. Ordinary readers can form but a very inadequate conception of the gross evils before which the ancient world was simply rotting away at the time of the Advent. The extent of the evil is veiled by the dead languages which contain the record for all time. Suffice it to say that the dialogues of Plato, containing some of the noblest speculations of heathendom, are disgraced by the unblushing discussion and approval of sins which are condemned by the police-courts of every nation in Christendom. There is, therefore, abundant corroboration of this inspired picture of the state of the society of that day. And perhaps its very vileness had a salutary effect upon the Christians of that age, in compelling them to come out and be separate. The curse of our time is that Satan has counterfeited so much of Christianity, and has sought to hide a Godless civilisation under the veneer of Christian terms.

We need not dwell on these successive terms, except to note how closely excess of wine is connected with abominable idolatries, and to ask whether any wine is not excessive, unless taken for some very distinct purpose of health, prescribed by medical authority — nor always then. We desire rather to call attention to the strong phraseology employed to describe these sins, when the Apostle calls them, as the Greek word indicates, "stagnant pools of havoc-making sin."

Men are tormented by thirst. That thirst was meant to bring them to the river of water of life, which flows from the throne of God. But as they refuse to follow it thither, they are given up to follow it to the brackish stagnant pools of the desert, at which the very beasts would refuse to drink. The music-hall, the billiard-room, the casino, the public-house, the abode of shame, are so many fœtid pools, at which men seek to quench a thirst which can be slaked with nothing short of the living God. Oh, when will they learn their fatal error! How shall they be warned! Can we not get one draught of throne-water into their tortured throats, to give them an abhorrence of all other beverage beside! "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."

And as to havoc! What a tale is being told by every newspaper of the havoc being wrought in the votaries of sin. Havoc in estate, fortune, health, happiness, reputation, and usefulness. Wretched bodies, beneath whose weight of corruption the spirit seems almost to have expired. Wretched lives, like the frigate which so gaily leaves the harbour to-day, but is torn by the jagged fang of the rock to-morrow, and goes down in deep water. Wretched souls, without God, or hope, or love, or any trace of their high origin and Divine equipment. Well may the Lamb of God still wear the guise of the Sufferer, in the midst of the throne of God, while sin still works such havoc among a race which he loves more than Himself.

Men of the world think it strange that we do not run with them to the same excess of riot. They know what we renounce, but not what we receive. They see us flinging away the rank water from the stinking bottle-skins, but they do not see us drinking down long draughts of everlasting life. They cannot understand that what we have in Christ makes all things else taste insipid and forbidding. If they only knew, they would see that THEY are acting strangely, and not we. For, as we see what they miss, and how hard their service is, and how many bitters mingle with their sweets, we often think it strange that they prefer husks to bread, paste diamonds to jewels, and Marah to Elim.

Any time spent in the lusts of the flesh is too long. The time past may well suffice. Oh the bitter regrets which the memory of past sins breeds in the saved soul! What would it not give to be able to obliterate the record, and to look back on an unsullied page? But this may not be. Our only comfort is that He who says that the time for watching is over, also says that there is yet opportunity to retrieve the past, and promises to restore the years which the cankerworm and caterpillar have eaten.

II. AN ARRESTING CONSIDERATION.—"Who shall give account to Him that is ready to judge the quick (i.e., the living) and the dead." It is related of Latimer that, when summoned to take his last trial before vindictive foes, he was somewhat loose and careless in his replies, till, in a pause, he caught the sound of a pen behind the arras, transcribing every word he spoke; and immediately he began to weigh his words with minute and exacting care. Thus we are urged to withdraw ourselves from the ways of those who speak evil of us and blaspheme God, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world, because the Judge standeth at the door.

There is a sense, in which, of course, the judgment awaits men on the other side of death—the judgment seat of Christ for his servants, to adjust their rewards, and the final judgment for the unsaved and ungodly, into which we who are one with Him can never come; but it is also true that we are now in the presence of our Judge. He is ready; He is at the door. The time is come that judgment must begin.

"Soldiers," said Napoleon to his army, as it passed under the shadow of the pyramids, "Forty centuries look down upon you." But if there is an inspiration to valour in the thought of the venerable past, surely there must be a stimulus to holy living from the thought that all our life is naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do, whose decisions are even now beginning to register themselves in our history.

From the living the Apostle turns to the dead, to whom he had alluded at the close of the last chapter, and gives a further reason why the Gospel had been preached to them, "that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, and live according to God in the spirit."

How tender the thought of eternity makes us of other men! Would that it were graven on our hearts, as on the pavement before Robert Annan's door, that we might bear their rebuffs, and testify against their sins, as those who are already treading the streets of the Holy City, and are carrying in their hearts the music of the everlasting song.

III. A CLARION CALL.—"The end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." The end of the Jewish State was impending. The throes of dissolution were already being felt. Soon the venerated system in the heart of which the Church had been nurtured was to split, as the shell of the acorn bursts, before the opening of life.

The end of the age of prophets and kings, of a material city of God, of the rites and ceremonies of a typical religion had come. There was anguish and foreboding in pious hearts as they saw the destruction of a system in which they had been wont to shelter. The birds are scared when they see the tree laden with the nests of many generations swaying to its fall beneath the woodman's axe. The air is full of dust and pother as the scaffolding is taken down, which has come by long usage to be considered part of the true temple, though in reality it obscures its proportions and beauty. But the Apostles were able to look on without dismay, knowing that the things which were being shaken and removed were only the things which were made, and were being put out of the way of those things which cannot be shaken and shall remain.

The time in which we are living is remarkably similar. This also is the end of the age. "The old order changeth, giving place to new." God is beginning to wrap it together as a worn-out vesture. Institutions, expressions, long-cherished methods are being put into the crucible, with the sure result that only the transient and material shall be dissolved, whilst through the wreck shall emerge the new heavens and earth in which dwelleth righteousness.

Our duty in this crisis is twofold: (1) Be sober.—Let there be a noble self-restraint in respect to even lawful appetite and in the use of all the acquisitions and possessions of life. Let the flowing habits, the vestments of the soul, be girt up around the loins. Let there be no entanglement on the part of Christ's soldiers in the affairs of this life, that we may please Him who has chosen us to be his soldiers, and that we may be ready to be up and away whenever the trumpet shall ring out the summons for the exodus, or the voice shall be heard proclaiming the Bridegroom's advent.

(2) Watch unto prayer.—The Lord depicts the faithful servant on the watch for his master's coming though the long hours of the night have begun to yield to the summons of the dawn, and all around him his fellow-servants are wrapped in slumber.

> Oh, happy servant he
> In such a posture found!

Be that posture ours, standing at the oriel window which looks out towards the eastern sky, filling the hours with prayer for his speedy advent, so that before ever He comes and knocks, we may be down to greet Him on the doorstep, and receive his salutation of peace, his word of "Well done!"

BAPTIST FORWARD MOVEMENT.

THE pastor of the John-street Chapel, Bedford-row (Rev. J. E. Shephard), celebrated his third anniversary there last week. It was stated that Mr. Bond, a student of Nottingham College, has been appointed to assist Mr. Shephard in the work of the Forward Movement. He will devote himself largely to visitation work in the district. Two lady visitors are also enrolled, and a medical mission branch will be under the charge of Dr. Lush. Outdoor work will be vigorously entered on as the spring season advances.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who preached at one of the anniversary services, will devote some time weekly to extension work, and the appointment of an evangelist is in contemplation. The friends at John-street Chapel enter hopefully on the labours of another year, and it is hoped that their example will prove infectious in other needy centres of population.

Oneness, Unity, & Reasonable Service

II.—UNITY.

THIS precious oneness in the Lord, that is brought before us in this chapter and elsewhere in the Scriptures, is very much more than outward uniformity, or even unity with true believers; for it is real abiding and eternal oneness in God Himself.

But, though we must not bring this high calling of God down to the level of manifest unity with believers, it is very clear that oneness in God includes unity with all believers; and, therefore, the unity should be made manifest, and devoutly cherished by all who profess the name of the Lord, and who are really one in Him.

The manifestation of true unity is very pleasant in God's esteem, as we see by Psalm cxxxiii. and many other portions of Scripture; and the one thing needful for true unity (as for all other good) is, first, to be in heart one with God; this is how true unity is obtained, and then preserved and enjoyed. It is written; "Where I record my name, I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee" (Exod. xx. 24). Notice how the Lord addresses his people, "thee," as if all were but one. Yes, in his name we are all united in one. When we are kept in the name of the Lord—kept from the evil one, separated from the world, and wholly sanctified to live to the glory of God, then we enjoy "the unity of the Spirit" (Eph. iv. 3), which is produced in us by "the unity of faith" (13), and we should watch with desire to make manifest the unity, "endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. iv. 3).

"The unity of the faith," and "the unity of the Spirit," must come before mere uniformity. As members of various churches, we should be watchful against the carnality that puts the particular church, or denomination, or fellowship, with which we may be outwardly connected, before true unity with all true believers who are one in God; for individuals may be nominally united to what some may consider to be the most perfect system of fellowship, and yet not be members of the one true Church of God, not living members of the body of Christ.

The present outward uniformity must come to an end, true unity will last for ever. The plea for outward uniformity, if unduly pressed, will prevent "the unity of the Spirit," even where there is "the unity of faith."

In order to bring about this desirable object of unity with all true believers to the glory of God, the joy of each other, the salvation of men, and the prosperity of the only true Church, let us be careful that we do not first look at one another, or think what any man may say; but rather let each see that he is in heart one with Christ, in devout fellowship with Him; and, as members of his body, most obedient to Him who is the head; and then true unity with all believers will be the happy result. Just as when the members of the human body are in health, and each member doing its own particular work to the good of all the members; it is because each member simply obeys the head. The result is perfect unity throughout the body.

When we are really holy and one in Christ, then—as in all simplicity, purity, meekness, and love, we come into contact with others who confess Christ, and are partakers of the same Divine nature, the same spirit of holiness, the same simplicity, and purity, and meekness, and love—we, like mercury (quicksilver), unite with the first touch, flow into one another, and individuality is lost in precious unity.

Let us believe the truth (which is "in Jesus," Eph. iv. 21), live by faith, be wholly sanctified, wholly set apart for God, led of the Spirit, receive all our life, our thoughts and words and service in Christ; and then, however varied our conduct may seem, there will be perfect unity; which we should be careful not to mar.

The devil is evil, and he is always seeking to separate the children of men from God, and from those who truly fear Him. God only is good; and He unites us to Himself, and to each other in all that is pure and true and good. Yes, the devil divides, but God only can join all in one. We must each be watchful, and never yield to the devil; nor even to any thought that is not true, and reverend, and just, and pure, and lovely, and of good report, and becoming to one professing the name of the Lord, and that will not bring praise (Phil. iv. 8). We are to avoid everything that is not in harmony with God, not of the Spirit, "not of the Father, but is of the world" (John xvii. 16; 1 John ii. 15, 16).

We should remember that in this prayer Christ is speaking to his Father, and asking what He knows will be done by Him. Then, as to our part, the Bible is full of exhortations to us to believe and abide in Christ, and receive all needed grace in Him, that we may abound in love, and peace, and joy, and unity, and fruitfulness to the glory of the Lord, and show that we are indeed one in God.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.

THIS admirable Institution in the outskirts of the Highland capital, is now well on in its tenth year of service. Through the sympathetic co-operation of many friends, it has been an unspeakable blessing to not a few orphaned boys and girls whose lot in life must otherwise have been sad enough. As it is the only agency of the kind in the Scottish Highlands, the need for its beneficent operations will readily be recognised. Its management is sustained as a labour of love by the friends who founded it; and they have had an ample reward in the protection and help they have been enabled to give to so many young and tender lives. At the same time, the burden of its efficient support and development is one that ought to be divided among all on whom the North of Scotland has a peculiar claim, and we trust many Highlanders in England as well as in foreign lands will deem it a privilege to contribute to its constantly emptying treasury.

The ninth annual report is a very modest and somewhat meagre little document, but it contains some interesting facts relating to the work and the children. "A feature introduced in connection with the sale of work last year was the promise, from forty of our sheep-farmers, of a lamb each, as a thank-offering for a good season. Before the close of the year eight lambs had been sent in, or value for them. We trust this is not the only year in which the lambs will be heard of as helping to maintain our Highland orphans in food and clothing. During the year the number of children in the Home rose from thirty-five to forty-seven, but at the close it stood at forty—twenty boys and twenty girls. Some of the children have been received into the homes of respectable and industrious farmers, &c. Some have commenced work in Inverness, and are in comfortable lodgings. One girl has been sent to Idaho, U.S., where she is doing well. We visited the children in the country recently, and found them all pleased with their respective homes, and also that they were giving satisfaction to the friends who had charge of them. One half of the new Home is set apart for the younger members, the other half for the girls who are more advanced, thus leaving the Home that was first built for the older boys."

Mr. M. ELLIOT, 2, Drummond-street, and Mr. GEO. WALKER, 26, Ness Bank, Inverness, are treasurer and secretary respectively.

Christian Work in The Force.

"THE FORCE" is the curt colloquial designation for the helmeted and batoned guardians of the peace, with whose presence in our city streets we are all so familiar. As a fully organised body we believe it is some forty years old, and it now numbers throughout the United Kingdom close on 55,000. The policeman is a very important item in any social community, and yet, until quite recently, the churches have seemingly been content to leave him outside the pale of their work, ordinary or extraordinary. The nature and exigencies of his daily duty prevent him from going very often to church; and the church, without the same excuse, has refrained from going to him.

For seven years past a quiet but growing and effective work has been carried on for the benefit of our civilian army, in connection with "The Christian Police Association." We cannot now enter into the details of its early history, though it is a deeply interesting and encouraging one. We may say, however, that one of the chief workers from the beginning has been Miss C. Gurney, and it was in her mother's house at Notting Hill that the Society was formed early in 1883, with a membership, we believe, of six. Since then the growth has been steady and solid, so that, according to the last printed report, the Association has 176 branches in different parts of the kingdom. The movement has spread to several colonial towns and centres, and there is the pleasing prospect that it will ere long take root in the United States, Australia, and elsewhere.

As we have indicated, the path of the policeman is beset with special difficulties. His services are needed night and day, Sunday as well as week-day. When the multitude makes holiday, or joins in any special jubilation, he must be there to preserve order. It is an unwelcome feature of modern social agitations that the Lord's Day is often chosen as the time of popular concourse. This imposes an added task on the already hardworked constable. Altogether, his lot, as a man of leisure, is not a very happy one. In the discharge of his duty to society he has to relinquish much that other men count desirable. His patience is put to severe tests; and if sometimes he fails in that high grace, and abuses his "little brief authority," it is small wonder. We are too apt to magnify the lapses, and forget the faithful service rendered amid irksome surroundings.

The Christian Police Association has proved an admirable rallying ground for those who wish to help the policemen, and to make it easier for him to consult his highest interests. By means of the Gospel meetings, the Bible-class, the social gathering, the pledge-book, the library and reading-room, and similar avenues of help, he is made to feel that, like other men, he needs the redeeming and sustaining grace of God, and the fellowship of the saints, in order to play well his part. Only those who have clearly and consciously believed on Christ, and whose life commends their profession, are received as members of the Association, but the meetings, and the advantages of the rooms, are freely open to all policemen. The membership is now over 4500.

The headquarters of the London work have now found a suitable and worthy habitation in the Police Institute, lately acquired at 1A, Adelphi-terrace—a quiet spot just out of the busy Strand, and overlooking the Thames Embankment and the river. The publishing offices of the monthly paper for policemen, On and Off Duty, are transferred hither, and the whole work goes on under the same roof. One of our representatives lately paid a visit to the place, and was greatly delighted with what he saw. In the basement there is ample accommodation for the kitchen and refreshment department: the members of the Association have a healthy belief in the virtues of a cup of tea. On the ground floor there is a large room where the various meetings are held; on the opposite side of the entrance is the office of On and Off Duty. Upstairs is a splendid reading-room, with a charming outlook on the silent waterway of the Thames. Thither any member of The Force off duty can resort, and write, read, or study; in this he is aided by a goodly library—the gift, we imagine, to a large extent, of the chief worker, who lavishes time, thought, and means on her chosen and much-loved work. The men subscribed heartily towards the furnishing of the house, which was also greatly helped by Mrs. Tritton and other friends. There is room, we understand, for additions to the library, in the shape of some encyclopædic works, interesting books of travel and biography, and Gospel books, such as Mr. Moody's Addresses. Higher up in the building there is sleeping accommodation for some half-dozen men, and this is mostly placed at the disposal of policemen coming to London from the country, to whom the value of such a boon, under such auspices, is beyond computation. There are also apartments for the caretakers, and for the resident lady workers.

No man with any public responsibility needs more to have a clear head and a steady nerve than the policeman; and so temperance principles are heartily encouraged in connection with the work. The temptations to tippling, from the offers of interested parties to stand treat, are innumerable, and one great safeguard is the practice of rigid abstinence. This is happily growing among the men, and a Police Temperance Union is constantly receiving accessions to its ranks. There is a Bible-reading Union, with a membership of 6000. A Police Missionary Union has lately taken its place among the working branches of the Association, and our Christian policemen are being taught the privilege of helping to send to others the Gospel which has brought light and peace to their own hearts. The members of the Union have already provided the means of establishing an opium refuge in China. The Royal Irish Constabulary have been among the foremost in giving of their substance to the missionary cause.

So the work progresses and expands, with the hearty permission and goodwill of the police authorities: as the men are under authority it is essential that this official sympathy should be secured. There is a very large amount of voluntary work done on the Association's behalf by ladies in both the London and country districts, and the branches are mostly self-supporting. But the dimensions reached are now so great that it is quite needful that practical public help should be sought for the central work in London, particularly in connection with the maintenance of the new Headquarters Institute at Adelphi-terrace. About £1000 is required for the current annual expenses. Help is also needed for vigorously sustaining the deputation work. The friends in charge are full of faith that God will provide every necessary equipment, but they think it right that fellow-Christians should know something of the facts, and have an opportunity of sharing the privileges and responsibilities of a work which has already been much blessed, and which has in it so much of promise for the future. The workers desire also that they may find a place in the united prayers of Christian friends throughout the country.

London readers may like to know that a prayer meeting for workers is held at the Police Institute every Wednesday afternoon at 4.30; while on Monday evenings, at 6.30, there are addresses to Christians on the deepening of the spiritual life.

AN APPEAL TO STUDENTS.—Dr. Pierson's address to students, delivered at Edinburgh and Glasgow, has been published in pamphlet form. It enforces great lessons as to duty and conduct, and is deserving of wide circulation. Copies may be had (7s. 6d. per 100, post free), from Rev. Dr. Lowe, 56, George-square, Edinburgh.

Gathered Gold.

PAST AND PRESENT.

A CAKE made of memories will do for a bite now and then, but it makes poor daily bread. We want the present enjoyment of God. We need still to go to the fountain for new supplies, for water which standeth long in a pitcher loses its cool and refreshing excellence.—C. H. Spurgeon.

TRIBULATION'S FRUIT.

What wonderful things chastisement can do for a man. "Tribulation," says the Apostle, "worketh patience." That is one of the first qualifications for an apostle, but one of the last of the Christian graces that we generally acquire—we are all conscious of it. God is the God of patience; when we are patient we are most Godlike.—S. Witherby.

WOUNDING CHRIST.

Our Lord was often sorely wounded in the house of his friends. What a cruel stab one of them gave Him in the court-yard of Pilate! What a cowardly desertion when that very group from the upper chamber all forsook Him and fled! We wound our Master whenever we break his commandments, and when we bring reproach upon the name of Christian before the world. The closer we get to Christ in our profession the more cruel is the stab we give Him when we sin. Many a man kisses his Master in the prayer-meeting and kisses Him at the communion-table, and then by shameful conduct or cowardly neglect of duty betrays Him to his enemies! It is a glorious honour and privilege to be a friend of Jesus Christ, but it involves a prodigious responsibility.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

FELLOWSHIP IN SUFFERING.

Christ's death saves us from all the sin, but it does not exempt us from the trial; it is through the work of the trial that He perfects the saving from the sin, clears us from the encumbrances of earth and time that would hold our spirits here for ever, and prepares us when his season arrives, for sharing his ascension, as we share his death. Just as we pass more in and understand the great truth about Him in his suffering, we are ready to understand our own...He is the Firstborn among many brethren, and they must all be like Him in their experience, that they and He may have a common sympathy.—Dr. John Ker.

OLD MEN AND CHILDREN.

The tottering limbs of the very old, and the elastic, perpetual motion of childhood, are like far distant chords of the diapason of the Creator's love. We know not how great the relief of the yet innocent, almost indomitable joyousness of children is, until we miss them. In the dreadful Irish famine of 1847 the absence of the children from the streets of Galway was told me as one of its dreariest features. In the dreary back streets and alleys of London, the irrepressible joyousness of children is one of the bright sunbeams of that great Babylon, amid the oppressiveness of the anxious, hard, luxurious, thoughtless, careworn, eager, sensual, worldly, frivolous, vain, stolid, sottish, cunning faces which traverse it. God sanctions by his word here our joy in the joyousness of children; that He, too, taketh pleasure in it—He, the Father of all. It is precisely their laughing, the fulness of her streets of these merry creatures of his hands, that He speaks of with complacency.—Dr. Pusey, on Zech. viii. 4, 5.

A CONFERENCE ON MISSIONS.

THERE was a large muster of young men at a Conference on Foreign Missions held on Thursday last week, at the Young Men's Christian Association, Whittington-avenue, E.C. About sixty students from the Pastors' College swelled the company, whose attention was directed to God's claim upon their service, and heathen claims upon their sympathy. The proceedings, which were presided over by Professor D. Gracey, were stimulating throughout.

Dr. BAEDEKER touched the hearts of many with his story of testimony in the prisons of Russia and the "regions below" in inhospitable Siberia. Though the door is closed for formal Gospel testimony in Russia, there is a way open for workers who are prepared to be of no account in the estimation of the authorities. As a plain man he got permission to visit the dungeons of the great Empire, and was heard with joy as he proclaimed the glad tidings of salvation to thousands of prisoners in chains. Among the Armenians of Transcaucasia he did a specially interesting work. Invited to address them, he showed that "all have sinned." "Yes," said the people, "we know that, but we want you to tell us how to get rid of sin." Then he preached Jesus, the Saviour of Jew and Gentile, bond and free, black and white. Asking if any would like to trust themselves to the Saviour and serve Him with their whole heart, he had the joy of seeing the immense body of people rise without hesitation, and in real earnest. Going afterwards among the same people, he found that they had been scattering abroad the good news throughout their native mountains. A Y.M.C.A. is being formed, and no one can tell whereunto the movement will grow, seeing that the people are not afraid to tell of the love and mercy of God which they have themselves experienced. Dr. Baedeker urged his young hearers to place themselves at the feet of the Lord, ready to be sent whithersoever He may wish them to go.

Professor GRACEY enlarged upon the claims of the foreign field. He rejoiced that the proposition that the heathen world has claims upon the followers of Christ is no longer questioned by the Church at large. The survival of the fittest is a doctrine that has no place in the Gospel of Christ. Translated into deeds between man and man, it means that the strong should trample down the weak; that the man who possesses should hold what he gets while the destitute perish in want; that the brave and strong should grow braver and stronger, and the weaklings become eliminated out of human society. But the weaklings are the very ones that Divine compassion takes home to its bosom, and enfolds in its heart of love.

Proceeding to refer to the progress of the Gospel among the dark and degraded nations of the earth, the speaker took no pessimistic view of things. He remarked upon the great advance of the past hundred years. If there are nine millions of Christians to-day in India, there was only one to start the work a hundred years ago. If we work on at that ratio for another hundred years, we shall have absorbed all the Mohammedans, all the Hindus, and the other portions of the population, over and over again, including any possible increase in the population. Three hundred years ago England took an active part in the traffic in slaves; a hundred years ago she washed her hands of the crime; to-day there is such a feeling of sympathy with the poor natives of Africa that at a meeting of Englishmen in the Mansion House resolutions have been passed against the introduction of weapons of war and strong drinks into the country. These facts were mentioned as showing the disposition of the England to which the mission appeal is made to-day. Professor Gracey went on to offer by way of promoting missionary advance. Not every young man may be called to go forth to a foreign land as a preacher or teacher. But, following the leadings of Providence, many might find their way opened to do effective work for Christ abroad. When young men are wanted in foreign banks or commercial houses, why should not an effort be made to get the posts filled by disciples of Christ? Such young men could do Christian work of the kind they now do at home; and, while not on the list of any society, nor on the funds of any institution, they might largely support the efforts of the missionaries by living Christ in the midst of the heathen darkness. There are Christian men whose individual voice can obtain an appointment in London for anyone they may nominate. If such would combine to assist in realising such a scheme as this, missionaries would not be, as they too often are, alone at their posts, but rather surrounded by bands of faithful fellow-labourers, and the cause of Christ would, at the same time, greatly extend.

Mr. J. A. STONEHAM, of Beckenham, urged the responsibility of Christians in the matter of world-wide evangelisation. Mr. BARRELL, a Pastors' College student, who is preparing for work abroad, spoke on the qualifications for the foreign field. His estimate was a very high one; if he ever keeps it before him, he is not likely to err in self-confidence, nor to overlook the fact that our sufficiency is of God. Rev. D. J. EAST, for many years missionary in Jamaica, told of the triumphs of the Gospel among the coloured people of that island. His deeply interesting story went to show that missionaries who have indeed been born of God, and walk in the Spirit, may calculate upon God's blessing upon their labours.

The young men were urged to consecrate themselves to the Lord, who was asked graciously to open up the way to service for those who could not yet see their course clear.

TIDINGS FROM KOLAR.

IN a communication dated Kolar, India, Jan. 3, Miss L. H. Anstey writes:—

During the last six months we have had twenty baptisms. Of those baptized fifteen are orphans, and five are from the heathen. On September 8 we had a very interesting baptismal service. A young woman entered my sitting-room, and sank down on the floor quite exhausted from a long walk of eleven miles. She asked for a glass of water, which I gave her, and then she told me her story, which I need not repeat in detail. She listened eagerly to the words spoken to her, and, after confession of sin, with weeping and groaning, she entered into wonderful peace and joy in believing. She is a young woman of very superior mental powers, and remarkable intelligence.

On December 1 a Brahmin "guree," or priest, was immersed. I have already informed you of his conversion. On the 29th we had six baptisms—three of our orphan lads and three from the heathen.

Death has also been busy in our midst during the past year. A lad of eighteen died suddenly of heart disease. He attracted Dr. Murray Mitchell's special notice by his great powers of mental arithmetic. A very clever, studious lad, he was much disappointed at the doctor's order to leave off study. He was very patient. Many gathered round his coffin, and some of his friends and old companions came from a great distance. Men and women wept aloud as they stood around the open grave. One young man was bowed down to the earth with grief as he cried out. If it had not been for the departed youth, he said, he would never have been there to learn the way of salvation. Whilst the lad was at the Madras Hospital he made acquaintance with this young man, and, finding that he was an orphan, he wrote for permission to bring him with him on his return to Kolar.

COLOURED PEOPLE OF THE STATES

SERIOUS complications are on the horizon of our politics concerning the social, political, and religious status of the freed man. A noted senator from the South has lately introduced a Bill to appropriate 5,000,000 dollars to pay the fare of all negroes willing to return to Africa. Before this Bill is even considered a report comes from the negroes sent by the United States to Liberia that after the three months' provisions were consumed, they were in a state equal, if not in some cases worse than, the savage in the interior. This mistaken senator says his Bill is in the interests of the American negro, who will always be a menial in the United States; but, if he returns to Africa, he will become a great civilising and Christianising force. If the coloured man had no ballot in the United States, there would be no project to transport him; but because he has, trouble is feared if he exercises the right of universal suffrage.

Recently a coloured clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church was sent to his new appointment; but, when he reached it, was warned to leave immediately, and, refusing, was attacked by masked white men, and nearly killed. Now it appears he is a British subject, and has entered a complaint at Washington for protection to himself and family, and punishment to his enemies. Grave statesmen shake their heads over the social problem awaiting solution. (Rev.) N. C. ALGER.

SEAMEN'S REST, PORT SAID.

DEAR SIR,—I have received a letter from Mrs. Locke, whose husband is superintendent of the coffee-house at the Seamen's Rest, Port Said. She says:—

"The opportunities of usefulness are unlimited, and, although the Consul does not recognise this place, and will not allow the seamen to board and lodge here, according to Commander Brenton's idea in opening the place, yet the Lord has sent along some very remarkable cases of deep interest for us to look after and take care of. The man-o'-war lads have made good use of the reading-room. We have had some very cheering times with passengers passing through, and a great number of missionaries have taken the opportunity of having prayer and singing while resting here for a few hours. Our Sunday evening meetings have been times of much blessing. We have had as many as forty-six present. You would rejoice if you could see these men listening to the story of Jesus.

"We have had some very direct answers to prayer, and have been blessed beyond our highest expectations. The leading of the last year fills us with hope and confidence for the future. Any books or papers for distribution will be used to the very best advantage."

There are few mission stations that need more the sympathy of English Christians than Port Said. This Seamen's Rest is but a feeble light in the midst of the darkness of this port, but it is an effort to keep the Gospel light burning that we should not disregard. A temperance coffee-house, in a place where all sorts of alcoholic drinks abound, is a harbour of refuge to the English sailor.—Very truly yours,

M. A. LLOYD.

IT would not do justice to the United Evangelistic Association to omit from our survey of its ramifications which is diligently, and withal successfully, carried on. Not having seen it myself, however, I cannot do better than let Mr. Mackeith (who knows the work intimately) tell his own tale, in his own interesting way:—

THE NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

"This part of our work, which lifts the veil from the saddest phase of city life, is the one we have least pleasure in commenting on. Starting originally with the idea of rescuing boys and girls who had left home from such causes as parental severity, petty thefts, evil companionship, or desire for freedom, we have been led on to include in our efforts those, bordering on manhood and womanhood, just leaving the paths of rectitude; and, in combination with free-breakfast workers, even to hold out a helping hand to those who have gone far in the practice of vice.

"Now that our intentions are well known, many come to the Tent Hall purposely to give themselves up; others are brought to us by sympathising friends, or by those who have themselves been rescued; and a still larger number, particularly children, are found by us on the streets after twelve o'clock at night, or huddled together on wooden stairs, under packing boxes in courts, in old unused haylofts, or empty houses. All willing to return to their homes we take there, and embrace the opportunity thus afforded of dealing with the parents. Those under fourteen years, unwilling to go home, we place under the care of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The large class who are over fourteen, and therefore can defy School Board and Prevention of Cruelty officers, and even the police, so long as they evade detection in importuning, we try to put in the way of earning an honest livelihood. Not unfrequently are our hearts saddened by the request from mere children that they may be sent away for five years in order to escape the hunger, rags, dirt, and drunken brutality that they know await them if they return to the hovel called their home.

"Perhaps the most depressing featured of our streets at midnight is the number of young girls, between fourteen and eighteen years of age, who perambulate the slums in groups of four or five—sometimes more—often arm in arm, singing and shouting. This is one of the chief sources of that stream of vice which our public authorities and Christian workers are trying in vain to arrest. These girls are the prey of vicious youths of all classes, and in their turn they become, by the law of retaliation, the ruin of others.

SOME CHARACTERISTIC EXAMPLES.

"Jess belonged to a company of five, whom we had noticed night after night in High-street and Gallowgate. One Sunday morning we stopped the group, but only Jess would speak. The others stood back from us; two of them were tipsy. Jess had a pretty face, but a poor, rickety body. She was just turned fourteen; said her mother was dead, that her father wrought in a slaughter-house, was very drunken, and lived in a model lodging-house. She further told us that she used to live with an uncle and aunt (at an address which we afterwards found to be a false one). For three months previous to our interview she had lived on the streets, sleeping at night on wooden stairs or landings, in the company of the other girls. She promised to meet us at the free Sunday breakfast, and to bring the other girls with her. This she did, bringing three of the four. At the police-office we learned that the uncle and aunt of this poor girl had several convictions standing against them, and that they were then living by robbing drunken men. It was therefore worse than useless to think of her returning to them. So the best thing we could do, under the circumstances, was to get her into a temporary Home, where she stayed for two months. But alas, the approach of Christmas, and the memory of former revellings, proved too strong a temptation for her. She ran off from the Home, telling the other girl, who had gone with her to the Home, that she was going to have the New Year fun in spite of anyone. Sad to say, we have not seen her since.

"Lizzie, one of the tipsy ones, belonged to King-street, City. We called at her home, which was miserable and dirty in the extreme. Her mother said that Lizzie had got beyond her control, and she wished we would get her into one of the Homes, as her sister had gone astray in the same manner. Lizzie was admitted into the Maryhill Home.

"Annie, a poor half-starved consumptive-looking girl, her clothes more ragged than the others, and her hair all matted, said she had lived with Jess on stairs for six weeks; and, poor thing, she looked it. She would do anything or go anywhere. We took her to our temporary Refuge till we should be able to visit her home and investigate her case. Her mother's house was one of the worst we have ever been in. There was no grate. The fire burned between two bricks. A bag thrown over a bundle of straw served for a bed. The only article of furniture in the apartment was a wooden stool. The mother was a dish hawker and said we could 'do what we liked with her daughter as she would not allow her to stay with her.

SHE WAS SUCH A THIEF

that nothing was safe in the house.' We thought, as we looked round the room that she must be a girl of marked ability if she managed to steal anything out of that house. She was got into the Training Home for Domestic Servants, where she proved herself a splendid worker, and now occupies a good situation in town.

"On another midnight expedition we met Ann and Sarah in Candleriggs, at 3 a.m. They said they had arrived two days before from Dundee, having walked all the way, and being strangers, knew not where to go.

"They had slept the previous night in the police-office. They were jute weavers, and said they knew the foreman in one of the jute works here, where they expected to get a job. We took them to the police-office again. The inspector was kind enough to give a cell to themselves for the night. One of our Tent Hall workers being in Dundee at the time, we communicated with her, asking her to call upon their friends. She did so, and found they were respectable people. We got lodgings for the girls, but there they seemed to feel under restraint, and went to a model lodging-house. We found them out, and offered to pay their fare back to Dundee. Sarah accepted; but Ann, her companion, refused, and is now, we fear, leading a life of sin in our city. We have little opportunity in Glasgow of dealing immediately with those whom we find on the streets at midnight, and who may not yet have taken the fatal step, but are as the temporary Refuge referred to above had to be closed for want of funds. If they have gone astray, several places are open for them; but our thorough conviction—the result of long and sad experience—is that the evil ought to be faced at its source, rather than after the resistless tide has cast its helpless victims on the shore."

I hope that the foregoing account will effectually arouse the sympathies of those who have it in their power to help. Taking a general view of the various spheres of labour undertaken by the Association, which have been described in my last six articles, we find that it takes £5 weekly to feed the 1500 hungry children who turn up at the Sabbath dinner; £25 weekly to feed and help in clothing the 450 in the three refuges; 10s. 6d. for every child sent to the country for a fortnight; and for the Night Rescue and Dorcas work a considerable sum is needed. May the Night Refuge soon be opened again for its beneficent work; but this cannot be done unless sympathy takes a practical form. The treasurer of the Association is J. H. N. Graham, Esq., who may be addressed at the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow.

In the description of the "Pilgrim's Progress" lecture, given in my last article (for the details of which, as there stated, I was "indebted to others"), was included a lengthy extract from A CHILD OF FAITH IN AN AGE OF DOUBT—["It is not every man"..."an earthly story with a heavenly meaning."]

I gladly acknowledge its source, of which I was then ignorant; and, having just read the book, am pleased to commend it to my readers, as an inspiring record of a bright and eminently useful young Christian life. It is written by Mr. R. L. Bremner (whose brother, now dead, forms the subject of the memoir), and published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Personalia.

Rev. C. J. Vaughan, Dean of Llandaff and Master of the Temple, has been seriously ill for some time, but is progressing favourably.

Rev. H. Price Hughes, who is suffering from overwork, is resting under doctor's orders. An unknown donor has given £500 towards the funds of the West Central Mission.

Dr. Grattan Guinness and his daughter, Miss Lucy Guinness, have arrived in America by the s.s. City of Paris. Dr. Guinness is resuming his missionary work in the States.

Rev. Thomas Champness reports last week contributions for his Joyful News Mission amounting to over £320. This is one of the largest sums yet announced in a single week, and furnishes a striking proof of the growing popularity of Mr. Champness's work.

Mrs. Osborn has arrived from the Cape, and letters may be forwarded to her at Mayfield, Lancaster-road, Wimbledon. She hopes shortly to commence a series of meetings with a view to awaken interest in the work of the Cape General Mission in this country.

Dr. Cuyler.—Rev. Newman Hall writes to say that the telegraphic report of Dr. Cuyler's resignation must be an error. A letter received from him a days ago states that he had been invalided one Sunday through influenza, but he was at work again with his usual health and energy.

Miss Aurora Ensor, of Withycombe, near Exmouth, a lady who is in her eighty-ninth year, continues to take a class twice every Sunday. Miss Ensor began teaching in the Sunday-school at the age of fourteen, and "hardly remembers having missed a Sunday that the school was open during the last seventy-five years!"—The Lantern.

Rev. Charles M. Woosnam has resigned the living of Kirkby Wiske, in Yorkshire, to accept the post of chaplain to seamen in the Mersey. The duties of this post will be twice as onerous as that of the comfortable living he resigns, and the emolument only half its value. The Mersey Missions to Seamen, of which Mr. Woosnam accepts the charge, has six mission-rooms, with a staff of five readers, and has been working amongst sailors for thirty-three years. A great part of his ministry has been passed amongst sailors and fishermen, with whose special difficulties, sorrows, and infirmities he has a lively sympathy.

STEWARTSTOWN, IRELAND.—Rev. John Elliott is hard at work in co. Tyrone. He is anxious to have a wooden hall that can be moved from place to place. Some friends have already profferred help. It is proposed to construct a building capable of holding 200 or 300 people, at a cost of about £100. Mr. J. Townsend Trench recently visited Stewartstown, and lectured on "The Evidences of Christianity." He expressed an earnest hope that God's people would encourage Mr. Elliott in his mission.

For the Young.

A RACE FOR LIFE IN A BLIZZARD.

By REV. EGERTON YOUNG.*

I HAD started on one of my long winter trips to visit the few little bands of Indians who were struggling for an existence on the eastern coast of Lake Winnipeg, and who were always glad to welcome the missionary. To keep down expenses I went with only a young Indian lad as my companion. As he was good and true, I thought we could succeed, since I had been several years in the country, and had faced many a wintry storm, and slept many nights in the snow.

We had with us two splendid trains of dogs. The largest and most enduring of the eight was "Jack," whose place was second in my train, and who is to be the hero of this adventure. We had left our camp fire in the woods early in the morning, and, turning our faces toward the north, hoped that ere the shadows of night fell, at least sixty miles of the frozen surface of Lake Winnipeg would have been travelled over.

For a time we were able to push on very rapidly, keeping the distant points of headlands well in view for our guidance. The dogs get so accustomed to these long trips, and to their work, that they require no guide to run on ahead, but will, with wonderful intelligence, push on from point to point with great exactness.

On and on we had travelled for hours. The cold was very great, but we could easily jump off from our dog sleds and run until we felt the glow and warmth of such vigorous exercise. After awhile we noticed that the strong wind which had arisen was filling the air with fine dry snow, and making travelling very difficult and unpleasant. Soon it increased to a gale, and we found ourselves in a real north-west blizzard, on stormy Lake Winnipeg, many miles from shore.

Perhaps our wisest plan would have been, at the commencement of the storm, to have turned sharply to the east, and got into the shelter of the forest as quickly as possible; but the bay we were crossing was a very deep one, and the headland before us seemed as near as the other end of the bay, so we thought it best to run the risk, and push on. That we might not get separated from each other, I fastened what we call the tail-rope of my sled to the collar of the head dog of Alec's train.

After Alec and I had travelled on for several hours, no sign of any land appearing, we began to think that the fickle blizzard was playing us one of its tricks, and that we had wandered far into the lake. We stopped our dogs out there in the blinding, bewildering storm. "Alec!" I shouted, "I am afraid we are lost." "Yes, missionary, we are surely lost." We talked about our position, and both had to confess that we did not really know where we were, or which way we ought to go. The result of our deliberation was that we could do no better than trust in the good Providence above us, and in our dogs before us.

As it was now mid-day, and the exercise of the last few hours had made us very hungry, we opened our provision bags, and, taking out some frozen food, made a fairly good attempt to satisfy the keen demands of appetite. After our hasty meal we held a short consultation, and it became more and more evident that our position was a very perilous one, as we were becoming blinded by the driving particles of fine snow that stung our eyeballs, and added much to our bewilderment.

I had a good deal of confidence in my dogs, as I had proved their sagacity. To Jack, the noblest of them all, I looked to lead us out of our difficulty; and he did not disappoint our expectations. As the dogs crowded round us at dinner they were not neglected, and with them we shared the food we had, as there was a great uncertainty whether another meal would ever be required by any one of us.

Jack had come close to me, and while we were eating our dinners I had a talk with him. "Jack, my noble fellow," I said, "do you know that we are lost, and that it is very doubtful whether we shall ever see the Mission-house again? The prospect is that the snow will soon be our winding-sheet, and that loving eyes will look in vain for our return. The chances are against your ever having the opportunity of stretching yourself out on the wolf-rug before the study fire. Rouse yourself, old dog, for in your intelligence we are going to trust to lead us to a place of safety."

The few arrangements necessary for the race were soon made. Alec wrapped himself as comfortably as possible in his rabbitskin robe. I tied a rope from the end of my sled to the collar of his leader dog, so that our trains might not get separated. Then I straightened out the trains, and, wrapping myself as well as I could on my sled, I shouted "March" to the dogs.

I had as leader dog the intelligent white Esquimaux "Koona." As I shouted the word for "Go," he turned his head, and looked at me as though bewildered, and seemed to be waiting for "Chaw" or "Yee," the words for "right" and "left." As I did not know myself, I shouted to Jack, who was second in the train, "Go on, Jack, whichever way you like, and do the best you can, for I do not know anything about it." As Koona still hesitated, Jack, with all the confidence imaginable, dashed off in a certain direction, and Koona, with slackened traces, ran beside him, very willing to give him all the honour of leadership.

For hours the dogs kept bravely to their work. The storm raged and howled around us, but not for one moment did Jack hesitate or seem to be at fault. Koona had nothing to do but run beside him; but the other two splendid dogs in the traces behind Jack seemed to catch his spirit, and nobly aided him by their untiring efforts. The cold was so intense that I had grave fears lest we should freeze to death. We were obliged so to wrap ourselves up that it was impossible to run with any comfort, or to keep up with the dogs whilst going at such a rapid rate. Frequently would I shout back to my comrade, "Alec! don't go to sleep; if you do you may never wake until the judgment morning." Back would come the reponse, "All right, sir, I'll try to keep awake."

Thus on we travelled through the wintry storm. After a while the shadows of night fell, and we were enshrouded in the darkness. It was not a pleasant position to be in, but there was no help for it, nor any use in giving way to despondency or despair. A sweet peace filled my soul, and in a blessed restfulness of spirit my heart was kept stayed upon God. With an occasional shout of warning to Alec to keep awake, and a cheering call to the dogs, who required no special urging, so gallantly were they doing their work, we patiently hung on to our sleds and awaited the result. We were now in the gloom of night, dashing along I know not where, and not even able at times to see the dogs before us.

About three hours after dark the dogs quickened their space into a gallop, and showed by their excitement that they had detected evidence of nearness to the shore and safety, of which as yet I knew nothing. Soon after they dragged us over a large pile of broken ice and snow, the accumulations cut out of the holes in the lake where the Indian families had obtained their supply of water. Turning sharply on the trail towards the shore, our dogs dashed along for a couple of hundred yards more. Then they dragged us up a steep bank into the forest, and after a few minutes of rapid travelling, we found ourselves in the midst of a little collection of wigwams, and among a band of friendly Indians, who gave us a cordial welcome, and rejoiced with us at our escape from the storm, which was the severest of the year.

Making all the visits we had arranged for that trip, we returned home. Months after, when the packet arrived from Manitoba, the sad news of the death of the heroic George Macdougall reached us. Out on the wide prairies he had been caught in a blizzard storm. Horse and man seemed to have become bewildered, and there a noble missionary to the Indians on the great plains laid himself down to die. His frozen body was not found till after fourteen days of diligent search. After my wife and I had read the story, and talked and wept about his death, she said to me: "Where were you during that week?" The journal was searched, and we were not a little startled at finding that the race for life which I have described was in all probability on the same day as that on which Rev. George Macdougall perished.

MR. NEWTON JONES has been holding mission services for young people and adults at Wingrave and Aston Abbotts, two villages near Aylesbury. The meetings have been well attended, and a very deep interest shown. Mr. Jones has also held a week's mission at Bignold Hall, Forest Gate.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Feb. 16, Matt. xi. 16—30; Mon., Feb. 17, Matt. xii. 1—13; Tues., Feb. 18, Matt. xii. 14—30; Wed., Feb. 19, Matt. xii. 31—50; Thurs., Feb. 20, Matt. xiii. 1—17; Fri., Feb. 21, Matt. xiii. 18—30; Sat., Feb. 22, Matt. xiii. 31—43.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

THE Mission of Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, though undenominational, and not receiving the support of any church organisation, has a place in the sympathy and interest of not a few warm-hearted Christians. The endeavours are varied, and the place is a fruitful centre of Gospel life and testimony. During last year the public services were well sustained, and it is believed that much good was accomplished through the instrumentality of the evangelists and others who conducted the meetings.

On Saturday afternoons there is a service specially for children; during the summer months Gospel addresses are delivered in the open air; special missions are organised, and Bible-classes and prayer-meetings are held regularly. During the winter months educational lectures of a popular character are delivered. The poor and destitute are not lost sight of; but Sunday morning breakfasts and occasional free teas are provided for them. This and similar work of a temporal character has been sustained with much difficulty, owing to the large amount of distress witnessed by Christian workers in the district.

The report for last year gives the following account, by one of the workers connected with the Hall, of the premature death of a poor woman whose steady husband—himself a picture of hunger and wretchedness—was painfully afflicted with rheumatism:—"It was our happy privilege to send in supplies of food now and again to supplement the scanty earnings of his brave wife, who was doing her best to earn bread enough for both, until, from exhaustion mainly occasioned by want of nourishment, she sank and left him alone to fight the battle of life. Cases of this sort may be met with every day. How one longs to search out these hidden ones and minister to them, not only the bread which perisheth, but also the 'Bread of Life.' Surely there is no greater honour, or more blessed service." The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. W. M. Seaman, Tower House, West-hill, Putney.

EAST-END CHURCHES.

MR. A. G. BROWN'S "RECORD."

FROM the "Record of Service" just issued by Pastor A. G. Brown we make the following extracts:—

"Ten years have passed since, in reliance upon God, we commenced our outside mission work. Little did we dream, when starting a small fund for the relief of the special distress around us, that, instead of it being a temporary effort, it would continue for years and grow to the present dimensions. The work has spread its roots and shot out its boughs to the amazement of the writer. From being 'a little extra' to our pastoral and ministerial work, it has become a great piece of machinery that demands almost incessant thought and ceaseless service. In no spirit of boastfulness—for the burden crushes boasting out—we ask our readers to bear in mind that we have a larger load to carry than many a 'Society.' Had not the increase been gradual, and the work and the man grown up together, it would be impossible for one to manage all, and to do so without any staff of clerks to assist. The strain is, however, very severe, and has told upon us in many ways.

"In no measure have we allowed the outside work to interfere with the preaching of the Gospel and the careful study of the Word of God. Preacher first and philanthropist second is our motto. The 'second' has, however, become so large that all the strength we possess is taxed to the utmost...The development of the work is, we believe, of God. Each additional branch of service has come to us unsought. To the praise of God be it said, with the demand has come the supply. Though the expenditure for the year exceeds five thousand pounds, there is not a penny owing anywhere."

After a description of "The Christian Buildings," the acquisition and opening of which have already been recorded in our columns, an account is given of the Seaside Home at Herne Bay, where some three hundred poor Londoners enjoyed a stay during 1889. There is a Girls' Home at Sheering, Essex, a pretty secluded spot, where girls are housed and trained, and other good work goes on. A Boys' Home near Bishops Stortford, and a Boys' Orphan Home, are other parts of the working machinery of this live church, and their valued operations are set forth. The Record also contains the very graphic letter that appeared in The Daily Telegraph last October, from the pen, we imagine, of Mr. Bennet Burleigh, the special East-end commissioner of that journal. As to the "General Work," Mr. Brown says:—

"This goes on the same as ever. One day is much like another. The only difference is that sometimes the shadows lie darker than another. This is the work that tries the heart—the daily deadly fight with poverty, misery, and sorrow. 'The Homes' provide our recreation—this our travail. We are persuaded that no one can engage in the struggle day by day for months and years together, and 'take to heart' what he sees, without becoming either hardened or wounded in spirit. Ten years of this are responsible for most of our grey hairs. There is a dull dead level about the whole thing which can only be understood after years of practical experience. 'New hands' make a rush at mission work, and talk brightly about success for a few months, specially when it is only an evening or occasional service rendered. Let them try it, however, every day and all day long. Let them hear tales of wretched sorrow from morning to night. Let their ears be pounded like ocean shore with a ceaseless succession of waves of sorrow. Let them look out and see that far as sight can travel the waves are rolling in—no hope of the last one coming; and a sense of utter weariness will oppress them, and only the constraining love of Christ will hold them constant. At least this is our experience.

"There is a terrible and depressing 'sameness.' The story you listen to, you have heard in all its chief particulars a thousand times before. The words—'death,' 'rent,' 'broker,' 'sickness,' 'sewing-machine,' 'children,' fall upon the ear with painful regularity, all the more painful when you know the full meaning of the words. The hard struggle of life is so intense with multitudes that only to hear it tires the heart. Yet how blessed is the mission of ministering to misery? There is a sweet sad joy that no mere onlooker can imagine. To wipe a tear is to find a smile. To lift a burden is to gain a rest. To hush a sigh is to hear a song. To drag from the cold flood is to gain a tingling warmth in one's own blood.

"Former Records have given at length accounts of our house-to-house visitation by our well-trained and consecrated missionaries. This 'backbone' of our work is maintained the same as ever. Nothing can ever take its place or prove a substitute. No 'new departure' or 'forward movement' can afford to dispense with this. Prosaic to a degree, it is a vital essential. The room-to-room visitors are the Pawns upon the board. They give strength to Knights and Bishops too, and bear the brunt of the conflict. No real mission work can be carried on without them amongst the poorest of the people. These must be grasped for Christ in their own rooms. Every practical worker knows only too well that all the great gatherings of past years—not excluding the magnificent meetings of dear Mr. Moody—have consisted almost entirely of the respectable class. The sunken poor do not rise to the religious surface. The pearl-fishers who would rescue them must dive into the depths and grip them one by one. This year we have added a sister to our staff, whose one work is to visit the sick. It is impossible for a brother with a large district to pay the frequent visits that a sick case needs. Now a list of such is kept by each worker, and the names handed over to our 'sick visitor.' These she looks after, helps to make them comfortable, takes them beef tea, &c., which she has made herself, and which they have neither the appliances nor knowledge to make for themselves. At the present time her hands are more than full, through the prevailing epidemic."

Mr. Brown's home address, we may add, is 22, Bow-road, London, E.

REV. W. E. HURNDALL'S WORK.

In a booklet entitled "From Room to Room," Rev. W. Evans Hurndall gives some account of his varied work in East London. The title indicates the fundamental character of the operations. To help the poor you must know them; to know them you must visit them personally and regularly. Mr. Hurndall says:—

"To face sickness, misery, and sin, day by day throughout the year, and to keep bright and hopeful under such an experience, requires a good deal of the best kind of stamina. Our friends have gone on bravely. Many have been the tokens of Divine favour granted to their labours. During the twelve months they have paid 41,291 visits; of these 19,076 were conversational visits of some length, and 22,215 were calls, where there has been opportunity for only a passing word.

"Our staff consists of nine—eight missionaries of our own, and one City missionary. We have besides a little army of more than one hundred voluntary visitors, who make briefer calls at the homes, and circulate large quantities of good literature. The visits of these devoted workers during 1889 have numbered about 150,000. In all we reckon we have some 25,000 people under visitation."

The starting of the new Crèche, at 53, Tredegar-square, Bow, was one of the delights of the year. The number of attendances for the first six months has been 2766. The boon to poor mothers—many of them widows—of being freed for the day in order to earn their living is very great; and the advantage to the children, of having the best food and attention, cannot be over-estimated. The report continues:—

"We have done everything we could to meet the needs of the people. An increasing feature of our work of relief is giving aid in the homes of the poor. We do what we can in saving homes from the broker, taking tools out of pawn, and, of course, do much in giving meat, bread, groceries, &c., to the half-starving. Much help also goes to the sick, of whom we have always a multitude on hand.

"The people's services in the Great Hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute, Bow-road, have entered upon their eighth year, and the interest manifested in them is unabated. They meet a real need. It is a joy after taking two services, and sometimes more, at Harley-street, to go at 8.30 p.m. to the Hall, and find there an expectant congregation consisting very largely of those who do not attend any place of worship. We are starting a Workers' Society in connection with these services, seeking to enlist the activities of the more regular attendants."

Among the many other efforts is an emigration fund. Mr. Hurndall's address is 16, Cottage-grove, Bow, E., and we trust he will during the present year have an accession of earnest helpers in the war he is waging against sin and misery.

MR. MATHIESON'S SUCCESSOR.

DEAR SIR,—Ten years ago (within a very few weeks) my predecessor here, Hon. R. Moreton, informed your readers of my appointment by the Mildmay trustees to the superintendence of the Conference Hall. It now devolves upon me to intimate to the friends and helpers of these Institutions that the trustees have offered the same post to Colonel J. F. Morton, lately in command of the 55th (Borderer) Regiment, and that he has accepted it, in reliance upon God's help, and looking for the prayers and sympathy of the Lord's people.

After so many years of happy service here, in unbroken fellowship with a large number of fellow-workers, I would give thanks thus publicly to God for his sustaining grace, and acknowledge with sincere gratitude my personal obligations to the very large circle of ministers of Christ, foreign missionaries, and private Christians, for their ready response to frequent calls to service in conferences and other meetings. I would further seek for my successor the same cordial help and practical co-operation which have been so freely and cordially rendered hitherto. They will find Colonel Morton worthy of their confidence and support.

Yours sincerely, JAMES E. MATHIESON.

Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, London, N.

P.S.—We hope to have an evening meeting in the Conference Hall on Friday, March 28, to welcome Colonel and Mrs. Morton.

ORPHAN APPRENTICE HOME, BATH.—Many of the former inmates of this Home (Upland Cottage, Bathwick-hill) are to-day on the road to prosperity. On account of some of the elder lads having passed out of the Home last year, the receipts under the head of earnings showed a decrease. The Home is the centre of a good and noble work, and we regret to hear that it has not so many friends and supporters as it deserves and requires. Mrs. Clarkson, the superintendent, will be glad to answer inquiries.

THE LETTER MISSION, CLAPHAM, in a little report of its work, mourns over the resignation of the esteemed and devoted superintendent, on account of ill-health, after ten years' service. The workers have endeavoured to carry on the work on the same lines, and the Lord still owns and blesses the Mission. During the past year they have not had quite so many inquirers, yet many have been led to decision, and others to fully consecrate themselves to the Lord—spirit, soul, and body devoted to his service. Testimonies could be given from backsliders and half-hearted Christians, who have been restored and helped to a full surrender and a closer Christian walk.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

BY some inadvertence apparently, The Christian of January 31 seemed to give its endorsement to oft-repeated charges against the British and Foreign Bible Society of such a character that they would long since have lost it most of its supporters, had they been true. There was nothing to show that the sheet headed Supplement to the Christian was only an advertisement. In this way, besides calling attention to its own publications, the Trinitarian Bible Society, so to speak, committed The Christian to a co-partnership in a wilful defamation of the British and Foreign Bible Society, of which the Court of Queen's Bench might be asked to take notice.

In a variety of forms, and for a long series of years, these charges have been persistently repeated and scattered broadcast at home and in the Colonies. The verdict of the great body of the Christian Church has been that they are too ill-founded or overstated to deserve attention. They have not had their intended effect in enriching the assailing Society to any considerable extent in followers and funds. They have not transferred to its ranks distinguished scholars and earnest Christians who were in a position to test their truth and gauge their merits.

The accused Society is entitled to point to strong Protestants, like its late President, the Earl of Shaftesbury, who vindicated its circulation of De Sacy where no other version would be believed to be a genuine Bible. It is entitled to ask whether his Lordship was a man, for sinful expediency's sake, to sell his conscience to promote the circulation of Bibles intentionally falsified in the interests of Rome. It is entitled to point to scholars of unswerving integrity, and the highest eminence in textual criticism, like its late Vice-President, Bishop Lightfoot of Durham, and to ask whether such men would have given their advocacy to a Society which was palming off upon poor souls groping after salvation spurious Bibles intended to confirm them in their errors.

It is entitled to challenge a comparison for number and reputation, for learning and integrity, for Protestant convictions and Christian zeal, between its adherents and its assailants of over half a century, and to ask whether the latter have been so pre-eminent as to be entitled to destroy all confidence in the conscientiousness and judgment of the former. Have the Presidents, the Vice-Presidents, the successive annual Committees, and the executive officers of the British and Foreign Bible Society, indeed been so wilfully regardless of what was right in the sight of the God Whom they were professing to serve, that these critics are warranted in denouncing them to the Christian public as in effect unscrupulous traitors—men who have forsaken the fundamental principles of their Society to substitute the fabrications of Popes for the Word of Truth?

It is essential thus to remember the intimate connection between the practices alleged against the British and Foreign Bible Society and the character of its responsible managers all along. For some of the chief points involved in these allegations are such that they cannot be personally sifted by the majority of those to whom they have been submitted in The Christian. They see some fragments of texts cited as specimens of the "corruptions" foisted (it is alleged) upon the Bible within the last three hundred years "to make God support" the vital errors of the Romish Church. They are given to understand that these "corruptions" belong only to the "Clementine Vulgate" of 1592, and make it quite a different book from the Vulgate of Jerome in the fourth century after Christ. They are assured that the Committee of the Bible Society, inasmuch as the qualification for serving on it "was chiefly a money payment" (!) had within eight years of its formation become so degenerate that they "adopted these corrupted and falsified versions and sent them abroad as the Word of God." How are they to judge fairly as to the truth and value of these assurances?

How many readers of The Christian can even decide whether the meaning given in English to these cited fragments reproduces the sense of the original Latin or the impressions suggested to Frenchmen, or Portuguese, or Poles (for example) when they read these passages in their vernacular Bibles and with their contexts? Pastor Chiniquy has told us how little De Sacy in French influenced him in the way in which it is alleged that God's Word was tampered with to make it do. He has told us that he would on no account have read a "Protestant" Bible, and how De Sacy's version brought him out of Rome. His case has been that of multitudes, and no counter-proof of an opposite kind has ever been produced.

How many of The Christian's readers can compare the wording of these passages in the versions circulated by the Bible Society with the Latin of the Clementine Vulgate of 1592, and that again with Jerome's, to test the accuracy of the Trinitarian Society's advertisement? If a few can sift its statements no further than by referring to

Gen. iii. 15, in Wyclif's translation from the Vulgate in 1380, two hundred years before the "falsified" Clementine Vulgate, they will find that "she" was already there; and if any have access to Sabatier's collation, they will find that the reading ipsa is older than Jerome himself! It was not inserted to support a Mariolatry which had not then arisen. The Hebrew word is of common gender, and in verse 12, close by, certainly means she! The Romish note to the Douay version says that, whether we read ipsa or ipsum, the meaning is the same in the end, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ. An examination of all the specimens adduced in the advertisement will bring any scholar to the conclusion that they were not purposely altered in the "Clementine Vulgate" from the older Latin versions. And a study of Canon Westcott's article on the Vulgate in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible will dispose of the object attributed to Clement's version. So much for the reliability of the ingeniously constructed story of the source and aim of the British and Foreign Bible Society's Vulgate versions given in the Supplement to The Christian.

But to revert. How many of the readers of that paper have been trained to compare ancient manuscripts, or to judge how far a few samples of a copyist's or a translator's mistakes justify the branding of a whole version as a dishonest reproduction of the Word of God? How many of them have had practical experience of the impossibility of always turning the words and idioms of one language into precise equivalents in another of a different kind? When they read the disparaging contrast made to discredit all "Roman Catholic versions," on the ground that they are "translations of another translation," do they know, on the one hand, that the same slur, if it be one, could be thrown on Robert Moffat's Sechuana Bible, for example, and, on the other, that the German Bible for Roman Catholics, circulated by the Bible Society, is not a translation of a translation, but was made by Roman Catholics from the Hebrew and the Greek? Such questions might easily be multiplied. They illustrate the difficulties which most ladies and general readers must have in fairly judging of matters on which a trained scholar and translator alone can decide. They show the impropriety (to use no stronger term) of trying to snatch a popular verdict against a great Society by an exaggerated caricature of its books in a newspaper advertisement.

In their perplexity, it may reassure those who have to trust the testimony of others to be reminded, as has been done, of the standing and character of the men down to the present day who are charged in this advertisement with having adopted "corrupted and falsified versions, and sent them abroad as the Word of God." The advertisement itself allows that even our English Bible, after all the labours of the most devout and erudite scholars, "like all things that man touches, is marked by imperfections." If any reader will compare the successive translations of the Psalms as they are found in the Prayer Book, in the Authorized Version, and in the Revised one, he need not go to Roman Catholic versions to find additions, omissions, and alterations in what different translators have taken to be the original words and their meaning in the Inspired Volume. He will find verses from the Old Testament cited in the New by our Lord and His Apostles as God's Word, although they differ by additions, omission, and alterations from our Hebrew text, and usually follow a version which included the Apocrypha.

No version of Scripture is free from variations, and from what later scholars may be able to say are errors. The British and Foreign Bible Society has never professed that any of its versions were faultless, but it can affirm with confidence that such mistakes as may be found in the small group of translations made by Roman Catholics, which it issues for a few special fields, are not wilful errors introduced since 1546 purposely to mislead their readers. It never inserts the notes, which give, in some cases, a Romish interpretation to a passage which does not of itself necessarily convey such a sense. And in the few places where it appears desirable to supply the reader with a literal rendering of the Hebrew or Greek, this has been done in the margin now for a good many years in all the Society's versions from the Vulgate.

If the advertising columns of a newspaper are ill-suited for the discussion of details of Biblical scholarship of some intricacy, still more are they so for entering upon an inquiry into the exact meaning of some solemn texts, chiefly from the Old Testament, and into their bearing on a Christian translator's duty in a complex case. Texts may easily be adduced which seem to decide a problem in a particular way. They need comparison with other texts, and weighing in the balances of an enlightened conscience, schooled in humility and prayer. The God of the Bible is also the God of Providence, and with all the wonderful care He has taken in the preservation of His Word, it has already been conceded by our critics that He has not lifted it above the touch of human imperfections. No infallible standard original of the Bible has come from heaven. No infallible translation of it has been sent us in any language. Be it said, with all devout reverence, that it is clear as a matter of fact that God has not deemed it essential to make the spiritual power of His Book turn upon its consisting of a contents so absolutely correct as to be unquestionable down to single words; nor yet upon a rendering into all languages, such as to be absolutely identical in the sense given to every expression throughout. He has foreseen and provided for some uncertainties as to the exact words or the exact meaning here and there. The English Authorized Version of Num. xxiv. 3 may make Balaam call himself "the man whose eyes are open," and the English Revised Version may put it "the man whose eye was closed"; the latter may say "the Evil One" where the former had "evil" in the Lord's Prayer; the former may have in Rev. xxii. 14, "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life," and the Revised Version may give the same verse thus, "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life," and again the Vulgate in Latin, and De Sacy in French, may be still more full and explicit by adding to wash "in the Blood of the Lamb"; and not one of these variations may diminish a hair's breadth the trustworthiness of the versions as a whole, or bring them under the ban of the verses about adding to and taking from God's own words.

A version of the Bible is not like a problem in mathematics where the error of a figure destroys the value of a whole calculation. The Holy Spirit does not refuse to guide an anxious soul to the living Saviour now through a particular version, because it may happen in Heb. xi. 21 to understand the passage as the Septuagint translators 1,800 years before Pope Clement VIII. understood Genesis xlvii. 31, telling us that three or four thousand years ago Jacob "worshipped the top of his rod." Our Lord's own analogy between "the wind" and "the Spirit" (John iii. 8) still holds good, and the Annual Reports of the British and Foreign Bible Society have for some seventy or eighty years been recording God's own proofs that its Vulgate versions are not the daring tampering with His truth or the trampling upon His commands which some controversialists aver that they must be. They do not lead men into Mariolatry. Each year, through the Spirit's use of them, they guide heavy-laden souls to the Lord Jesus. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

These considerations go to the root of the whole matter. It is not some mere petty quarrel between two Bible Societies, or a nice balancing of principle and expediency. It is a question touching the Divine plans for the salvation of man, and the human instrumentalities through which the omniscient God is pleased to work for that end. He has not ceased to save men through the Authorised Version because a more accurate one in English is now available.

As for the semi-fictitious history given of the downward course of the British and Foreign Bible Society to 1831, there is nothing new or disquieting to those who have long been familiar with the misapplied quotations and perverted facts which have been refuted and yet reiterated till they are scarcely worth notice. Versions from the Vulgate have been continuously circulated since 1812. The Society was then still guided by its original President, Treasurer, and Secretaries, as well as by a large proportion of its original Committee. The Monthly Extracts of May 31, 1831, the official record of the Annual Meeting at which Captain Gordon endeavoured to add certain test restrictions to the original catholic constitution of the British and Foreign Bible Society, contains, on p. 490, the following note:—"From the nature of the discussion, it was evidently impressed on the speaker's mind that Socinians had taken part in the management of the Parent Society. It may, therefore, be necessary to state that no person holding such sentiments has ever been on the Elected Committee, or been known to attend their meetings as a privileged Member." With the vanishing of "Socinians on the Committee," whether as elected members, or among those admitted to the privilege of attending its meetings through other qualifications than election, the figment that prayer was excluded out of deference to their presence falls to the ground. Official documents of the Trinitarian Bible Society of the period allow that it was only a possibility that Socinians might some day appear in the Committee room.

It was only vocal prayer, too, as similar contemporary documents abundantly show, which was excluded, and that, it is well known, was out of deference to the solemn views on that subject which were then held by members of the Society of Friends. There was silent and individual prayer, though there was not collective oral prayer. The letter of Lord Teignmouth, the President, read at the Annual Meeting in 1831, appeals beautifully to the spirit of prayer in the members of the Society, and bears witness to his Lordship's invariable pleading on its behalf in his own "daily devotions."

Speaker after speaker at the meeting in 1831 was careful to define the sense in which it was maintained that the Society was "not a Religious one." "It is a Religious Society," they said again and again, in one sense. But it is not a Church; it has no ministers, creeds, or liturgies. The way in which half a sentence is quoted and the other half, making its right meaning clear, is omitted here is only one example out of many of the Trinitarian Bible Society's methods of misrepresentation.

As for the quotations from Browne's "History" and other documents, it would be mere waste of time and space to show here in detail how different is their sense in their original context from the complexion they are made to wear in the setting given them in the Trinitarian Bible Society's pamphlets. Any one who takes the trouble to study the full early history of the Bible Society in Owen, will probably have little difficulty in satisfying himself that the field from which the founders of the Society had at first supposed they would be excluded was the circulation of Scriptures of any kind among Roman Catholics abroad. The possibility of it came upon them as a surprise. Feeling their way in an untried work, they naturally at first tried to accomplish it with the only versions they had originally thought of producing. He will discover that the chief point twice discussed, and decided finally in the negative, was whether an Auxiliary (that at Nuremberg) could be permitted on its own authority to alter the terms of a formal vote of the Parent Society's Committee. And so on.

Lastly, if the student of past history pursues his inquiries into the implied continuity of the Trinitarian Bible Society, he will discover that at its origin it had nothing to say against Vulgate versions, for Captain Gordon, whose zeal for religious tests gave the occasion for its formation, "always reckoned it one of his greatest Reformation achievements that by availing himself of powerful influence he succeeded in inducing the Roman Catholic Archbishop Murray to license the circulation of the Douay Bible for the use of the Roman Catholics in Ireland" (Record newspaper, April 27, 1881). In 1831 it as little contemplated its present work as the British and Foreign Bible Society had originally done its special work for Roman Catholics abroad. To sift the Trinitarian history of its negotiations with the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1881, or to test the accuracy of its most recent accounts of its Breton version "from the originals," will yield further discoveries to the inquirer in search of facts.

But enough. The British and Foreign Bible Society will, by God's grace and blessing, still hold on its way in faith and patience, in prayer and diligence, striving according to its means to extend the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ and to hasten His day. Will the readers of The Christian enlarge those means?

I need only add that there has been no opportunity for submitting this paper to my Committee, and that they are not responsible for its contents in detail.

Isabella Macpherson:

The Story of a Devoted Life.*

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER XII.—"ONE BY ONE."

It is easier to preach to a thousand than to one. The enthusiasm that is no wise dependent on numbers or publicity is noble and Christ-like. Happy is the worker who would a thousand times rather win a soul than win the plaudits of ten thousand! Dealing with individuals is the most difficult work: it needs a rare combination of wisdom, love, and patience. Face to face with a human soul in all its pride and subtilty, you quickly discover your own ignorance and weakness. You are hunting a spirit; grasping the shadow of a shade. If you would know what sin really is in its falseness, its evasiveness, its desperateness, its infinite resources, angelic appearances, and fiendish craftiness—try your hand on some unawakened sinner, or even earnest inquirer. If you can thread the interminable labyrinth of the heart's refuges of lies, and come out again without a fall, or a blunder, or a surprising sense of your own spiritual imbecility, then are you the wisest of mankind.

Isabella Macpherson gave herself to this kind of service; and in the course of her Christian life spoke to over twenty thousand persons, one by one. At her house where she trysted to meet them; in their own homes; at the prayer-meeting and ordinary services of the church; in the inquiry-room; on the outskirts of the open-air gathering; and in the casual intercourse of the street—she found her opportunity, or made it. She dealt with all sorts of persons, from the scholarly divine entangled with modern error; from the most refined of her own sex, down through all the grades—professional men, business men, working-people, servant girls, factory hands, and school children—to the street arabs, the poorest hag of the slums, and the vilest profligate. Nor did she find any material difference, as she often told, between the slum sinner and the genteel sinner; between the mill girl and the learned preacher. Sin can trip gaily in silks and satins, as well as slouch in rags. Self-righteousness can strut in the godless criminal and the profane mocker as proudly as in the church member and the devout formalist. The most illiterate person can bolt the heart's door against Christ with an argument as effectively as the man with a whole library in his head. Sin, the soul's evil genius, puts out the eyes: the devil does the rest.

In dealing with inquirers, Isabella was searching and thorough. "There are strange conversions and queer Christians nowadays," she was wont to say; "they take sin so easy, and conversion seems to come as a matter of course: I can't understand them." The work of guiding the seeker after God—so difficult, so delicate, so vital—is too often done hastily and superficially, and the result is unsatisfactory in the extreme. During her long trouble of soul, our worker had been driven to the Word of God, and shut in to the simple, infallible testimony of the Scriptures. She was no longer dependent on frames and feelings. She had come to know the full meaning of the fundamental question, "What saith the Lord?" To this test she brought everything; to this testimony she always led her inquirers. She had learned in her own experience not a little of the subtle workings of the human heart, deceitful even in the earnest seeker for God and holiness; and she found that the most effective means for bringing the inquirer's difficulties to view and removing them was the Word of God skilfully handled and directly applied. In this important service she was often successful, even in the case of highly educated persons, who are apt to be more sophisticated and warped in their religious thoughts and feelings than the ignorant or illiterate.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. James Valentine & Sons, Dundee.)

One evening in a meeting for inquirers she had a long and searching conversation with a gifted young lady, which resulted in her conversion. Seeing the rock ahead of one possessing the talent of music above her fellows, she advised the lady to abandon fashionable life, to come clean out from the world and consecrate her gift of song to Christ. This she solemnly promised to do.

"Begin then at once; take your stand for Christ; go home and tell your sisters what the Lord has done for you."

"Oh, they will not listen to me, they will only laugh and mock; I cannot do that."

"But whatever they may say or do, you must be faithful to God. Besides, you don't know how they will take it: go you and try."

She went home, spoke to her sisters; and to her astonishment, instead of mocking, they listened with eagerness, became seekers of salvation themselves, and soon after found the Saviour. All those sisters consecrated their talents to God, and ever since have occupied eminent places and rendered invaluable service to the cause of Christ.

Miss B., another young lady of superior education, says:—

"Two years ago I was present at an evangelistic meeting in Hilltown Church. The evangelist took for his text the word Opportunity. As I sat and listened, a strange feeling came over me; and a voice seemed to whisper, 'You have lost many an opportunity of speaking for Jesus, and therefore cannot be a true disciple of His.' I remained to the second meeting, and told Miss. M. my state of mind, and very soon Mrs. Simpson came over, and in a kindly yet surprised manner asked if I were not a Christian. I admitted that I had professed to be a follower of Jesus for three years, but that I now realised that I had not been living as I ought to have done, and had not the assurance of forgiveness. Mrs. Simpson spoke long and earnestly to me that evening, but the only words I remember her saying are, 'Perhaps you are trusting to your frame of mind or to your feelings, and not to Christ Himself?' This was exactly what I was doing; but it was not till next day that I had perfect rest in believing, and at Mrs. Simpson's request I lost no time in informing her of the change. Since that time, whenever I am low-spirited or inclined to give way to my feelings, I remember her words, and am sure to find comfort and peace in my risen Redeemer through his own Word.

"I will remember Mrs. Simpson as long as I live. I loved to be near her. I used to get a blessing when by her side even when she did not speak, it was her kindly manner; and when she did speak it was not so much what she said as the manner in which she said it. Oh, it was good to be beside her!"

* This deeply interesting and stimulating life history is now ready in book form; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; bevelled boards and gilt edges, for presentation, 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.

This last remark of Miss B. shows how much under God depends on the spirit of the worker: instrumentally it is almost everything.

"Maggie, don't take your Christianity from Christians: take it from Christ," she said to a young woman. Maggie was startled by the advice: it was like a new revelation to her, it proved to be a message from God. She had been for some time painfully conscious of living at a "poor dying rate"; but what was the cause or what the remedy she could not find. Now it was flashed upon her; all was plain; she had been content to be and to live like others around. With the new light came new life. In her subsequent course the holy elevation, the spiritual intensity of her character, and her unmurmuring patience, amidst no ordinary sufferings and trials, have shown the source from which since that time she has been taking her Christianity.

Mr. Lethaby in Moab.

THESE devoted and solitary workers, Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby, are doing excellent work in the land of Moab. It is, Mr. Lethaby says, "one of the most beautiful and fertile bits of the earth's surface. But, alas! as of old, there is a 'burden on Moab,' and it can be stated in three letters: S-I-N. That burden upon the land is terribly real; the Turk will not allow the sugar to be grown; the Arab has not the sense to plant and gather the cotton crop; where ten hundred thousand sheep might live, not one hundredth of the number are to be found; where a million quarters of wheat might be given to help to feed your four millions of mouths in London, there are thousands of acres lying idle, and all because sin has specially desolated this goodly and pleasant land. Two great sins of ancient Moab were pride and cruelty. And it is so to-day. A full-grown Arab of these parts, whether he is a sheikh or a beggar, is full of pride from head to foot, and continually shows it. Many of the men are too proud to work, but they are not too proud to steal or to kill; and the cruelty of the fathers is visited on the children 'unto the third and fourth generation.'"

Writing from Kerak on September 20, Mr. Lethaby relates some of his difficulties. "Our native teacher left us a short time ago without bidding good-bye, so now all the work is in our own hands; and we needed further help, even when we had some one. It is astonishing what we have been able to teach the children since their 'teacher' departed. But there have been terribly trying times to us. The Roman Catholics are working hard to build their church, have subsidised the chief's family and the parents of the children; and one day Mrs. Lethaby and I had a tough job. The two brothers who had been taught the most were to follow those who had been stolen from us; the elder one was so unwilling that he would not go home. I could stand it no longer; so my wife and I went to the Latin priest, denounced the conduct before him and all there. Blandly he denied all he had done. I then went to the father of the boys, told how the priest had contradicted the whole, and how that was what he might expect throughout from that source. After dinner the older boy came back and both have been regular ever since, but of course it is like keeping school in an earthquake."

In a letter of a later date, Mr. Lethaby tells of other troubles. "Last Sunday week we had a fearful scene; two Christian tribes hurling big stones, and drawing weapons against one another: as a result, hours of work for Mrs. Lethaby with more than one man, but happily no death. The Moslems came in and separated these Christians (?) who began their struggle at the close of the afternoon prayers. These are some of the little things we have to go through, and trust through! But you can form some idea of the compensatory joy when we have read through for the first time the Gospel of Mark in Arabic to these little ones. While they knew that Jesus was crucified, the narrative was, until this week, unknown; and as after reading the day's verses, I have detailed and impressed the circumstances, it has been a treat to watch the faces and attention of these little Bedouins; Mark xvi. 16, they have added to day to their stock of memorised texts. They now know the whole of the 90th Psalm, and say it beautifully, and are learning Psalm viii. To teach the Bible here is different from teaching it in London; how they revel when a fact or a word really comes home to them! And I can honestly write, how I revel in the work, except when a Mujelli's face glowers over the gate, or people come to appeal for sick ones whom we cannot leave to visit.

"The last few days, while Mrs. Lethaby has been ill, there has been an addition to her work: the Moslem girls have been seized with a desire to come again, and my wife has had ten or eleven of them in the afternoon. I fear Arab girls will not for a long time attend regularly enough to undergo an examination: but they read, do sums, and write a letter, and know more by coming: and we hope it will prepare the way for a better future. We are making fresh effort to get some help here who may be of some service to Mrs. Lethaby in our own house and others."

A friend in Ireland, in sending a donation for the work truly, says: "They are indeed a brave pair, and deserve to helped." Another friend in London writes respecting a helper for Mrs. Lethaby:—"Considerings all things, hers is the harder lot, and she really ought to have English female assistance. It seems to me to be the special need of the Mission, and I will cheerfully give £5 as a nucleus of a fund for such a purpose." Some responses have been made to this suggestion, and it is hoped to send a young experienced helper as soon as possible. Rev. George Piercy, 276, Burdett-road, London, E., is the secretary of the London council of Mr. Lethaby's Mission.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY OF VICTORIA.—The sixth annual report, like its predecessors, is a story of Gospel testimony in districts remote from the abundant means of grace which are the privilege of the larger centres of population. During last year sixty-six missions were conducted, 134 places being visited altogether. The evangelists not only cheered by their efforts many Christian people living in comparative isolation, but, by the blessing of God, were enabled to arrest many sinners on a downward course, and point them to the Saviour. Mr. C. Carter is secretary of the Society, whose offices are 131, Russell-street, Melbourne.

IN THE LLANERCH PIT.

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

An incident of the Llanerch Pit explosion, Pontypool, in which three hundred miners were entombed, and nearly two hundred were killed. February 6, 1890.

Two miners, deep down in the darkness,
With only a glimmer of light,
Were plying their perilous labour,
Their day a perpetual night.

A blast! and a burst! and a breaking!
"Fly, miners! and fly for your lives!"
And they fled through the dark, gloomy windings
With visions of heartbroken wives.

For scores they were leaving behind them,
The battered, the bleeding, the dead.
On, on, through the poisonous vapours;
On, on, for life's safety they fled!

"I cannot go farther," said Bennet,
"The fire-damp lies on my chest;
I feel I am fainting and choking"—
Then sank to what seemed his last rest.

"I'll shake him," said Thomas, and did it,
"Come, pull to the front, my brave lad."
So, again, with a struggle he conquered;
'Twas the last little strength that he had.

Sirs, but for that shake and that counsel,
His slumber had ended in death;
His comrade had roused him and saved him,
And given the body new breath.

Together they pressed for the shaftway,
The weak one now seemed the more strong;
And, thinking that Thomas was with him,
With hurrying steps pushed along.

Two miners, deep down in the darkness;
Two miners set out for the light:
Two miners together had struggled
To fly from those regions of night.

But only one came to the surface,
The weaker at first of the two:
The strong one had fainted and fallen,
To brotherly kindness proved true.

Brave Thomas! he might have come safely
Alone to the air and the day;
But he lingered to rouse his weak brother,
And died through that moment's delay.

The Lord of the day and the sunlight,
Once laboured below in our night,
Where the hot blast of judgment was sweeping,
Where we were too weak for swift flight.

He might have forsaken and left us,
But lingered to rouse to new power;
Then fell in the death and the darkness,
O'ercome in the last fatal hour.

Thus we have been saved by his dying,
To live while the many have died;
Escaped from the pit and the danger,
Through Jesus, who fell at our side.

Oh sing of his glorious praises
With every out-going breath!
Our Brother, who would not forsake us,
Our Brother, proved faithful to death.

OPEN-AIR MISSION. — The thirty-third annual meeting of the South London Auxiliary at New Surrey Chapel on Tuesday, February 4, was a happy gathering of open-air preachers and their friends. After tea, Mr. Edward Crisp took the chair, and an encouraging report was presented by Mr. Frank Cockrem, one of the hon. secs. Specially organised bands of preachers had on sixty week evenings last summer journeyed to distant suburbs as well as inner districts, for aggressive open-air effort, and their work had been greatly blessed. Addresses of a very high order followed by Rev. James Roberts (Free Methodist), Rev. W. Fuller Gooch (Baptist), Rev. G. D. Wyatt (Church of England), and Rev. William Mottram (Congregationalist).

MR. GEORGE HATTON'S JUBILEE.

THE friends of the St. Giles Christian Mission recently gathered in great force to do honour to their pastor, Mr. George Hatton, whose fiftieth birthday they had met to celebrate. Mr. Hatton, though ill, managed to come, to the great delight of the friends who filled the large chapel in Little Wild-street. Overflowing hearts found relief in prayer and praise, and all were deeply moved. The meeting was most solemn and heartstirring.

The friends had determined to present a birthday gift of quite a unique character. A stocking was produced, in which were fifty each of the various coins of the realm, from a farthing to half a sovereign. When Mr. Wheatley (the secretary), in the name of the friends, made the presentation, amounting to over £60, it seemed more than the recipient could stand. His words of earnest thanks were spoken with deep emotion. He accepted the gift, he said, with grateful feelings, and as an earnest from his Father in heaven, that the many urgent needs of this great work would be supplied. God had permitted him to labour with some success, though with much weakness. It gave him special joy to know that during these years of labour over 1200 had become members of the Christian Church. Mr. Hatton made a touching reference to his Christian mother who devoted him to God's work ere she was called home. His heart overflowed as he thought of those early associates in the work who had come to cheer him at that meeting, while to Mr. Wheatley and the devoted band of workers he paid a well-merited tribute.

PUBLIC MEN AND MORALS.

THE venerable and eloquent Rev. Dr. Douglas, Montreal, has been denouncing the immorality of that and some other cities of the Dominion in unmeasured terms. Here are a few of his sentences:—

"Look at the men that our noble City Council have in time past appointed to official positions—patrons of the bar, companions of the fast, the dubious, the flashy, who sneer at all temperance and moral reform; poker-players set to catch gamblers; men in whose office was the underground telegraph to signal the bagnio when raids were to be made, so that when the officers of the law came the vultures of the night had fled. This state of public sentiment, which is within the recent memory of most who hear my voice to-night, justifies the demand that every good citizen should form a solemn league and covenant, and decree that no man of tainted character, of immoral record, shall ever hold the civic chair, shall ever hold a civic office.

"Citizens of this audience, will you stand up for the honour of your city, your home, your God? I impeach some of the constituencies of the Dominion of an abnegation of moral discrimination in the representatives they have sent to Parliament. I will not name for the sake of the living. I will not name for the sake of the dead. But I tell the constituencies of this country, east or west, which I could name, that the hour is coming and now is, when to send men of tainted, of damaged, and putrescent character to the Parliaments of the land is to consign the very name of their constituency to reprobation and universal contempt."

A tremendous sensation (says a correspondent of The New York Observer) was caused in Montreal by this speech.

DR. ROBERT ANDERSON, Assistant-Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, will give two lectures at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Thursdays, February 20 and 27, 8 p.m., on "Evolution versus Creation." The lectures are open to all young men, and at the close an opportunity will be afforded for questions.

Soldiers at Woolwich.

WOOLWICH has gained the reputation of being a place where Christians of all denominations seem to forget "isms" in a hearty desire to forward the Redeemer's kingdom. So great was the blessing at Major Whittle's recent meetings that another visit from him has been arranged for. One of the institutions which never seems to cease in evangelistic effort is the Soldiers' Home, Hill-street. On Tuesday week was held the fourteenth anniversary of its opening, and Mrs. Dent and her friends resolved that it should be celebrated in a right worthy manner. The attraction of a good tea was provided, and invitations were issued, with a result that nearly three hundred young soldiers attended to do justice to the good things provided.

One could not help being surprised at their youthful appearance; their ages seemed to range from eighteen to twenty-two years. Truly here is a field worthy of the highest efforts which the Christian Church can make. To think that such young men, by the hundred, separated from home and parental influence, dwell in a barrack-room is surely reason enough to make us seek their spiritual good. That there is such a well-equipped Soldiers' Home entirely at their service is a matter for thankfulness. As for friends, they appear to have troops of them. Ladies waited on them at tea, and officers came from far and near to testify to their heartfelt interest in the fine young soldiers.

Were there any ready to avow themselves out-and-out soldiers of the Lord Jesus? Yes, plenty. The visitor had only to look in their faces as they sang the hymns to know that. One said, in answer to an inquiry, "There are eight of us, in a company of about eighty. Some of us have formed a 'Daniel's Band,' and we have a busy time of it."

Tea over, chairs were drawn closer and hymn 551 of Sacred Songs and Solos was announced. There were some there whose hearts were stirred by the happy associations connected with it. The words were composed by Major Whittle, the music by Mr. James McGranahan, and it was in that very room that it was sung for the first time in public, five years ago. It was suggested by the American flag which Major Whittle then presented to the Home. Some have good reason to remember the occasion, for that evening they enlisted "'Neath the banner of the cross."

COLONEL TRAVERS dwelt with much thankfulness on the grand use that had been made of the Home these fourteen years. It had fulfilled, he thought, in a large degree what Lord Shaftesbury desired it to be when he laid the foundation stone. As the oldest soldier in the room, he could testify to the great happiness it gave to be a soldier of Jesus Christ. He well remembered being with a young friend, the night before the assault, who was going with the storming party to the Redan. He would never forget his words. "Whatever may happen, I am ready." Well was it for him that he could say that, for he was among the slain. Such a blessed hope is an inspiration in life, and death is a servant who leads the friends of Jesus into his presence. He had heard the previous Saturday of the death of a dear old friend. On the preceding Wednesday he had taken his Bible-class as usual, and his parting words to them were: "If I do not see you again, I shall have departed to heaven through the blood of the Lamb."

With a military record such as COLONEL MACGREGOR has, the pleasure of seeing him on the platform may be imagined. He very soon found his subject—active service for the Lord Jesus. Giving the heart to the Lord, said he, was quite as definite a step as "taking the shilling." It was a downright transaction between the sinner and God. Until a man had sworn to serve the Queen and had worn her uniform, he had no right to walk under the royal colours. It was the same in the Christian army. He had never heard of a soldier apologising for wearing the Queen's uniform, and if ever a man apologises to his friends for being a Christian, he was sorry for him—he would be a poor soldier. He would expect to see him fly the signal of distress, turning his banner upside down. Then in earnest words the Colonel invited all present to make the very best use of their lives by being true Christian soldiers.

It was a field-night for straightforward appeal and testimony, and the Hon. and Rev. TALBOT RICE, the next speaker, was the right man in the right place. He gave the young Christians present hearty encouragement to be out and out in their service, recalling his own experience when he was an undergraduate at Oxford and the only man of his College who carried a Bible to chapel.

It would be hard to find a finer field for Christian enterprise than among these English youths at Woolwich. We feel sure that friends everywhere will encourage Mrs. Dent and the many friends who rally round her in the reaping of the harvest that lies around them.

MISS SHARMAN'S COUNTRY HOME.

IN a little report of this Home, recently issued, Miss Sharman says:—

The Home for Orphans, known as Hastings House, and intended for children of professional men and others of the educated classes, has now completed its tenth year. The past year, like all others, has been one of mercies, both many and great; but, partly on account of very narrow means, and partly because serious illness among the children has from time to time hindered our plans, it has seemed right to lessen rather than increase the number of orphans and the amount of work. It has seemed to me that some of our friends who admired the large new house, and loved to see the orphans assembled in it, looked upon the institution as a kind of green bay-tree, which, being planted on the lovely common of Rusthall, needed only the shining of the sun and the rain from heaven. That many others took a more practical view may be seen by the list of contributions, and by the balance-sheet, which shows a year closed clear of any debt, and a balance carried forward of six shillings and eleven pence with which to start a new period of hope and effort.

There has been an average of twenty children in the Home through the year, and good, steady work has been carried on. Nine of the elder girls have left during the year, two of whom have gone to Canada, and six new children have been admitted. The object of the Home is to give a good education to those orphan children who would have received it if their parents had not died without being able to make provision for their families.

Will those friends who wish their gifts appropriated to Hastings House state it distinctly when writing, as there are now two of my orphan families within a short distance of each other?

CHARLOTTE SHARMAN.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE GOSPEL.—It is stated that in the recent interview at Hawarden between Mr. Gladstone and Dr. Talmage, the two gentlemen had a long talk on religious and political questions. Mr. Gladstone said: "Talk about questions of the day; there is but one question, and that is the Gospel. It can and will correct everything needing correction. All men at the head of great movements are Christian men. During the many years I was in the Cabinet, I was brought into association with sixty master minds, and all but five of them were Christians. My only hope for the world is in bringing the human mind into contact with divine revelation."

Dr. Pentecost in Greenock.

[FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE first evangelistic movement of importance here in later years was that of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey about sixteen years ago. That mission was to Greenock, as to Scotland in general, a great blessing. Eight years afterward he visited the place again for a short time. Dr. Pentecost, being then in Scotland on his annual vacation from his church work in America, came with him and spent a couple of weeks in this neighbourhood. Since then we have had a very successful mission under the direction of Mr. George Clarke; and evangelistic work under local auspices has been going forward with more or less blessing in all these years. Now sixteen years after Mr. Moody's first visit we are having a mission under the leadership of Dr. Pentecost. He was invited by a requisition signed by our leading ministers and laymen. For months we have been looking forward to this visit and work with eager, longing and believing desire.

Dr. Pentecost began his work here on Sabbath, January 26. Since then the meetings have regularly gone on every afternoon and evening; the afternoon meetings in the Baptist Church, and the evening meetings in the Free Middle Church, which is the largest in the town. The congregations are encouraging both in number and attention. At the close of the first week night meeting there was a large after meeting of about two hundred ministers, elders and Christian workers, all men. Dr. Pentecost explained to them his methods of work and asked their cordial co-operation. The ministers present were most sympathetic, and pledged to him their hearty co-operation. The next night the meeting went forward with quiet but effective promise. There were a few inquirers and seven or eight out-and-out professions of decision. Each night since, down to the close of this the second week, the meetings have grown in numbers and power and in fruitfulness.

Some have thought that Dr. Pentecost does not give his workers enough to do. To this he replies that Christian workers should act as beaters; that is, that their main work is to get the unconverted people into the meeting, and leave them to be dealt with by the Word and Spirit of God under the preaching of the Gospel. "It is not always best" he says "to speak to a soul thoroughly awakened and converted by the preaching of the Word, and these private decisions or confessions are not nearly so helpful to the new convert as the out-and-out one is." We are beginning to believe it. When we see stolid Scotchmen and shy Scotch maidens rise in the presence of half a thousand people and work their way out of the closely crowded pews down the isle to a front seat, we are pretty sure that the conviction must be deep and the decision thorough. This is all the more true in view of the absence of all emotional appeals from the pulpit; for Dr. Pentecost's preaching is expository, exegetical and argumentative rather than hortatory.

The second Sabbath showed a great increase of interest in all the meetings. That in the Town Hall was for men only, and the Hall was entirely filled. The meeting was very solemn, and at the after-meeting, in which some six hundred persons were present, about twenty-five men, some in prominent positions in the town, publicly confessed Jesus Christ. The meetings this week have been intensely interesting, and every night many souls have come forward to confess Christ. The Bible Readings have been largely attended, the audiences almost reaching the full capacity of the church where they are being held.

have come to notice. A fine young man about thirty-five, after the after meeting was over on Sunday night, started out with the crowd, but suddenly turned back and forced his way to the front seats where sat the men who had come forward. Facing the retiring audience he said in a clear and distinct voice: "I accept Jesus Christ as my Saviour and Lord and give myself to Him." He then fell on his knees and wept profusely. He afterwards said to Dr. Pentecost who spoke with him, "I could not stand it any longer. I have been a member of the church for years under false pretences, that is, I have never been converted and I have known it all along, but now I give myself up wholly to Christ."

Another very interesting case was that of a deserter from the army, who has been at work at his trade as a riveter in the ship yards. He was working with a brother who is a Christian. One day he surprised his brother, who had been praying for him, with the question, "What must a man do after he is converted?" To which the brother replied with eager gladness, "Why just do the next thing the Lord bids you do." Two nights after he gave himself up publicly to Christ. In doing so, he told the gentleman who spoke with him afterwards, and also to Dr. Pentecost: I am a deserter, and I will now have to give myself up. That means six months' imprisonment and to serve out my whole time of four years, being separated from my wife. But I cannot withstand Christ any longer. This has kept me back for a long time, because I knew I would have to do it if I became a Christian; now, thank God, I am willing, and will do it immediately." The next night his wife also confessed Christ.

One evening an immensely tall and big man came forward. He was a typical Highlander and proved to be the father of a parish church minister. He said, "My lad will be glad to hear that I have surrendered." He was a fine old man, and said he had been "off and on with Christ" for a long time, but now he wanted to be "out-and-out" for Him.

A man who was in the Town Hall on Sunday night went away much impressed, but would not surrender. The next day at work an accident happened by which a fellow workman just at his side almost lost his life. This was used of God to decide him. That night he was the first one forward. He said, referring to the accident: "It might have been me, and it might have been death, and in that case I would not have been ready for it."

There are many cases of brothers and sisters, and in one case as many as four young sisters have been brought in. Every night there are at "request time" notes of thanksgiving from parents for the conversion of children.

The town is well stirred up, and everywhere the meetings are the theme of conversation. The ministers, as a body, are giving good support better and more generally than at any previous mission in the town. The evangelist expresses himself as being very much cheered in his work by their fraternal kindness and cordial co-operation.

A very interesting feature of the work is seen in the fact that a number of ladies, married and single, are visiting many sick and old people, and reporting to them the sermons and Bible readings; much blessing is following this kind of ministry. It is house-to-house evangelisation, and is in accordance with a plan suggested in Dr. Pentecost's booklet entitled "What can I do?" More than a hundred Christian workers have made out prayer lists, and are daily praying for their friends by name. Some have already had the joy of seeing those for whom they have made this special and daily petition coming to Christ.

Great anticipations are entertained in connection with Miss Tyson's work among the children. She begins her work next Sabbath in the Union-street U. P. church. A wonderful blessing, we hear, has followed her labours among both old and young in Elgin, where she has been since Christmas. Let all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for us, and give thanks too.

SAILORS SAFE IN PORT.

THE heavy gales of the past month have been intensely felt by the sailors on our coasts. On Tuesday week many who had been safely brought through them were gathered in the fo'c's'le of the Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, praising God for his preserving mercy. Some had been shipwrecked, but rescued, and brought safely to land after much suffering and privation. One crew had been without food for two days and nights in an open boat, exposed to the winds and waves. Well may we on terra firma unite with the storm-beaten men from the sea in praising God from having delivered them from the perils of the deep.

At the muster of the Christian lifeboat crew many a shipwrecked soul was able to praise God for his delivering power. Several captains and others took part in the meeting, the keynote of which was "Faithfulness in service."

A MISSION IN SUFFOLK.

FOR the space of sixteen days a special effort was recently made to carry the Gospel message to the people of St. Mary's Parish, Bury St. Edmund's. The chief missioner was Rev. W. Hay Aitken, who was assisted by Rev. T. P. Cushing and Mrs. Crouch, as well as the vicar, Rev. A. W. Snape, and his local helpers. Mr. Aitken's mid-day addresses on the Spiritual Life were well attended and proved very stimulating to Christians.

Evening after evening, to crowded congregations, Mr. Aitken discoursed in his own tenderly impassioned and impressive way, on themes of eternal import. Many were stricken to the heart under his earnest appeals, and the after-meetings were seasons of spiritual decision. Mr. Cushing's services with the children attracted large gatherings of young people, and the results were most encouraging. Mrs. Crouch worked earnestly among the women, and her words were much blessed. The memory of these devoted servants of God will long abide among the people of this Suffolk town.

BAD BOOKS.—A writer in the second number of The Workers' Monthly raises a strenuous protest against the "realistic" fiction of the day. "What I warn youths against, if they wish to keep their minds pure and their souls clean, are those impure sensational novels which are pouring in upon us from certain authors, and which so greatly outrage the moral feelings of the community. I would also condemn wholesale the entire array of cheap sensational novels. They are a beggarly, torn-down army at best; with exaggerated and misleading views of life, and wholly devoid of any real instruction, of any exalting thought, or any wholesome advice for the conduct of oneself in life."

EDUCATION AT EARLSWOOD ASYLUM.—A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette recently had an interview with Dr. Jones, the head of this institution, at Redhill, Surrey. Though called an Asylum, the place is in reality a school in which the latent mental powers of the most backward are developed. The first endeavour is to gain the pupil's affection, and, whether old or young, imbeciles and idiots crave for affection. When, said Dr. Jones, we have won their hearts, we try to gain their heads, and begin gradually to instruct them in the very simplest of educational subjects. Here the Kindergarten system is our great help. Playfully the child learns to know, and then to write its letters. Presently it puts them together, and spells short words; and thus, step by step, we lead them on, till the majority can not only read and write, but are also able to understand what they read or write. The task requires infinite patience, together with tact and kindness. We train the girls for domestic work, and the boys for the trade for which they show most inclination and capacity. One of our pupils is now employed in a West-end tailor's shop. Others in various places, as printers, compositors, bootmakers, &c. Whether paying or free inmates, the same care is bestowed upon all, the chief object being to make them feel their helplessness as little as possible, and to teach them to be of some use in the world.

Letters to the Editor.

DR. BARNARDO AND THE PRESS.

DEAR SIR,—A letter of mine in reply to one written by a Mrs. Bacchus, on the Gossage case, appeared in The Daily Telegraph, a few days ago. As a consequence, several Christian friends have written to me to express their surprise and disappointment at the tone and character of my reply.

These friends were not more surprised or disappointed than I was myself. Indeed, I could hardly have recognised my own letter again. The fact is, however, that the editor of The Daily Telegraph took it upon him to edit my letter, and did it with a vengeance; leaving out the whole of one important paragraph, and cutting two sentences in half, so as to completely alter the whole character of my communication! What my original letter really was like will be seen in the forthcoming issue of Night and Day.

Meanwhile, throughout this whole business, attacks are being made upon me in various organs of the secular press. Many of these contain the most obvious and easily refuted errors, whilst some are wholly based on misconceptions as to matters of fact. If short courteous letters are at once written to point out these errors or to state the real facts, my letters are either not inserted at all by the organs that gave fullest prominence to the attacks, or some brief extract only, conveying but little idea of the true nature of my reply, is all that is given. I have thus to suffer in silence an additional wrong.

Surely in these circumstances I may be permitted, through the pages of THE CHRISTIAN, to ask the friends of Christ everywhere to be slow to condemn a brother who is, even as regards his own public utterances, entirely at the mercy of a secular press, for the most part indifferent, if not actually opposed, to such Christian rescue work as has been committed by God to the hands of your unworthy brother, THOMAS J. BARNARDO.

"AN OBJECTION TO JEWISH MISSIONS."

DEAR SIR,—I have waited to see what other correspondents had to say on this topic: but, finding in your last week's issue no further reference to it, I thought, as a matter of courtesy, I ought to write a few lines further, if only to make myself understood, and not in controversial reply to any strictures on my former letter.

Permit me to observe, in all kindness, that not one of your correspondents on this topic, since my letter, has attempted to solve the difficulty by meeting the objection with plain passages of Scripture. The first letter after mine simply asserts that the "Scottish Christian" who presents the objection and myself are both wrong; and goes in for the thin edge of the wedge of Anglo-Israelism. This has been most satisfactorily answered by "W. F. K." in your issue of January 31. I trust we have seen the last of that topic in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN. As to the two other letters—one at great length—which appeared in your issue of January 24, both writers attack my explanation of "the objection," and draw inferences for me which I should never have drawn for myself.

Now, when Christians write about difficulties which only Divine Revelation can solve, it should never be for triumph, but only for truth. Supposing I am wrong, and that my explanation is satisfactory to none but myself, the objection remains as it was, with no light thrown upon it. A traveller comes to crossings in the road; there is no guidepost, and he asks for information. A friend tells him the road to the best of his knowledge; other friends come up and tell the traveller the information is not reliable, that cannot be the road. Then it would be kind to tell him which is the right road—for authority to say that one is wrong ought to imply ability to say which is right.

My explanation of the difficulty gave, intentionally, only that aspect of truth which was required to meet it; and if I had to explain again I could only repeat in substance what I have already said, adding, perhaps, to lessen occasion for misunderstanding, another side of revealed truth. From my letter some have thought me very Calvinistic; whilst others who know me regard me as a pronounced Arminian. I use these terms for convenience, not because I like them. I confess I am both. I was converted an Arminian, and have grown into a Calvinist, without ceasing to be an Arminian. Arminianism is in the Bible; so is Calvinism. God's sovereignty and man's free will are both in the Bible. I believe in both, though I may never be able to balance them. The practical aspects of Calvinism come out in this current dispensation, whose purpose it is to gather the Church out of the world, and not to gather the world into the Church. The practical aspects of Arminianism will come out in the Millennial era.

I thankfully admit that salvation is provided for all, ought to be offered to all, and that all may have it if they will; but they will not, at least in this dispensation. Obedience to our Lord requires his disciples to carry the Gospel to the "uttermost part of the earth"; and obedience to the Holy Spirit requires that the Church observe the order, "to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile." The quicker this is done, the sooner will the Holy Spirit gather the Church, and the sooner will our Lord return to bless Israel nationally, and, through saved Israel, bless the world. The Church, however, seems disposed neither to evangelise the world without the Jew nor through the Jew. Many passages of Scripture plainly state that this dispensation will close, like those which have preceded it, in corruption and judgment. If we do not like the word purpose, suppose we change it for plan. Most Christians believe that God has a plan, and sing, "God will realise his plan." His plan takes in the fact that dispensations will end one after another in corruption and judgment, not excepting even the Millennium itself; when Satan is let loose. It may help us a little over some difficulties if we remember that things do not occur because they were predicted, but were predicted because they will occur. If things occurred because they were predicted, it would be a service done to truth, entitling to reward, to crucify the Lord, or to persecute the Jews. But as they were predicted because they would occur, human responsibility in such wicked conduct remains in force. It was by the predeterminate counsel and foreknowledge of God, and yet by wicked hands, that our Lord was crucified and slain.

It is as really the duty of the Church to carry the Gospel to the entire world, "to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile," as if this dispensation were intended to convert the world; and, may I add, that duty would not be lessened even if no soul, Jew or Gentile, should be converted. Our duty is not regulated by the character of the dispensation, but by the plain commands of Him we acknowledge as Lord and Master. Obedience is what our Lord expects from us.

Now let us return for a moment to the "Objection to Jewish Missions," which is, briefly put:—If, by conversion to Christ, the Jew loses his distinct nationality, and becomes absorbed in the Church, where there is neither Jew nor Gentile, while yet the separate existence of the Jewish nation is guaranteed by God, do not missions to the Jews seem against the purpose or revealed mind of God? My reply, to meet the objection, is (1) it is God's purpose to preserve the nation (Jer. xxxi. 31-37). If this be denied, those who deny should explain the passage, and give other passages in support of the denial. (2) It is Christ's command to preach the Gospel to the entire world, which includes the Jew; and the Holy Spirit adds, "To the Jew first." If this be denied, those who deny should explain these passages, and give other passages in support of the denial.

If the above two points be admitted, then our wisdom is to seek, guided by the Word of God, to harmonise them. That harmony, I humbly believe, is found in the elective and parenthetical character of this present dispensation. See Acts xv. 16 and Rom. xi. 25, 26, one passage referring to the Gentiles, and the other to the Jews. The Gentiles are being visited "to take out of them a people for his name," which is immediately followed by the promised return of the Lord: "After these things I will return."

Then in Romans we have "a remnant according to the election of grace," and the statement that "blindness (or hardness) in part is happened to Israel." This latter statement is followed in the next verse by the promised return of our Lord: "The Redeemer shall come to Zion." These are not fancies of man, but statements of God. If the position be denied which these passages are quoted to prove, then the passages should be explained in harmony with the denial, and other passages quoted in support of the denial. The Word of God alone must settle this matter, and that Word taken in its simple and grammatical sense. Don't let us draw inferences from one another, or inferences derogatory to the character of God; but let us humbly seek the truth as revealed in the Word of God, each correspondent, by passages of Scripture, seeking to throw light on the difficulty before us, until we find the difficulty vanishing under the light of the full-orbed revelation of God.

Please excuse this somewhat lengthy letter, but I wished to make myself understood.—Yours very faithfully, J. WILKINSON.

[Both sides having been heard, this correspondence must now cease.—ED.]

FRENCH MISSION TO SOUTH AFRICA.—A meeting is to be held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N., on Tuesday next, at 7.30 p.m., on behalf of the French Protestant Mission to Basutoland, and also the branch mission on the Zambesi, conducted by M. and Mdme. Coillard. Pastors George Appia and A. Boegner, of Paris, will give addresses, and also Mdlle. E. Kiener (about to proceed to Africa). We trust there will be a large gathering to hear of the interesting work of our French brethren in South Africa.

THE VAUGIRARD GOSPEL MISSION, PARIS, is an agency whereby the light of life is brought to the inhabitants of a low and neglected quarter of the capital of France. A room has been opened in which mission services are held, and the Gospel is preached; a Sunday-school is in active operation, and other forms of Christian work are also being carried on. The committee, which includes honoured French and English names, is anxious to assist the superintendents, Professor and Madame de Launay, in placing the work on a thoroughly satisfactory and permanent basis, and extending its operations. As soon as funds are forthcoming, a medical dispensary will be added, and the work of evangelisation among the blind, which was begun five or six years ago, will be continued and developed. The secretary in England is Rev. W. Hamlyn, St. Leonard's-on-Sea. Many of our readers will remember that Professor de Launay was formerly a Romish priest. Since embracing the Protestant faith, he has laboured earnestly for the highest good of his fellow-countrymen.

A MAGISTRATE ON LICENSING.—In his recently published reminiscences Mr. Montagu Williams, the London police magistrate, refers to the question of liquor licences. "A more unsatisfactory tribunal," he says, "than that before which the licensing business came never existed. Where large vested interests are concerned influence is brought to bear in every available shape and form. Matters have been considerably altered; but even now in my judgment they call aloud for reform. I believe one-half of the crime of the Metropolis certainly—in such distr'cts as Greenwich, Deptford, Whitechapel, and Shoreditch, where the heritage of the people is pestilential dens, hovels, slums, and darkness—is largely due to the reckless manner in which licences have been showered about, like pepper from a pepper-box, by the licensing authorities. I am not one of those who would rob the working man of his modest glass of beer, but I am nevertheless of opinion that so long as the present state of things exists in reference to the establishment of public-houses, but little success will crown the efforts of those who seek to improve the condition of the people."

CRYSTAL PALACE BIBLE-STAND.—During the years 1888-9, notwithstanding the diminished opportunities of Scripture distribution at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, the total circulation of the agency has been considerably increased, chiefly through the use made of the post in sending New Testament portions to Roman Catholic countries. The increased amount of work has been met by larger contributions from the Christian public. The circulation during the two years amounted to 1,204,800 Bibles, Testaments, portions, cards, and leaflets, in many languages. The Bible-carriage, which has already visited the greater part of France the second time, continues its important work, under the direction of M. F. Pointet. Grants were made to many workers at home and abroad. Acting on the belief that the prejudice of Irish Romanists against the "Protestant" Scriptures does not apply to the Revised Version, the Committee secured a hundred thousand portions of the Revised New Testament, nearly all of which have been placed in the hands of the people of Ireland, by means of book post. Mr. W. Hawke is the secretary and manager of the Stand.

THE NEW, NOT TRUE, THEOLOGY.

The committee of ministers and elders of the Free Church of Scotland, appointed to consider the writings of Professors Dods and Bruce, have finished their report, and it was submitted to a meeting held on Monday last in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. The document occupies nearly three columns of The North British Daily Mail. A large number of objectionable passages in the writings of Dr. Dods are given, grouped under the following heads:—Holy Scripture, the Atonement, Justification, the Second Birth, the Divinity of our Lord, and the Resurrection of our Lord. From this enumeration of subjects some idea may be formed of the fundamental character of the charges preferred. Doubts and differences abound in Dr. Dods's writings, and when brought together, as in the report, they present a very perplexing picture.

The extracts from Dr. Bruce's work on "The Kingdom of God," are even more audacious. They exhibit destructive negations in abundance, and are simply disastrous in tendency. For some idea of Dr. Bruce's position we refer our readers to the article, "The Present Stage of the 'New Movement' in Theology," in the current issue of The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine. Not hesitating to represent a saying of our Lord as "exaggerated," and only true "in the main," Dr. Bruce runs with the Rationalists in attributing unworthy motives to the New Testament writers. He quotes, with seeming approval, the saying of Strauss, that "We know very little about Jesus. The Evangelists have daubed his life-image so thick with supernatural colours, that the natural colours can no longer be restored." And so on, without a word of apology for outraging the Lord and calumniating the Evangelists.

Holding the views set forth in the report, Drs. Dods and Bruce are not only completely disqualified from being regarded as safe teachers of theological students, but also from being trusted to represent Christian truth to any who may be inquiring as to the way of salvation.

At the meeting held on Monday, the following resolution was adopted:—

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that those who train our future ministers should have the full confidence of the Church, and, whereas certain statements have been made by Professors Dods and Bruce in their published writings which have occasioned much anxiety among the friends of vital truth, and, whereas the peace and prosperity of the Church are thereby seriously imperilled, we, the ministers and elders in the Free Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, respectfully request the College Committee to take the writings in question into their early and serious consideration, especially the extracts from these writings sent herewith, and to take such steps as may tend to allay the prevalent anxiety, and to vindicate the truth as formulated in the authorised Standards of our Church. We make this request in the earnest hope that the Professors referred to may be able to give such explanations as will assure the Church that nothing is being taught to those who are studying for her ministry which is inconsistent with her authorised Standards. Further, we respectfully request a reply not later than April 1 as to whether any steps will be taken by the College Committee.

To ourselves the terms of this resolution appear inadequate; and the earnest hope that the professors may give satisfactory explanations seems quite inconsistent with the notes made by the Committee in their report on these unscriptural teachings.

MR. MOODY'S BIBLE INSTITUTE, in Chicago, was recently dedicated at a gathering of friends. Mr. Moody said, concerning the aim of the Institute: "I have always held that there was a larger field than could be worked by the churches. There are thousands of Christians that never go to church, and never will go to church, and all they want is some one to come to them and bring out the good that is in them. Therefore this Institution arises, and we propose to educate and send out hundreds of city missionaries. We propose to furnish well-trained Bible workers, who can act as aids to clergymen, and as city missionaries. We will teach men to preach and to work, and women to do the same."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. James Sprunt has recently conducted mission services in several country villages in Sussex. Much blessing has been manifest, both to saved and unsaved.

East Dereham, Norfolk.—Evangelistic services have been conducted here by Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison. A number professed to have put their trust in Christ.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has recently conducted special services in Summer-hill Baptist Chapel, Maindee, Newport, Mon. The services were much appreciated by believers, especially the afternoon Bible-readings. Much sickness in the neighbourhood interfered with the attendance at the meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. Evens have completed a successful series of mission services in Manchester, the first week with the Methodist New Connexion, the week following with the Wesleyans. God has richly blessed the effort; nearly two hundred have professed to receive Christ. The evangelists next proceed to Wellington and Spennymoor.

Mr. J. W. Moodie.—We have received special blessing at the Mizpah Hall, Glasgow, during a mission by Mr. Moodie. For the two weeks we got the names of about one hundred who professed to have found the Saviour. Mr. Moodie began a month's mission in Paisley Town Hall on Sabbath, February 2. A. F.

Cardiff.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has had a ten days' mission in the rooms of the Y.W.C.A. in this town. There is every reason to believe that God's blessing has rested on the undertaking. The praise-meeting on February 3 was well attended, and several gave testimony to the blessing they had received. Mrs. Legg commenced a ten days' mission on Saturday last at Maldon, Essex.

Trevor Chapel, Brompton.—The mission conducted here by Rev. W. A. Meaton was very successful. Ostensibly for young people, the week-night services were largely attended by adults, who seemed quite as much interested as the juveniles. Many little ones came forward to confess Christ, with a quiet earnestness that left no room for doubt as to the sincerity of the inquirers. A new feature marked these services: the missioner sang at each service one of the choice hymns in Songs and Solos.

Emmanuel Church, Maida-hill.—God has evidently blessed the mission carried on in this parish by Mr. Herbert R. Francis. The attendances at the evening meetings have been large, and the hearers were much impressed. At the meeting for praise, on the evening of February 6, several people testified that they had within the last few days accepted God's gift of eternal life. The Christian workers showed great activity, with strong faith and prayerful sympathy with the stricken ones. The lectures on the Tabernacle, illustrated by a beautiful model, were also much valued.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a very successful ten days' mission at Hastings under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings were held in the large hall of the Brassey Institute, and from the first there were unmistakable evidences of the Holy Spirit's power, while the interest in the mission seemed to increase with each succeeding day. The closing services will be long remembered by many. A large number of young men and women decided to receive Christ as their Saviour, and confessed Him before leaving the meeting. Last Lord's Day Mr. Lane commenced a mission at the Y.M.C.A., Bath, which is being continued till Tuesday next. On Sunday afternoon there was a good gathering of young men, and signs of definite blessing.

Evangelists at Work.—Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, commenced a mission to young men at Exeter Hall, Strand, on Saturday last; the meetings are to be continued till Monday next.—Mr. John McAuliffe is at Clarendon Villas Mission Hall, West Brighton, till Sunday, February 16.—Major Whittle is holding meetings at Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road. From the 16th to the 28th inst. he is to be at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth.—Mr. Oscar Owers is at South Shields.—Mr. Charles Inglis commences a week's mission at Hoylake, Liverpool, on Sunday next, following which he goes to Nottingham for a week.—Mr. Newton Jones will be at the Congregational Church, Ryde, I.W., from Sunday, February 16, for fourteen days.—Mr. Geo. Robert Cairns commenced a mission at Dukinfield, Lancashire, on Sunday last.

Mr. John Maxted commenced a mission in the Yorkshire village of Ingleton on Sunday last.

Ireland.—Fruitful Gospel missions have been held in Bessbrook, co. Armagh; Annalong, co. Down; Dungannon, Mountmellick, Newtownbarry and at Ballykelly, co. Derry.

Mr. Charles Garnett, of Runcorn, is conducting a revival mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Worksop. His recent mission at Whiston, Rotherham, was made a great blessing to many.

Mr. George Clarke has conducted a Gospel mission in Strabane, Ireland. The Derry Standard reports his addresses at some length, and speaks in very warm terms of the evangelist's work.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has conducted a seven days' mission at Toller Chapel, Kettering (Rev. J. M. Watson, pastor). The mission was specially blessed to the young men and women connected with the congregation.

Kessingland, Suffolk.—Mr. John Coles, of the London City Mission, has held a ten days' mission at this place. Night after night the people came in large numbers. At a tea-meeting for converts and friends 200 sat down. Saints have been encouraged and sinners saved.

Gipsy Smith held a mission at Great Bridgewater-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester, from January 26 to February 3. During this time many, it is believed, have been truly born again. Mr. Smith has commenced a four weeks' mission in the Norwich and Lynn (Wesleyan) District, for which prayer is asked.

Newport, Mon.—A gracious work is going on in connection with Duckpool-road Baptist Church. There has not been a Sunday this year without anxious souls coming into the vestry. The pastor, Rev. A. T. Jones, has also assisted in several missions in Cardiff and other places, when much blessing has attended the word spoken.

Pudsey, Leeds.—A most encouraging mission has been conducted (last week) in the Congregational Church by Rev. R. Balgarnie. The attendances have been large, and a spirit of earnestness pervaded all the meetings. Many persons entered the inquiry-room; and on the Sunday following the mission many more were inquiring the way of salvation.

Mr. H. G. Howell is open to receive invitations to conduct revival services for short or long periods. Address, 8, Spring Field, Skewen, Neath, S. Wales.

MR. RAINEY IN ESSEX.

The sixteen days' mission in the New Hall, Rainham, conducted by Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, has proved to be a gospel triumph. Men and women have attended who had not been in a place of worship for years, but whose attendances at the public-house had been constant. Indeed, so general has been the feeling awakened that, on a gentleman mneetig a local publican one evening in the village, the latter remarked, in reply to the surprise evinced at the deserted state of the streets, "Well, all I can say is, there are only two men in my house, and I don't believe there are more in any of the others. They are holding high jinks at the New Hall, and all the men are there."

Night after night the hall has been filled with an earnest audience. Better still, inquirers have been coming forward, asking tremblingly, "What must I do to be saved?" Conviction of sin has been very deep and real. Conversions have not been sudden; but there has been a "godly sorrow, working repentance not to be repented of." The friends who "have the rule over" the work, and who "watch for souls as those who must give account," will be glad of prayer for wisdom in caring for these lambs, under "the Shepherd of the sheep."

Mr. Rainey commences a mission at the Iron Village Hall, Southstoke, Berks., on Sunday next.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—On Thursday last week the ballet and chorus ladies engaged in the Crystal Palace pantomime were entertained at tea in the grill room. There was some homely talk by Mr. Wm. Forbes on Temperance and the Gospel, and selections from Sacred Songs and Solos were sung.

MANCHESTER CITY MISSION.

WE have just closed a mission at the Ormon-street Hall. The mission was held under most peculiar and trying circumstances, but we had the presence of the Holy Spirit in convicting and awaking power. About fifty people went through the inquiry-room. The president is Mr. Ernest Crewdson, of Platt Abbey, Rusholm, who is assisted by Mrs. Crewdson.

The whole-souled testimonies of the workers made one feel their was a reality in religion. The brass band connected with the hall, are all Christian men who, when they come in from the street, are ready to lay down the instruments and take up the sword of the Spirit to point men to Jesus. The devotion of these dear friends to this work, and the way in which Mr. Crewdson has so thoroughly organised them on a soul-winning basis, does one good to behold. Long may they be spared.

GEO. ROBERT CAIRNS.

CENTRAL AFRICAN NOTES.

PORTUGUESE MORALITY

in Africa is spoken of with terrible plainness by Mr. Rankin in the current issue of The Fortnightly Review. He says it is "appreciably lower than that of the beasts," and far lower than that of native tribes. The same paper shows that Portugal has never administered any real government even a few miles inland. Mr. Rankin speaks after six years' residence at Mozambique.

A SWEDISH EFFORT

for the suppression of the slave trade is being organised by Lieutenant Nils Johann Zachrissen. "He takes out with him," says The Daily Graphic, "100 Swedish artisans, who not only will receive no pay during the three years' service for which they have bound themselves, but each one has deposited £28 to bring him home, if ill-health should render this step necessary before the expiration of that period. Of the 500,000 marks required for the undertaking, 300,000 have already been subscribed in Sweden, Belgium, and the United States. Herr Zachrissen, who is president of the Swedish Anti-Slavery Society, is thirty years of age, and is of slight build. He has had considerable experience of Africa, for, in 1880, he was at work in the service of the Congo State at Leopoldsville and Boma, and in 1884 he conducted a scientific expedition in the neighbourhood of the Zambesi."

We shall follow this movement with hopeful interest. The purpose of Herr Zachrissen is, we understand, to go northward from Mozambique, by way of the great lakes, as far as the sources of the Nile.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.—The usual monthly meeting for workers was held last Friday evening. Mr. Isaac said it was proposed to have a monthly tea for sailors, which would probably be the means of increasing the members at the Rest. He appealed for help for this purpose. Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun., gave a stirring address on "Stand fast in the Lord." Mr. E. H. Glenny gave a very interesting account of his recent visit to Morocco and Algiers.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS IN SOUTH LONDON.—The annual meeting of the Sunday-school Society was held in Hawkstone Hall last week, the President, Rev. Newman Hall, in the chair. The report stated that there were thirteen schools, some of them located in the poorest districts of Southwark and Lambeth, with 4500 scholars and 351 teachers. Besides Sunday instruction by voluntary teachers of various churches, there were prayer-meetings, Gospel addresses, temperance meetings, sewing and music classes, &c., on week evenings. Many of the present teachers were former scholars, and many of the elder children had become communicants. Teachers are much needed.

The Book World.

ON THE VOYAGE AND ITS PERILS. By J. J. J. A. Holness. Young people will set out upon the journey of life admirably forewarned as to the dangers of the way, if they will give heed to these friendly chapters. The teaching is faithful, and the meaning always plain.

The Illustrated Missionary News (2d. Partridge & Co.) for February is a particularly interesting number, its contents embracing news from China, Spain, Algiers, Micronesia, and other parts. Such reading should do much to stimulate the zeal of the Church at home in missionary enterprise abroad.

POEMS. By George Thomas Coster. Elliot Stock. A new edition revised, and with additions. The subjects cover a wide range. Natural scenes and objects have inspired many a verse. Scripture characters and incidents furnish the germ thought of some meritorious pieces, varied in measure and style.

Miss Weston's quarterly Jottings from my Log is a very attractive publication. It contains much anecdotal and other information about her work among the blue-jackets, and has plenty of bright, telling illustrations. The four numbers for last year make a pretty and interesting volume. (Partridge. 4d. quarterly; 1s. 4d. vol.)

Mr. Spurgeon's first sermon after returning from the South of France (No. 2128) is entitled, "Heaven above and heaven below," and is marked by all the freshness, enthusiasm, and adaptability to common needs that have gained for his discourses such a large place in the spiritual sustenance of his fellow Christians. (1d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

CLIFTON CONFERENCE, 1889. The report of the proceedings of the twenty-seventh Clifton Conference of Christians of all denominations, held October 1—3 last, is very profitable reading. The subject of the addresses was "God—our own God," treated under the heads of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. The addresses, which are given at length, are over twenty in number, and deal with the sublimest of themes in a manner which students of God's word will find very helpful. (1s. W. F. Mack, 70, Park-street, Bristol.)

PRECIOUS SEED. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a volume of evangelistic addresses delivered by the late Rev. Dr. Somerville in many lands. They set forth the truths of the Gospel with vivid clearness; in them we can trace the earnestness of the man and his longing for the hearers. We who often listened to the living voice can almost hear its music still, as we read them; but those who had not that privilege will nevertheless find them to be indeed "precious seed" which will bring forth yet more fruit, and that "he being dead, yet speaketh."

"Stanley" literature has received a fillip by the reappearance of the doughty traveller on the confines of civilisation. THE STORY OF EMIN'S RESCUE, AS TOLD IN MR. STANLEY'S LETTERS, is published in a thrilling pamphlet by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., and forms a vivid if rather disconnected account of the main incidents in the recent successful expedition. It will serve to whet the public appetite for the fuller narrative about to appear from the explorer's more leisured pen.—A new and enlarged edition is published of Mr. A. Montefiore's extremely interesting compilation, HENRY M. STANLEY, THE AFRICAN EXPLORER (1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.). Several chapters are added, bringing the record up to a very recent date, and it is altogether an admirable monograph of a remarkable man.

"HE WHOM GOD REMEMBERS." Addresses on the Book of the Prophet Zechariah. By Rev. Frederick Whitfield, M.A. 5s. Nisbet & Co. Another volume from the busy pen of the vicar of St. Mary's, Hastings. After a lucid introduction, the author divides the book into sections according to its contents, and on these sections he discourses in a manner which really seems to leave little else of a practical character to be said. From first to last the pages are rich in experimental truth. In dealing with the details of unfulfilled prophecy, the author has carefully avoided committing himself either to the historic or futurist schools. While inclining to the former, he thinks that the truth may lie in the union of the two systems of interpretation. The Book of Zechariah is shown to be full of Gospel teaching, so that we trust these expositions will have many readers.

CHRISTIAN THEISM. By Rev. C. A. Row, M.A. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a popular survey of the evidence upon which Christian Theism rests; and it is a performance worthy of its distinguished author. Agnosticism and the anti-Theistic theory of evolution are triumphantly refuted, and unanswerable arguments are adduced to show, not only that God exists, but that He is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him. The theorisings of those who would account for the universe without entertaining a thought of the Creator, are simply pulverised by the sledge-hammer reasonings of Prebendary Row, who conducts the entire process of proof under a deep sense of knowing Him in whom he has believed. The positive statements and replies to objections are alike powerful and cogent, and the book may safely be put into the hands of thoughtful people whose minds are suffering disquietude through the questionings of modern doubt.

Dr. Pétavel's treatise, THE EXTINCTION OF EVIL, noticed in our last issue, is published in London by Mr. Elliot Stock, price 3s. 6d.

The editor of Home Words is offering Sunday-school prizes to the value of £300 for the best answers to the Bible questions in the January number. The object of this effort is to induce the young to search the Scriptures.

HALF HOLIDAYS AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY is a Pall Mall Gazette "Extra," giving a complete catalogue of the pictures in this national collection, with over forty illustrations and descriptive notes of all the leading pictures.

Two recently issued penny booklets, from Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, are: READING AND RUNNING, by Lady Beaujolois Dent, and, "SIMPLY TRUSTING EVERY DAY," by Rev. George Everard. They both enforce saving truth with point and power.

ETERNITY. By a Banker. 1d. Partridge. Octagonal in form, this booklet will be readily received as a tract. The theme is awful, and the tone always fitting. THE NEW COVENANT, another penny tract, same author and publisher, is suitable for distribution among thoughtful Jews.

THE LORD'S DEALINGS WITH THE CONVICT DANIEL MANN. 1d. Holness. A cheap edition of a narrative that ought yet to have many readers. The story brings to view a remarkable instance of the complete triumph of Divine grace, and we trust its perusal will lead many a great sinner to glorify God.

A set of valuable "Ambulance Leaflets," dealing popularly with the treatment of contagious disease, and other matters relating to health, are published by Messrs. Crosby, Lockwood & Son, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C. (1s. 6d. per 100; specimen copies sent on receipt of halfpenny stamp.)

OUR FATHER. Notes on the Lord's Prayer by Pastor Stockmayer, of Hauptweil, Switzerland. 2d. Partridge. A precious booklet, affording glimpses of the marvellous wealth of the prayer which the Lord taught his disciples. The pages have a real experimental value, and we trust they will have many readers.

WAYSIDE WORDS is a little monthly published by Mr. J. M. McAuliffe, Lorraine Villa, Tunbridge Wells (1s. per hundred, post free). Pointed and plain, they are eminently suited for distribution as tracts. Last year's issues of this useful little publication form a booklet which we should like to see sown broadcast throughout the country.

MONASTICISM. In October last General Sir Robert Phayre read a paper on this subject at a meeting of the Protestant Alliance, at Exeter Hall. It is now published, under the title of MONASTICISM UNVEILED (1d.), on behalf of the Conventual Inquiry Society, by J. Kensit. Another pamphlet, also by General Phayre, forms a second part of the same treatise, and bears the sub-title of THE CLIMAX (2d.). These pages disclose many terrible facts, which should be widely disseminated at the present time, when some Protestants are speaking in terms of admiration of one of the most hateful institutions of the Romish system.

SUSSEX.—A country residence, with five acres of land, is for sale, for 4000 guineas, with a mission room to seat 150. Any gentleman wishing such a sphere of usefulness may apply to Mr. Dutton Briant, 29, Queen's-road, Brighton.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the services held at the Hall, Royal-road, Kennington-park, S.E.——For special evangelistic services being held at East-street, Southampton. ——For much blessing on the labours of all these brethren and for all others labouring for Christ in different parts.

BISHOP CROWTHER and a party of missionaries for the Soudan, the Upper Niger, and Sierra Leone, sailed from Liverpool on Saturday last. The company included Mr. and Mrs. Graham Wilmot Brooke, Dr. Harford Battersby, Rev. Eric Lewis, and others. The evening before sailing a farewell meeting was held, presided over by the Bishop of Liverpool. Many prayers will follow these beloved servants of God to their destination in the Dark Continent.

Obituary.

REV. W. ELMSLIE.

REV. WILLIAM ELMSLIE, late minister at Insch, Aberdeenshire, and father of the late Professor Elmslie, of the English Presbyterian College, died on Saturday at the residence of his son-in-law in Liverpool, with whom he has lived since he gave up his church. The rev. gentleman was seventy-four years of age, and received a severe shock by the untimely death of his son.

MR. TROTMAN, OXFORD.

Mr. Trotman, for ten years Oxford City Missionary, died on Sunday week. His funeral was attended by nearly 1000 persons, and was deeply impressive. Rev. J. Dann delivered an address at the grave, in which he pointed out how, in spite of disadvantages as regards education, Mr. Trotman had been a most effective preacher; how, in spite of comparative poverty, he had been famous for his deeds of charity, and in a loving and unobtrusive way had won all hearts. After his conversion he deliberately consecrated his life to the service of his Saviour.

MRS. BRIGHT LUCAS.

The death of this well-known lady removes a prominent figure from the ranks of temperance workers. Like her brother, Mr. John Bright, she was a member of the Society of Friends, though strange to say her husband was a Roman Catholic. In later years her attention was chiefly given to the interests of the British Women's Temperance Association, of which she was president. She visited America several times, and was elected president of the World's Christian Women's Temperance Union. Mrs. Lucas also held high office in the Good Templar body, and was an earnest advocate of the political enfranchisement of women.

ELI JONES.

News has reached this country of the death, at an advanced age, of the venerable Eli Jones, of New England. He was widely known and greatly beloved on both sides of the Atlantic. Only recently a volume of the lifework of himself and his noble wife has been published by their son. It was their visit to Lebanon many years ago that led to the opening up of Friends' Mission there, and at Ramallah, near Jerusalem, and that work lay nearest their hearts to their dying day. It was a chance conversation of Mr. Jones with Mr. Nathaniel Card, of Manchester, that led to the founding of the United Kidgdom Alliance in England.

MR. HENRY LEA, OF READING.

We regret to announce the death of this gentleman, known far and wide by the active part he took in forming the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association. For forty years a representative of the well-known firm of Huntley & Palmer, he was a familiar figure "on the road," especially in the South of England, to which of late years he chiefly confined his travelling. Mr. Lea succumbed to syncope, arising from an affection of the heart, his peaceful life being ended in beautiful tranquillity of mind and body. He was a friend of educational progress, political honour, and temperance reform. Not a professor only, but also a worker, his voice and influence were never withheld from good movements or endeavours. He was a minister of the Society of Friends, and preached in the Meeting-house, Church-street, Reading, on the Sunday before his death, which took place on January 20.

ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION.—The workers of this Mission in Spitalfields have been giving Sunday free breakfasts during the winter to numbers of poor gathered from the streets on Saturday night. These meals (partly supplied through the kindness of the London Samaritan Society) have been greatly appreciated by the destitute wanderers, to whom the Gospel is preached after breakfast is over.

CANADA. — Rev. Robert Wallace, of the Marchmont Home, Belleville, Canada, is again in England for the purpose of taking out a party of boys. He reports favourably of the continued blessing and prosperity attending the work, 295 having last year been added to the large family placed out from this well-known Home during the last twenty years. Mrs. Wallace remains in Canada to carry on the work, and prepare for the advent of this year's children.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The trial of the Bishop of Lincoln was resumed in the Library of Lambeth Palace last week, the case being heard on its merits.

Rev. W. H. Wright on his institution to the living of Llandinabo, in Herefordshire, applied for the faculty to remove a brass cross, candlestick, flower vases, and super-altar from the Lord's Table. Although notice was posted on the door of the Church for eight weeks, not one parishioner came forward to oppose the faculty before the Consistory Court, which met on December 14. The Chancellor, T. H. Tristram, Q.C., gave the rector the faculty, and the parish church has been cleared of these useless ornaments. We trust many rectors will do likewise.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule's Greek Testament readings at Cambridge for members of the University have commenced in the Martyn Hall. He is continuing his study of leading doctrinal words, the present one being "Sanctification." He is also preaching a course of sermons on the First Epistle to Timothy, in Holy Trinity Church. The number of University men attending the church on Sunday evening (says The Record) seems to increase each term; often there is scarcely standing-room—a most encouraging testimony to the power and attractiveness of evangelical teaching.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., of Albany, has accepted a call to Philadelphia to succeed Dr. Pierson, who resigned the charge to enter upon his Foreign Mission Crusade.

Professor Salmond, of Aberdeen, will deliver the next course of Cunningham Lectures in Edinburgh at the close of the present month. His subject will be, "The Christian Doctrine of Immortality."

Miss Graham, a member of Regent-square congregation, who two years ago went out as a missionary to China at her own expense, is now paying the cost of two additional lady missionaries who are on their way to China.

SALVATION ARMY.

Encouraging cases of conversion are reported from Paris. The silent marching along the Boulevards is said to attract all sorts and conditions of people to the Hall in Rue Auber.

"Commissioner" Coombes, who was lately transferred from the superintendence of the Army's work in Canada to that of Australia, has arrived in Melbourne, and entered upon his work.

A deputation of the Army bandsmen lately paid a visit to Mrs. Booth, who addressed the men, the scene was a most affecting one. There is no change in Mrs. Booth's condition except for the worse.

The opening of operations at Eastbourne (writes a correspondent) has brought about a wonderful revival. Numbers of anxious souls have been faithfully dealt with, and there seems to be fast-spreading conviction and much joy.

"Colonel" Estill has visited the Zulu location in Natal, and expresses much satisfaction at the work already accomplished, and the bright prospect there seems to be of extensive operations amongst the natives. The South African headquarters are being removed from Port Elizabeth to Kimberley. "Major" Tyler has arrived at the Cape, and has commenced work amongst the Dutch.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The church and congregation meeting in Finsbury Chapel contemplate uniting with Whitefield Tabernacle in Leonard-street, Finsbury.

Rev. Dr. H. R. Reynolds, principal of Cheshunt College, has, at the request of over a hundred of his old students, consented to allow himself to be nominated for the chair of the Congregational Union for 1891.

The church at Barry-road, East Dulwich (Rev. A. A. Ramsey, pastor), has now 140 members, with a congregation filling the temporary building. The London Congregational Union have given a freehold site for a new church.

The statement in our last issue that a new chapel is to be erected for the congregation of Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton, is incorrect. A circular appealing for funds to pay off the existing debt of over £2000 upon the Tabernacle, erected four years ago, has evidently caused the misapprehension.

Helpful meetings for young men are held on Sunday afternoons at Camberwell New-road Church in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association of the church. The programme of the meetings is varied in its character, and young men residing in the vicinity will find profit from attending.

In connection with the philanthropic work of the London Congregational Union, during the past five years upwards of £15,000 has been raised for free meals for poor children, and for helping ministers and other labourers in needy districts to lessen the distress with which they are brought into contact day by day; 130,000 garments have also been distributed.

New Court, Tollington Park, Manual for 1890 contains an excellent photograph of the new pastor, Rev. William Pierce. The year 1889 commenced with a roll of 802 members. All the institutions have been maintained in efficiency; and the church has raised, during the year, £2457.

The Manual of the Church, says:—"It is earnestly hoped that all persons who become members of the church will feel it incumbent upon them to engage in some Christian work; but should they be precluded from active service, it is hoped they will contribute to the funds of the various societies connected with the church, as the Lord has prospered them."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The anniversary of John G. Whittier's eighty-second birthday has recently passed, but he had to decline meeting his friends for fear of the excitement consequent thereon. The love and veneration of which he is the centre are simply boundless, and "though weak in body, his mental and spiritual vigour, and even the fire of his poetic genius, yet abide with him."

Last week a very successful series of meetings was held in Cardiff, conducted by Robert Firth Crosland, of Cleckheaton. Sinners were reached and converted, and backsliders were reclaimed. Sunday last was a day of special blessing. The way had been paved for these results by the visits just previously of Samuel and Deborah Lloyd, and the "family visits" of J. Ernest Grubb, of Carrick-on-Suir.

METHODIST.

Mr. Thompson and Rev. W. D. Walters visited Doncaster last week to speak on behalf of the London Mission.

Successful "Forward Movement" meetings have recently been held at Cardiff, and are to be followed by a Convention at Swansea. It will be held on March 18, and Revs. Hugh Price Hughes and J. E. Clapham will, with others, take part. English Methodism in South Wales is about to undertake more active aggressive work.

A great Home Mission Convention was held in Sunderland a few days ago. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Peter Thompson, and Mr. Josiah Nix, of London, and local friends. A spirit of aggressive interest has recently been manifested by the Methodist Churches in the town, which, it is hoped, has been greatly stimulated by the Convention.

A development of Christian activity on the lines of the "Forward Movement," has of late characterised the Methodist New Connexion Church at Stamford-street, Ashton-under-Lyne. The Christian Workers' Association was revived; its members flooded the town with 20,000 handbills; cottages and unused mission-rooms were opened, soon crowded, and many who attended received spiritual good. A ragged children's service and a series of "Happy Evenings" were begun. The minister (Rev. H. T. Marshall) is surrounded with a band of willing and enthusiastic workers.

BAPTIST.

A five days' mission has been held at Bloomsbury Chapel.

Two new forms of work were added during the year to Westbourne-park Church—a Country Ministers' Aid Society and a Labour Bureau.

The Regent's Park College Preaching Station Society has issued its annual report. Good work has been done at several places, in addition to the regular stations, children's services being an interesting feature adopted.

Rev. William Stott has resigned the charge of the Abbey-road Church, St. John's Wood, which he has held for twenty-eight years with evident fidelity and usefulness. Mr. Stott was asked to reconsider the matter, but he replied that it was after much prayer and consideration that he took the step, and he could not alter his decision.

Rev. Alfred Walker was formally recognised a few days ago as pastor of the church in Dawes-road, Fulham. The chapel was erected by the London Baptist Association in 1888, during the presidency of Rev. W. Stott, and Mr. Walker has been in charge of the work for the past eighteen months. Although the church has only recently been formed, it now numbers nearly a hundred members. There is a good Sunday-school, and the congregations are growing steadily.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A great spiritual uplifting has been experienced throughout the whole of West Cork, reaching even the remotest parts of that district, during the past two or three months. Many remarkable cases of conversion have taken place.

A bequest of £200,000 has been left to Belfast, by Mr. Henry James Campbell, to found a college for the education of the sons of Presbyterian and Episcopal ministers, and for young men intending to enter the Christian ministry in connection with either of these churches in Ireland.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

In Aberdeen special fortnightly meetings of the Ladies' Missionary Association of the Church of Scotland are held to hear the latest letters from the Indian mission field. The meetings are being attended by increasing numbers.

The committee appointed by a meeting of ministers and elders at Glasgow to consider the writings of Professors Dods and Bruce has completed its work, and the substance of the report is made public. A meeting was called for Monday last in the Christian Institute, when the report was formally submitted and considered.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Young Women's Christian Association, Mrs. W. M. Oatts submitted a most satisfactory report. The work of the Association has been greatly assisted by the extensive accommodation now at its disposal in the Institute in Bath-street, and there are twenty-eight branches throughout the city. The attendance at meetings is steadily growing, and the members and associates number over three thousand.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. J. B. Huston, Irish Presbyterian minister, Aghadowey.—Rev. W. J. Miller, Free Church minister, Tillicoultry, N.B.—Rev. S. J. Hanson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Kingstown, Dublin.—Rev. Dr. Reuben Seddon, formerly for many years pastor of Victoria-park Congregational Tabernacle, South Hackney.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 16.—2 Chron. XXIX.

IT was a blessing for Judah that Ahaz left as his successor a son who inherited none of his father's wickedness. Hezekiah ranks as one of the best kings that occupied the throne of David. This chapter is full of interesting and illustrative incident. It describes the beginning of the reformation effected under Hezekiah. We note: (1) The importance of having the right king on the throne.—An Ahaz means degradation and ruin to the kingdom; a Hezekiah secures true prosperity and glory. In every life, as in the kingdom of Judah, true blessing begins by admitting the Righteous King to the throne.

(2) True reformation must begin at the house of God.—Ahaz had left this in a terrible condition (5, 7); hence the distress which afflicted the nation (8, 9). There can be no prosperity at home or abroad until the temple is restored. Hence the Levites are assembled (4, 5); their names are mentioned (12-15); and for eight days they are occupied in cleansing the house, and preparing it for the worship of God (16-19). Thus, also, does our Lord deal with each one of us. He begins to change the whole life by making us right within. If the heart is not right, the life cannot be blessed.

(3) How the reformation was accomplished.—"The king rose early" (20). He had important business in hand and could not delay. "Sin offerings" were presented in expiation for the sins of "the kingdom, the sanctuary, and for Judah" (21). Where there is a true return to God, sins will be dealt with in particular. The ceremony of laying on of hands (23) expressed the act of transferring sin to the substitute. Sin cannot be removed apart from faith in the Lamb of God (John i. 29). "The burnt offering" (24, 27) was not only typical of Christ offering Himself without spot to God, but also represented the whole-hearted return of the people. Hence the song of the Lord, expressive of the gladness of the people, began with the presentation of the burnt offering (25-27). Is it not true that only with the surrender of ourselves to God does our true gladness begin?

(4) The first effects of the reformation.—These were a deeper reverence for the presence of God (29); increased joy before Him (30); closer communion with Him (31); and readiness to offer their best to Him (31-36). The renewal of our covenant with God should produce similar results. If you are his by sacred covenant, live with Him, rejoice before Him, and yield all to Him.

MONDAY, FEB. 17.—2 Chron. XXX.

The temple being prepared, the people are now invited to serve God in it. We have here

(1) The royal proclamation (1-12).—The Passover, though one of the most important feasts, had long been neglected (5). The nation could not look for prosperity while his appointment was neglected. Revival had commenced, and it is immediately followed by regard for God's ordinance. It was not possible to observe it at the time appointed (Exod. xii. 6, 18); so Hezekiah called it for the second month (2), as also directed in the law (Numb. ix. 10, 11). Posts were sent with royal letters throughout the land (6). It was an honourable work, similar to that of all the King's messengers to-day. What a message it was (6-9). It called to repentance, and urged it by the example of their fathers (6, 7). It demanded surrender to God (8), and promised great blessing on these conditions (9). Is not our message similar? How strangely it was received! Some mocked (10), not because they did not need the message, but because they would not know their need. They most need God's mercy who are most ready to despise it. But all did not receive it so. Both in Judah (12) and in Israel (11) there were many ready to respond to the appeal.

(2) The Passover celebrated (13-27).—They began well by destroying the altars of idolatry (14). The feast and its antitype can only be observed as the leaven of evil is put away (1 Cor. v. 7). The priests and Levites were shamed by the zeal of the people (15). They who should have led in this work were sadly at fault. There were irregularities in connection with the feast (17-20), for which, however, Hezekiah earnestly and successfully prayed. They were not such irregularities as the people were able to remedy. God accepted the service because the heart was right (19). The enthusiasm was such that the feast was prolonged another seven days (22-24). When the heart is in God's service it never becomes a weariness. The joy of the people was unequalled since the days of Solomon (25, 26). They were learning to serve the Lord with gladness (Ps. c. 2). The Passover closed with blessing from God, and prayer from the people (27). The two are always connected. The blessing of God answers and inspires further prayer.

TUESDAY, FEB. 18.—2 Chron. XXXI.

The statement of the last verse (21), that Hezekiah did everything "with all his heart, and prospered," is abundantly illustrated throughout this chapter.

(1) The destruction of idolatry (1).—Already something had been done in this direction (2 Kings xviii. 4); the people now continue the work. This was a fitting sequel to the joyous feast they had just observed. The more enjoyment we have in the presence of God, the more zealous are we in discovering and seeking to remove sin. Their work extended even to the cities of Ephraim and Manasseh; and the word "utterly" indicates the thoroughness of their work (2 Cor. vii. 12).

(2) The arrangements for the temple worship.—These included—the restoration of the courses which David had appointed (2); the provision made out of the king's bounty for the expenses of the altar (3); the command that the people should pay their dues according to the law, and thus encourage the priests and Levites (4); the generous response the people made (5-10); the provision made for storing the gifts of the people, and for devoting them to the uses for which they were intended (11-20).

The chapter suggests: (1) That the zeal of one man may provoke that of many more.—The people took an important part in the reformation, but only because they were led by their faithful, earnest king. How much our King can do with a loyal and obedient people! (2) That zeal for God shows no quarter to God's enemies.—Idols, however dear, are "utterly destroyed" when "the joy of the Lord is our strength." The desire to retain one sin proves that the heart is not wholly God's. (3) That zeal should be according to knowledge.—It should not spend itself in destruction. Nor must it neglect prudent measures for doing the work of God. Many a man has zeal enough, like Jehu, for destroying evils, but fails in building up that which is good.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 19.—2 Chron. XXXII.

Here we have many instructive things:—

(1) Sennacherib's invasion (1).—This is not what we should have expected to read after the splendid work of reformation Hezekiah has accomplished. "After these things"—not peace undisturbed, but invasion by a powerful army. Comp. Gen. xxii. 1. Don't expect deliverance from conflict and trouble, whatever advances you have made in the divine life.

(2) Hezekiah's preparation to meet the invasion (2-8).—As Matthew Henry says, By cutting off the water supply he made arrangements that the country should give them a cold reception (3, 4); and by raising towers, building walls, and providing weapons, he arranged that the city should give them a warm reception (5, 6). Having thus made wise preparations, he can address words of encouragement to the people (7, 8). He did not neglect the use of means, yet he trusted not in his own plans, but only in the presence and power of the Lord his God. It is the right method for conducting all spiritual warfare.

(3) Sennacherib's blasphemy (9-19).—There was considerable subtilty in his message. The fact that there was only one altar before which the people could worship (12) was emphasised. Were the people sufficiently delivered from idolatry to feel no regret that they had not other altars, in case appeal to the one should fail? The reference to other victories of Sennacherib was equally subtle (13-15). Why should the people of Judah triumph where so many stronger nations had failed? The servants were as bold, and even more insolent than Sennacherib (16-19). The aim of all this blasphemy and brag was to discourage the people. To destroy our faith in God is the first aim of the enemy.

(4) Hezekiah's victory (20-22).—There was enough in the blasphemous message to turn the eyes of Hezekiah up to God with confidence of success. The manner in which the message is described (19) contains in itself the promise of Sennacherib's defeat. Hezekiah did not retaliate, nor even parley with the enemy; he and Isaiah simply took it to God (20). Let the young Christian learn how to triumph. The strongest Christian is no match for the enemy; but the Lord is more than a match for even the most powerful. "One angel" (21) commissioned by God was enough to send Sennacherib home with shame; and his own sons completed the work by putting him to death. Thus does God humble the pride of his enemies.

(5) Hezekiah's end (25-33).—Even he sinned, so that the wrath of God fell upon him and his people (25, 31). He had destroyed idols in the kingdom, and subdued enemies abroad; but through "pride of heart" he fell (1 Cor. x. 12). Yet his repentance followed his sin (26), so that the punishment was stayed, and the prosperity of his kingdom continued. The value of his life is evidenced by the statement that "all Judah did him honour at his death" (33). "The memory of the just is blessed."

THURSDAY, FEB. 20.—2 Chron. XXXIII.

That Manasseh should succeed Hezekiah is one of those mysteries we cannot understand. There were few men so good as Hezekiah, nor so bad as Manasseh.

(1) His sin (2-10).—He restored the idolatries his father had destroyed (2, 3); built altars in the temple and its courts (4, 5); offered his children to Moloch (6); used witchcraft (6); and even exceeded the heathen in his abominations (9). He was as whole-hearted and zealous in doing evil as his father had been in doing right. His guilt is aggravated by the remembrance of his godly father's example, and by his persistent rejection of God's warning messages (10). No man could appear a less likely subject of God's grace than Manasseh. Wickedness in him is full blown.

(2) His repentance (11-17).—It began with his affliction (12). His sin had produced its inevitable result. But he had need to be thankful for the affliction that made him seek God. There are many men who never would turn to God but because of the trouble He sends them (Job. xxxvi. 8-10). God answered his cry (13). What case is hopeless when Manasseh could be saved? Proof of his repentance was given in his attempt to undo his former evil (14-16). An expression of sorrow is not repentance unless it lead to the forsaking of sin.

But though Manasseh could do much, he could not uproot the seeds of evil sown in the heart of his son Amon. During his brief reign of two years (21-25), this foolish son imitated all that was bad in his father; but did not attempt, like Manasseh, to humble himself before God (23). Instead of this, he "trespassed more and more." The influence of Manasseh's sin continued long after he himself was dead. Others will be what our life and character make them.

FRIDAY, FEB. 21.—2 Chron. XXXIV.

Josiah, the son and successor of Amon, was as much better than his father as Manasseh had been worse than Hezekiah. He "walked in the ways of David his father" (2). He chose David rather than his own father for his example.

(1) His early piety (3).—He was only fifteen years old when he began to seek the Lord. This was no doubt the secret of his useful life. They have a great advantage who begin to serve God in youth. In Josiah's case it is wonderful that he should begin so soon. His father's memory, and the prevailing example of his people were against him. With greater privileges now, should we not look for more frequent child conversions?

(2) His destruction of idolatry (3-7).—He was only nineteen years old when he commenced a bold work of reformation (3). He did it with great zeal, not only in Judah, but throughout all the land of Israel (7). This was the best proof he could give of having found the Lord himself.

(3) The house of the Lord repaired (8-13).—What terrible disaster the two previous reigns had effected (11). Until the work of Josiah began it was not clear how much evil had been wrought. Nor, until Jesus takes his position on the throne, do we know how much needs to be subdued.

(4) The Law of God recovered (14-28).—The fact that this was lost is a further indication of the ruined condition of the kingdom. It was found by Hilkiah (14), and ultimately reached the king (15-19). Its message alarmed him, so that he wisely inquired of the Lord (21, 22). The prophecy of Huldah confirmed the message of the law (23-25); yet promised deliverance in Josiah's time because of his repentance (26-28). The only wise method is to receive such messages of warning with the spirit of humble penitence (Jonah iii. 5-10).

(5) The covenant with God renewed (29-33).—The king again led the people. He first read to them the law; then with his whole heart entered into covenant (30, 31); and all that were present agreed to it. It was this wise method of instructing the people that preserved them faithful to God during the whole of Josiah's reign (33).

SATURDAY, FEB. 22.—2 Chron. XXXV.

(1) The Great Passover (1-19).—Evidently, Josiah lost no time in obeying the word of the law, which commanded the observance of the Passover (19). It was observed the same year in which he began to repair the temple (xxxiv. 8). Unlike that which Hezekiah had kept (xxx. 2), this was celebrated at the time appointed by the law (1). They were equally obedient to the commandment of God through David (4) and Moses (6, 12). Service for God must be rendered in obedience to his direction. It was a time of great generosity on the part of Josiah (7) and his princes (8). They gave "willingly" for the altar of God. It was a memorable Passover (18), chiefly because of the great numbers present and the exactness with which the original directions were observed. The interesting incident which the feast recalled was calculated to deepen the devotion and gratitude of the people. They would be encouraged to future obedience by the memory of such a deliverance.

(2) Josiah and Necho (20-27).—In this incident even Josiah does not appear to advantage. A very good man may do a very foolish thing. In this matter he acted not only without God's counsel (20), but against it (21). The message of Necho was wise and modest (21), and indicated a very remarkable faith in the overruling providence of God. But a strange infatuation possessed Josiah. Without any Divine warrant he conceived it his duty to fight against Necho (22). Going unsent, he could not expect, and did not receive, God's protection (23, 24). We can only look for God to keep us while we are following his lead. The abundant lamentation that followed his death (25-27) indicated the esteem in which he was held. His one act of folly had too soon terminated his useful life.

MR. C. INGLIS AT THE EAST-END.

THROUGHOUT the whole of January, Mr. Charles Inglis has been preaching in the Great Assembly Hall at Mile End, and, perhaps, on no former visit has this servant of God been so much blessed as in the one that has just come to a close.

It has been a cheering sight to see that building crowded on Sundays, with between four and five thousand people willing to listen to the story of the Saviour's dying love. The after-meetings have been times when the presence of God has been greatly realised, and the many workers in that mission have had their souls filled with thanksgiving to God, as they have seen many to whom they have spoken leave the inquiry-room rejoicing in a newly found Saviour.

The meetings that have been held for Christians have proved to be times of deep profit. Many of the Lord's people will look back to them as seasons when their spiritual life was quickened, and when they gave up themselves afresh to toil amongst the teeming masses in the East of London till the Master comes.

PASTOR CHINIQUY writes from 23, Laval-avenue, Montreal:—"This last year, in spite of my eighty years, I have lectured in more than 160 towns, villages, and cities of Canada and the United States. In every place I have found one, ten, twenty, and sometimes more, French Canadian families converted from Romanism...I have a work which is very dear to my heart—to help those priests who want to give up their errors and accept and preach the Gospel in its purity. Their number is increasing every day, and it is to me they generally come for help."

WINCHESTER SOLDIERS' HOME.—During the past few months the Lord has been graciously blessing the work carried on here. The converts are frequently sent into the immediate neighbourhood to preach and speak; and this not only helps to spread the Gospel message, but is a valuable means of training the converts—more especially the soldiers—for missionary work abroad. It is hoped that this evangelistic agency will soon be greatly extended. The colportage branch has done much good, but the homes in the rural districts are so widely scattered that the employment of a Bible-carriage has become necessary. While this enlarges the sphere of usefulness, it increases the responsibilities of the Misses Perks, who direct the Mission.

Sunday Afternoon, February 23.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.—Luke iv. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT: HEB. ii. 18.

"Being full of the Holy Ghost" (1).—The words connect the temptation with the baptism (iii. 22). He then entered publicly upon his great work, and was anointed for it. Note that the first result of his anointing was, not great service, but severe and painful testing. Exalted spiritual experiences are often succeeded by similar assaults of the enemy.

"Led by the Spirit" (1).—Though the Son of God, and full of the Holy Ghost, He would not go into temptation unled. Mark i. 12 says "driveth." The self-confidence that goes into temptation is sure to fall. Lot in Sodom, and Peter in the high priest's palace are examples. Jesus manifested the spirit which He encourages in us (Matt. vi. 13).

"Wilderness."—Tradition says that this was a part of the wilderness of Judea, near to Jericho, where there is a sharp peak, named Quarantania, surrounded by rocks containing a number of caves. "Led by the Spirit" (1) to be "tempted of the devil" (2).—How strangely the words read! Yet they suggest to us the different aims of temptation. Satan was behind it, aiming to lead Jesus to sin, and so disqualify Him for his work. God was behind it, seeking to prove Him sinless, and to qualify Him for his High-Priestly work (Heb. ii. 18, iv. 15, 16).

There are many speculations as to how the temptation came to Jesus, whether Satan really appeared, if so, in what form; or whether he merely hurled his suggestions at our Lord's mind. It seems better to read the narrative simply, and to conclude that in some form the devil really appeared to Jesus. But the main thing to remember is that He was tempted "like as we are" (Heb. iv. 15). There are other unprofitable speculations as to how Jesus could be tempted. Any answer to this question that takes away from the reality of his temptation is manifestly wrong. It is enough for us to know that "He suffered, being tempted." He had put Himself so entirely by our side that He felt temptation as keenly as we feel it; hence his power to succour.

The time of the temptation was wisely chosen (2). After "forty days'" fast, Jesus felt the pangs of hunger. He was assailed during the forty days; but it was when they were ended that the fierce assaults were made. The circumstances were all favourable to the adversary; the victory of Jesus therefore becomes the more valuable.

(1) The three assaults (3, 5-7, 9-11).—The order here differs from that of Matt. iv. It is needless to discuss which is correct. Luke's order agrees with what 1 John ii. 16 describes as being in the world. And the same order may be observed in Gen. iii. 6. The first was an appeal to "the lust of the flesh"; the second, to "the lust of the eyes"; the third, to "the pride of life." Satan's success in the garden encouraged him to present similar attractions to our Lord. These are his inducements still—the prize he has to offer to us. What a blessing to know that all were presented to Jesus in vain.

The first and third assaults refer to our Lord's Sonship (3-9). The Father's declaration (iii. 22) was followed by the devil's "If." It was the same method which proved so successful in the garden—"Hath God said" (Gen. iii. 1). And it often proves successful still. To even question God's word is the way to fall.

The first temptation was to the sin of distrust. Jesus was hungry; his Father was not giving Him bread; He had power as the Son of God to make the stone into a loaf; why not put forth the power, and at one and the same time, prove his Divine Sonship, and satisfy his hunger? It looked almost innocent. But it meant taking Himself out of his Father's hand; ceasing to depend upon Him; and charging Him with want of proper care for his Son.

In the second assault the sin is of a different character. Satan's hope of success rests upon the tempting offer he makes (5-7). In some way he made "all the kingdoms of the world" appear before the Saviour. There is reason to believe that he spake the truth when he said "This power has been delivered unto me" (6). The phrase "prince of this world," by which Jesus often speaks of him, seems to admit his claim (John xii. 31). This makes the temptation appear more subtle. "Fall down before me" (7) meant, not worship paid to the person of the tempter, but recognition of the position of authority he has just claimed. And upon that little condition "all the kingdoms of the world" shall be transferred to Jesus! It was an easier method than that which the baptism of Jesus had foreshadowed. The same tempter's voice spake afterwards through Peter (Matt. xvi. 22-23). To do anything wrong for gain is to yield to this temptation. Achan (Josh. vii.) and Gehazi (2 Kings v.) are illustrations.

The third temptation was to presumption (9-11). He was asked to abuse his position as a Son of God. The "pinnacle of the temple" was probably "the parapet of the portico of Herod overlooking the Valley of Jehoshaphat."—Ellicott. Even to look down from the position almost made one dizzy. But the tempter suggested that, if Jesus threw Himself down, angels would care for Him. And he enforced his temptation by a quotation from Scripture.

(2) Our Lord's victory.—Learn from Him how to overcome. (1) He held no parley with the tempter.—In this our first parents failed, and we have done the same. An immediate and a decisive resistance is our only hope of triumph. (2) He overcame as man.—Though "the Son of God," yet He answered "Man shall not" (4). If we do not remember this, we lose the benefit of his example. (3) His weapon was "It is written" (4, 8, 12).—Each time He quoted from Deuteronomy, the book which men are seeking to discredit to-day. By thus using the book, our Lord has set his seal upon it. Each quotation was a precept. He was concerned to obey God, hence could not listen to the suggestions of Satan. The constant surrender to the authority of God saves us from yielding to the authority of Satan.

HOPE COTTAGE, WOODFORD.—During last year three children were received into this Home, in which eleven remained when the report was drawn up. Applications are constantly being made on behalf of children to whom the training of the Home would be advantageous, but they have had to be refused. Mrs. A. Johnston, of Forest Lodge, Woodford-green, Essex, will answer inquiries respecting this useful Institution.

ANOTHER CASE OF MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE has happened in West Ham. A young girl of about fifteen years of age was sent out by her parents on an errand; she did not return, and cannot be traced. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jeffs, are Christian people, and, although human aid is apparently unavailing, they feel that God knows where their daughter is, and that He can restore her unharmed. They request the prayers of Christians in public or private, that the Lord will protect and restore the lost one.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN,—The all-day meeting on Friday last was a profitable occasion. The quiet time spent with God during the morning hours was helpful to all; it was used by Christian workers and others, of various denominations, to present their petitions to God, and to return thanks for mercies received. An encouraging address was given from Isaiah xlv., the ground-work of which was the stability of God's promises, and the consequent firm ground of trust which every Christian should enjoy. A large meeting in the afternoon was addressed by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who viewed the story of the journey to Emmaus in a typical aspect, and drew helpful lessons, by which the spiritual life might be deepened. In the evening Mr. Reader Harris gave a striking address on the observance of the Sabbath, and again the gathering was a very large and attentive one.

EDINBURGH INDUSTRIAL HOME.—This Institution for fallen women, Alnwick Hill, near Liberton, is a work of mercy conducted on definite Christian lines. The premises were never well adapted to their purpose, and the time has at last come to replace the present dilapidated structure with a more suitable and commodious one. The undertaking will cost not less than £3000. The need is very urgent, and we trust it will be possible to supply it without delay. The great aim of the managers is to lead the inmates to love God and trust the Saviour, while teaching them orderly, regular, and industrious habits. There are generally about thirty in the Home, their ages ranging from sixteen to thirty. A large proportion are orphans, or the children of careless or vicious parents. Every year a number are sent to situations as domestic servants, or are restored to friends, or otherwise disposed of. While in the Home, the inmates are chiefly occupied in washing and laundry work, the proceeds of which go far towards defraying the working expenses. Mr. J. Forbes Moncrieff, 13, Hill-street, Edinburgh, is the secretary and treasurer of the Institution.

PRESENTATION EDITION, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"From the persevering, most laborious, and self-sacrificing efforts of the subject of this memoir, it is evident that her mind was deeply imbued with the conviction that she was 'not her own, but bought with a price.' Hence she sought to 'glorify God in her body and in her spirit, which were His.' With respect to those who are living in the narrow boundary of self and self-interest, with such an example as that presented in the narrative, how well it may be said, 'Go thou and do likewise!' The deceased was a noble pattern of living, not for self, but for others."

Gospel Magazine, February, 1890.

"The simple story of a life of glorious and fruitful labour—vivid on well-nigh every page of it with records of the triumphs of grace—oftentimes in the foulest and darkest corners of Dundee. So far as appears from the book, Miss Macpherson had but one object in life—to set forth Christ, and Him crucified. . . . A fresh illustration of the fact that the secret of power in Christian work is a close walk with God, and that self-sacrifice never fails of true success."—Word and Work, January 3, 1890.

"Our friend, the biographer, has made us all his debtors by his interesting stories of life and labour for Christ. He is especially happy in this delineation of the life of his devoted sister. The volume is full of inspiration and soul-quickening, as well as a rebuke to our lethargy."—Christian Treasury, January, 1890.

"This volume, which is both written and printed in good style, and well bound, will be a charm to many Christian families. It is worthy of a large circulation."

Primitive Methodist, December 19, 1889.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of perusing. . . . Christian workers will find in this biography a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. It is the history of a real woman, who in the course of her life spoke about the tremendous business of the soul to upwards of twenty thousand persons, one by one. . . . We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting work."

OLD MARGARET:

OR,

A SAINT AT LAST.

BY

Rev. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

WITH STRIKING PORTRAIT.

In Tinted Covers, 6d.;
Cloth Boards, 1s.

"A narrative taken from real life, and given to us in a very felicitous manner by the descriptive pen of Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow. Dr. Cumming is well known to the religious public as one of the most attractive speakers at the Keswick Convention, and he uses the incidents, here so thrillingly sketched, of the experiences in the heart and life of a very remarkable woman to set before his readers the nature of sanctification and complete consecration. The whole picture is drawn by the hand of a master, and cannot fail in many ways to give great interest to the reader."

Dublin Evening Mail, Jan. 15, 1890.

"The significance of Dr. Cumming's narrative lies in the fact that, after sixty years in the midst of degradation, this poor woman became one of the most gentle and refined Christian ladies the Doctor has ever known; and after reading his sketch it is impossible to doubt his testimony. We do not know that we have ever read a more impressive story of its class, one so free from the slightest taint of the artificial, so genuine in every line of the picture. The sketch is accompanied by what we can well believe to be a strikingly faithful portrait.—Glasgow Daily Mail, February 3, 1890.

"Old Margaret's faith and living testimony are spoken of from the evidence of those who saw her constantly. Our readers will find her story a remarkably stimulating one, and they will have the advantage of learning from one who is well known as a spiritual teacher, what this higher life teaching really is. We need say nothing as to the author's power of description, but the literary grace of the narrative is such as one seldom meets with.—Perthshire Advertiser, February 3, 1890.

"Dr. Cumming has given a most interesting little sketch of a very remarkable life. To those who knew the dear old woman no recommendation is needed. They will laugh and cry by turns as they read the humorous and pathetic incidents which the story tells; and others cannot fail to be interested in it. . . . Dr. Cumming has given us a most delightful little memoir."—Life of Faith, February, 1890.

Appeals.

East London Institute.—MRS. DAWBARN, Doric Lodge 28, Bow-road, E., who has charge of the Women's Branch of the East London Institute for training foreign missionaries, writes:—"We should be very grateful to receive subscribers' letters for hospitals, particularly the London, Victoria Park, the Children's Hospital at Shadwell, Throat Hospital, Royal Ophthalmic, and others. We are constantly asked for them in our visiting amongst the poor, and are quite unable to supply the demand."

Peckham-rye.—A new tabernacle is being erected for the congregation at Peckham-rye under the pastorate of Rev. Frank M. Smith, formerly of Hornsey-rise. Mr. Smith's earnest evangelical ministry has been attended with such prosperity aad blessing that the Norfolk-street Chapel is inadequate to accommodate the congregation, and for some months the Sunday services have been held in the Peckham Public Hall. This has been a great expense and inconvenience, and recently a site has been secured, and the building of a new edifice commenced. Contributions towards its cost will be welcomed by Rev. F. M. SMITH, 3, Friern-road, East Dulwich, London, S.E.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1890.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

Appendix—Elihu Burritt on "The Good Samaritan."

"No better service could be done to the Church of Christ than to circulate this work—which is like a trumpet call from beginning to end—among Christians who are laggards in the Master's work."
Word and Work.

"These Addresses will be a tonic to many a weary and half-hearted worker."—The Baptist.

"Urgent exhortations to Christians to rouse themselves to active service for Christ. The book contains also Elihu Burritt's striking address on 'The Good Samaritan,' a paper well worth reprinting."

PULVERMACHER'S APPLIANCES are invaluable in all NERVOUS and PAINFUL DISORDERS, and whilst building up the debilitated constitution, they arrest that premature waste and decay which undermines the whole fabric of the human body.

These MARVELLOUS CURATIVE APPLIANCES have now stood the test of Forty Years, and for comfort, efficiency, and cheapness they have no equal. The question is often asked, "What is the difference between PULVERMACHER'S BELTS and those of other makers?" and the answer is that Mr. Pulvermacher is the only maker of Electric Belts who has ever been supported by the State Physicians of England and Austria, and the only maker who has ever been allowed to refer to our London Hospital Physicians.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says:—"I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the professional and scientific men."

Dr. GOLDING BIRD, M.D., Physician to Guy's Hospital, says:—"I can hardly recommend Mr. PULVERMACHER'S INVENTION too strongly to the notice of my medical brethren."

Sir CHARLES LOCOCK, Bart., M.D., says:—"PULVERMACHER'S BELTS are very effective in neuralgia and rheumatic affections, and I have prescribed them largely in my practice for other similar maladies, paralysis, &c.

PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, at 194, Regent Street, London, W., is the oldest Electric Institution in the world, and Pamphlets and Testimonials may be had free of charge on application.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"
Who may be personally or relatively
INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.
MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CASE OF A CLERGYMAN—BOTH LUNGS DISEASED.

Three years ago the Rev. CHAS. HUSBAND, of the RECTORY, CLARENDON, JAMAICA, came to Coombe Lodge to consult me. Diagnosis of the case—"Phthisis—upper lobe of right lung decidedly diseased—left lung incipient Phthisis." He had had a cough for four years—had always been delicate.

When symptoms of a decided character set in, he consulted a doctor in Jamaica; afterwards another in London, who pronounced the lung diseased. Failing to realise any benefit he applied to me. The symptoms now were cough, expectoration, pain, short breathing, loss of flesh and strength. He had been ordered a course of the hypophosphites (perfectly useless when taken alone).

Three months after this, when writing for a case of medicine to be sent out to Jamaica; he says:—"I am much improved in health, but am feeling a dull pain in my right lung, which leads me to think there is still mischief there, so I still continue your treatment." (Had he given up then, I believe he would have died.)

I received favourable accounts from the patient in each successive two months, until an exceedingly painful family bereavement caused a slight relapse, from which he recovered again.

Fifteen weeks from the time he came to me, he reported himself—"Never better than now in all my life. My voice is now as clear and good as in my best days."

I heard from him in July last. He says: "Thanks to the Divine blessing on your invaluable medicine I continue in perfect health, as I can do more work at 40 than I did at 25 years old. I feel bound in simple gratitude to register my heartfelt thanks to you. I am doing my best to bring your remedies into notice here."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, Therefore BEST.

"A Refresher"

CADBURY'S COCOA is closely allied to milk in the large proportion of flesh-forming and strength-sustaining elements that it contains. It is prepared on the principle of excluding the superabundance of fatty indigestible matter with which cocoa abounds—supplying a refined thin infusion of absolutely pure cocoa, exhilarating and refreshing, for Breakfast, Luncheon, Tea, or Supper—giving staying power and imparting new life and vigour to growing children, and those of delicate constitutions.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION TO DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

CRITICAL STATE OF FINANCES.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,

MR. WHEATLEY and myself are much concerned at the serious diminution in the receipts at Christmas time. For many years past we have been enabled to pay up all claims at the end of the year, and leave a substantial balance in hand; but this time we are some hundreds of pounds behindhand, and unless some fifteen hundred pounds is forthcoming within the next few weeks, we shall be compelled partially to abandon at least some of our efforts.

The work accomplished in the Prisoners' Branch during the last year has been enormous, and it is difficult for us to believe that the Christian public will suffer so serious a calamity to befall the Mission.

We have made, and are still making, the matter a subject of constant prayer, and leave it now in our heavenly Father's hands, waiting for His clear and distinct will.

Any donation should be sent either to our Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. WHEATLEY 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.; or to myself, at 4, Ampton-st., Regent-square, W.C.

Yours sincerely, GEORGE HATTON,
Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission.

4, AMPTON STREET, REGENT SQUARE, W.C.

WORK AMONGST MEN

THERE are large bodies of men among the myriads of toilers in our metropolis who entirely neglect public worship.

Left to themselves, these masses of men become unchristianised, infidel and depraved, adding largely to the dangerous classes.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

in addition to its 393 Missionaries on ordinary districts, by its staff of 105 special and well-qualified Missionaries, is bringing large numbers of these men under the upraising influence of the Gospel of Christ.

Last year 72,827 visits were paid to poor Foreigners in our City, and 1,049 religious services were held for them in their various languages.

In upwards of 10,000 public-houses, quite 200,000 persons were reasoned with upon religion and temperance. Upwards of 85,000 factory people were instructed in the Gospel, and many attended the 1,782 meetings held for their benefit.

The Sabbathless tram-car, omnibus, and railway-men received upwards of 200,000 visits in the public ways, at the stations, and in their homes.

The known results of this earnest seeking to save the lost is most satisfactory. Tens of thousands have been rightly influenced, and during the past year, 486 communicants have been won from amongst them, hundreds of drunkards have been reformed, and many thousands who have sunk back from the hard struggle of life have, in the time of sickness and approaching death, received consolation.

To support and extend this great work for the Lord Jesus, large funds are urgently needed. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.; or by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

Funds are especially needed at this Season.

This Society has been in active operation for 104 years. Its 240 Christian voluntary agents pay, on an average, 2,000 visits monthly in relieving the sick poor of London. Kindly remember the work in testamentary arrangements.

Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

ASHLEY MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN.—Help is earnestly asked to assist the poor of this Mission, with bread, coals, &c. Cast-off clothing thankfully received. A large Mothers' Meeting, and various classes held every evening.—Miss BONTEIN, 22A, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W.

CONTRIBUTIONS of money, clothing, coal and bread tickets, are earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, in aid of the more destitute patients and their families. The smallest gifts will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

THE COTTAGE HOME, Old Windsor, for those needing rest and country air. Donations will be most thankfully received by Mrs. LAYTON. Invalids writing for admittance will kindly enclose stamp.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION, Vinegar Grounds, City-road, E.C. (WALTER PENROSE'S). Established 18 years. Work vigorously carried on, but sadly harassed for funds; they were never more needed than now.

THE SHIVERING AND SUFFERING POOR OF LONDON.—For each 10s. subscribed, 15 adults or 20 children can have a substantial meal. Help greatly required to supply widows and other needy people with Food, Coals, and Clothing. Bankers: L. & County.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING, Vicar (30 years), St. Paul's, Clerkenwell 45, Colebrooke-row, N.

MISSION TO SEAMEN, Rio de Janeiro.—Wanted, an American Organ or Harmonium for Mission and Reading-room in connection with above Mission. There are often over a hundred ships in the harbour with English-speaking crews cut off from all Christian privileges, and exposed to fierce temptations. A boat for work afloat has been already given; and between £20 and £30 has been promised or subscribed towards outfit and passage of a missionary, who it is hoped will go out early in May, and will be supported locally. Contributions may be sent to R. C. Morgan, Esq., Member of Committee, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London; the Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, London; or to Lieut.-Col. HOBBS, Netley, Hants., Hon. Sec., who will gladly give further information on application.

LEYSIAN MEDICAL MISSION, Whitecross-street, needs funds. 150 patients seen weekly. Gospel services held. Subscriptions received by Dr. GRIFFITH, Honorary Physician, 45, Finsbury-square, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

TORQUAY.—Sharon Convalescent Home is open to persons requiring salutary air.—For particulars apply to HON. SEC., Chelston Manor.

HELPING THE DESTITUTE.—Cast-off clothing, provisions, or cash will be thankfully received by the Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., to help in Relief work among the destitute, free meals to poor children attending Board Schools, soup kitchen, and other benevolent agencies. Offerings entrusted to us will be prudently and impartially distributed.

DINNERS TO POOR CHILDREN in Clerkenwell.—600 meals are provided weekly in Cow Cross Mission Hall. Funds urgently needed. Collecting cards on application. — WILLIAM CATLIN, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville.

THE SUFFERING POOR.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

Is in URGENT NEED of DONATIONS for AID to the POOR by Tickets for Coal, Bread, Lodgings, &c., which are available all over London and Suburbs; also for its Convalescent Homes at Bournemouth and Sandgate, with 185 beds.—Donations will be most thankfully received by JOHN JAMES JONES, 98, High-st., Homerton, London, E.

BRITISH & FOREIGN EVANGELICAL TRACT SOCIETY AND PRAYER UNION.

TRACTS
English, Welsh, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Swedish, Finnish, Danish (& Norwegian), and Dutch.
VARIED AND VALUABLE.

If you distribute tracts the Committee invite you to apply as follows:—

1.—State how many tracts are desired, for your personal distribution only, for one month. The tracts are selected with a view to the simplicity and value of the message they bear—God's great plan of salvation through a crucified and risen Saviour—and care is taken to secure an ever-changing variety and assortment.

2.—Enclose (if able) a freewill offering towards the expenses. This is necessary, but let it be as "unto the Lord." If you are able, let your abundance be a supply for another's lack. In any case, if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

3.—Address your communication to the Superintendent, SAMUEL E. ROBERTS, 48, Malvern-road, Kilburn, N.W., and enclose Postal Order, crossed ALLIANCE BANK KILBURN BRANCH. ANNUAL REPORT on application.

OLD MARGARET: OR, A SAINT AT LAST.

BY

Rev. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

WITH STRIKING PORTRAIT.

In Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"The significance of Dr. Cumming's narrative lies in the fact that, after sixty years in the midst of degradation, this poor woman became one of the most gentle and refined Christian ladies the Doctor has ever known; and after reading his sketch it is impossible to doubt his testimony. We do not know that we have ever read a more impressive story of its class, one so free from the slightest taint of the artificial, so genuine in every line of the picture. The sketch is accompanied by what we can well believe to be a strikingly faithful portrait.—Glasgow Daily Mail, February 3, 1890.

"A narrative taken from real life, and given to us in a very felicitous manner by the descriptive pen of Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow. Dr. Cumming is well known to the religious public as one of the most attractive speakers at the Keswick Convention; and he uses the incidents, here so thrillingly sketched, of the experiences in the heart and life of a very remarkable woman to set before his readers the nature of sanctification and complete consecration. The whole picture is drawn by the hand of a master, and cannot fail in many ways to give great interest to the reader."

Dublin Evening Mail, Jan. 15, 1890.

"Dr. Cumming has given a most interesting little sketch of a very remarkable life. To those who knew the dear old woman no recommendation is needed. They will laugh and cry by turns as they read the humorous and pathetic incidents which the story tells: and others cannot fail to be interested in it. . . . Dr. Cumming has given us a most delightful little memoir."—Life of Faith, February, 1890.

"Old Margaret's faith and living testimony are spoken of from the evidence of those who saw her constantly. Our readers will find her story a remarkably stimulating one, and they will have the advantage of learning from one who is well known as a spiritual teacher, what this higher life teaching really is. We need say nothing as to the author's power of description, but the literary grace of the narrative is such as one seldom meets with."—Perthshire Advertiser, February 3, 1890.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON: A DEVOTED LIFE.

WITH MEZZOTYPE PORTRAIT.

BY

Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON,

Author of "Henry Moorhouse"; "Duncan Matheson"; "The Christian Hero"; "Revival and Revival Work."

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
PRESENTATION EDITION, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A biography specially to be read by all Christian women. The record of Miss Macpherson's holy life and example will, we trust, prove a stimulus to many."

British Messenger, February, 1890.

"In its subject and in execution this biography is of no common order. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life, a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. . . . The sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."—Cambridge Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

"The story of this noble and earnest life is told in a way which carries the reader through the book without for a minute producing weariness. The great business of soul-saving was Miss Macpherson's life study. Think of conversing with twenty thousand persons one by one; and read the success which attended her efforts. And if you are desponding in your work it will nerve you: if you are engaged in bringing lost ones home, it will stimulate you."—Baptist Messenger, January, 1890.

"When we have the lives of Christian heroes written about with the same interest as other heroes, then we may hope that our young people will like to read the books delineating the trials, struggles, triumphs, and character of the heroes as readily as they now read the books of heroes in carnal strife. . . . This book sets forth the labours of one of the truest and noblest of women. It ought to be in every Sunday-school library and every family."—Christian Commonwealth, December 26, 1889.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of perusing. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting work."

Irish Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

The Christian Portrait Gallery:

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED Life-like Portraits and Biographic Sketches of Prominent Christian Workers of the Present Day.

Handsomely Bound, Demy Quarto, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a superb book. It is entitled The Christian Portrait Gallery, and contains portraits and biographic sketches of one hundred present-day Christian workers. The whole get-up of the book is first-class."—Divine Life.

"This volume contains well-executed and life-like portraits of about a hundred of the best known Christian workers of the present day, with a short account of the life and labour of each. All who can purchase the volume will be very pleased with it."
Christian Progress.

"For half-a-guinea a collection of one hundred portraits of distinguished Christian workers of the period; a noble army indeed. This Portrait Gallery can claim a high artistic value; and yet the smallness of its price brings it within the means of many."
Sword and Trowel.

"This handsome volume will be valued by all who are interested in the Christian life and work of our day. The portraits are very good, and the accompanying sketches are models of brief, terse, and adequate biographies. The volume will form a handsome feature for the drawing-room, and be especially suitable for presentation."—Baptist Magazine.

"This handsome, large, quarto volume, beautifully bound, is one of more than ordinary interest to the Christian reader. It contains upwards of one hundred biographical sketches, with remarkably life-like portraits of men and women who have been—and some of whom still are—eminent workers for God at home and in foreign lands."—English Churchman.

"The perusal of the volume has been to us a delight and an inspiration. A better book could not be found for a present."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD, LONDON, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent Appeal for IMMEDIATE HELP:

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have also a large number of young women to look after, who have passed through, and are doing well in situations, but who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five shillings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich.

We are glad to see that the prognostications with reference to the elections in Salt Lake City, to which we alluded a few weeks ago, have been realised, and that the Mormon candidates have been defeated—a victory which, it is anticipated, will have a striking influence upon the future of Mormonism in America.

Popular harangues on secular subjects in the pulpit, and exciting discourses on trade disputes, have lately brought out strong protests of devout persons against the clapping of hands, stamping of feet, and applause, which have been heard in some chapels. The example of Chrysostom in Antioch has been pleaded. Let it, however, be noted that the great preacher always endeavoured to suppress such manifestations. His impassioned appeals were against hypocrisy, luxury, and vice, and it was a trouble to him that noise, instead of contrition, should follow his words. It will be a day which preachers will be the first bitterly to rue when this unseemly innovation is generally allowed among us.

"Progress and poverty" is forcibly illustrated by the report of a Dublin company working two or three spirit shops, from which it appears that after paying all expenses the profits for the year amounted to £5844 0s. 8d., with nearly £600 carried forward. No wonder that poverty and disease stalk hand in hand through the Irish metropolis, when one firm, and there are hundreds such, can quote figures like these.

The increase of the National Drink Bill by seven and a half millions during 1889 is a fact to be deeply deplored. Fortunately, the Bill for the decade is lower than was that for the previous decade, but no amount of explanation can make it satisfactory that we should be spending £132,213,276 per annum upon intoxicating drink.

It is beginning to be asked, What is the use of providing improved dwellings for the working classes if the publican is to be permitted to come and settle close by, or in their midst, to drag the occupants down again? By and by when Parliament can condescend to practical questions affecting the well-being, spiritual and physical, of the people, we hope the query will receive the attention of some of our statesmen.

It is nothing less than a grave scandal, that a Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen has drawn attention to in The Church Review. That the Ecclesiastical Commissioners own slums and rookeries in London which are unfit for the habitation of men, and overcrowded dwellings reeking with poisonous gases, is a sore discouragement to those who are justly tracing so much of physical and moral evil to the dwellings of the poor. Attention to these "inhuman homes" will now, it may be expected, engage the attention of the bishops.

We have received from the Trinitarian Bible Society a letter in reply to Mr. Sharp's rejoinder to their attack on the British and Foreign Bible Society which appeared as a "Supplement to THE CHRISTIAN" in our issue of Jan. 31. We have not space for this controversy in our literary columns, nor do we consider that it would be desirable to continue it in our advertising pages. We would earnestly advise the Trinitarian Bible Society to use its energies in circulating the Scriptures, and to cease its interference with the older Society.

The advertisement of the Trinitarian Bible Society in our paper was negotiated by an advertising clerk without the attention of the publishers being called to its contents, of which they were unaware until it had appeared; otherwise it would not have been inserted. We must, however, do the Society the justice to say that they were innocent of any endeavour, such as seemed to be implied in Mr. Sharp's letter, to make their advertisement appear as a portion of our literary contents. The use of the words "Supplement to THE CHRISTIAN" is required by the Post Office authorities upon any inset that goes under the ordinary postage.

Rev. John Sharp, in his defence of the Bible Society, fell into some errors. We notice two which affect the authority and teaching of Holy Writ. Referring to the fact that the New Testament quotations from the Old are largely from the Septuagint Greek version, he says that our Lord and his Apostles "usually follow a version which included the Apocrypha." This conveys an erroneous impression, for though the Alexandrian canon unquestionably included the Apocrypha, it is equally certain that in Palestine the Old Testament was confined to the books which are at present recognised by the Protestant Churches. Again, with regard to Gen. xlvii. 31, Mr. Sharp says that the Septuagint reads that Jacob "worshipped the top of his rod." This is hardly correct; the reading is, as quoted in Heb. xi. 21, Jacob "worshipped upon the top of his rod," or, as in the A.V., "worshipped (leaning) upon the top of his staff." There is no idolatry here; Israel adored God, not the rod which sustained his body. We heartily sympathise with Mr. Sharp, who wrote from his sick-room at the seaside, and away from his books.

Romanism is becoming increasingly self-assertive in Canada. A few days ago, on the occasion of a meeting of evangelists in the town of Hull, a number of French Canadians, who are as a rule swayed by the Papal priesthood, caused a riot. We rejoice to see that the situation has been duly taken in by the Provincial Government, and that immediate action has been resolved upon to vindicate law and order, and to protect free speech. Certainly Protestants in the Dominion do well to be in earnest.

We regret to learn that a reactionary move with regard to religious liberty has been made in Austria. Some years ago, consequent upon action by the Evangelical Alliance, it was decided to allow the Now Reformed Church in Bohemia to hold services in private residences with invited guests. Recently these services have been stopped by order of local magistrates, with the approval of the Governor of Bohemia. An appeal has been lodged, and we sincerely trust it will result in securing the freedom of the persecuted Protestant community.

To the two measures of impending social reform in India which we noticed recently, a third may now be added. The Times' Calcutta correspondent states that a Bill to amend the Factories Act has been introduced into the Legislative Council; it proposes to raise the minimum age at which children may be employed from seven to nine, to limit the hours of employment of women, to secure women and children proper intervals for food and rest and recreation, to secure proper water supply, ventilation, and cleanliness, and to prevent overcrowding. The progress of reform is very slow, but these are gratifying indications that England is becoming more alive to her responsibilities with regard to some of the hardships of her Hindoo subjects.

The Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance have issued their customary invitation to observe Monday, March 17, as a day of united prayer for Ireland. They say:—

> There are many reasons why our hearts should be united in still more earnest prayer for Ireland. Some of the problems which are agitating other countries seem to be reaching a crisis here. It is our comfort and encouragement to know that God reigneth, and that through all changes He is working out his own gracious purposes. He heareth prayer. Let us then, with hearts full of gratitude for the undeserved mercies of the past, unite in fervent supplication that the time of deliverance may speedily come. He condescends to use, in the administration of his kingdom, our feeble instrumentality. Why should not that week be set apart as a week of earnest prayer and special effort on behalf of our beloved country, during which we should endeavour to cement the bonds of Christian brotherhood among all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and when special efforts should be put forth to quicken religious life in all our churches, and to awaken a deeper interest in the unsaved who are lying in darkness and the shadow of death?

"Of making [societies] there is no end." We are glad to see that our contemporary The Christian Commonwealth deprecates the multiplication of small societies. They tend to establish local and individual vested interests, and to create sectional if not sectarian feeling. While the older denominational barriers are being removed, and old-time controversies, such as that between Calvinists and Arminians, are dying out, new and multifarious unions spring up to supply their place, and to form cliques round less imposing centres.

A mission starts some new device to gain or to retain adherents; and a neighbouring mission adopts some other ingenuity in self-defence. This does not help to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Unions for getting up early, for giving a tenth of income, for converting sinners, for loving one another, for loving God supremely, for doing all in the name of Jesus, for hasting the coming of Christ, &c., tend to draw attention to some one Christian duty, or to some one form of Christian life, at the expense of others.

The one comprehensive unity is the unity of the body of Christ: every believer is a member of that one body; and the ministry of each, according to its function, is necessary to the body for the building itself up in love. Any kind of union which draws to itself the force and life which, according to Divine purpose, belong to the one body of which Christ is the Head and every saint a member, is a source of weakness, and not of strength. The Church of Christ has been constituted by the Divine will, the one great Christian Endeavour Society, of which all Christians are de facto members.

Archdeacon Farrar has carried in the Lower House of Convocation his motion for brotherhoods, whose members shall bind themselves by dispensable vows to celibacy, poverty, and obedience. Few men have argued more eloquently than the Archdeacon in his "Lives of the Fathers" against external, mechanical, and artificial rules of life. It is well to quote his words (vol. ii. 220): "Men who aimed at making their life better than that which Christ had taught, or the Apostles practised, sank into a condition worse than that of the beasts which perish." The whole question is this—not shall there be self-subjection and self-mortification for the kingdom of heaven's sake, but shall there be vows and a corporate society which has taken them? Monasticism has no meaning, except in its system of vows, and these, dispensable or indispensable, violate the liberty which the New Testament bids us guard and sanctify, and have been fruitful of the very worst of temptations to men.

Yet another instance of the evils of a despotic government, such as that of Russia, is to be seen in the result of the investigation into the horrible massacre of Siberian prisoners at Yakoutsk, which was alluded to in these columns a few weeks ago. At this so-called inquiry the authors of the outrage were the prosecutors, and the poor exiles were assumed to be and treated as criminals, with the foregone result that the latter were found guilty of insubordination, whilst the prime cause of the butchery — Deputy-Governor Ostashine — was promoted. To suppose that the Czar himself approves of the massacre would be most unjust; he has doubtless been deceived by the reports of his subordinates. It is little wonder that he should so often feel his seat on the throne most insecure: thus it must ever be so long as those eternal laws of righteousness which can alone form the sure foundation of a nation's greatness and strength are habitually violated, not in Siberia only, but in other parts of his vast empire.

A correspondent writes:—

The Government has abandoned the intention for the present Session at least of dealing with the subject of free education, upon which Rev. Dr. Rigg and others have recently spoken in very decisive terms; but, by way of comment on one phase of the question, it may be remarked that one of the probable effects of such a measure would be to lower the character and sap the independence of the poor, if not to "pauperise" them. This tendency, be it noted, lurks beneath many of the philanthropic proposals of the present day. To do for a man that which he can do and ought to do for himself is neither kindness, charity, nor justice. Moreover, owing to the remission of payments in needy cases, to those who cannot afford the school fees, education is practically free already. Again, seventy millions of pounds sterling are already spent annually upon the poor, the school-board and poor rates for England and Wales alone amounting to more than fifteen millions a year, and this, be it remembered, the upper and middle classes already contribute to the support of other people and other people's children.

Compulsory education supplies the main argument for free education. If it be for the good of the State that all children should be able to read and write, certainly the education given should be of the most elementary character; and if carried beyond the three R.'s, it should rather be in an industrial than a literary direction. One of the most important elements of education should be that, despite the general ambition of mothers of the labouring classes for their boys, it is not more respectable to earn one's living with a coat on than with a coat off. It is in consequence of the mistaken notion referred to that clerks are multiplied, while excellence in industrial labour is at a discount.

It is sometimes urged in defence of the theatre that it is a moral instructor and that it may be made an aid to the pulpit. How many plays are there of which this can be affirmed with any truth? The following words by Aubrey de Vere on the tendency of dramatic poetry in general may be quoted in answer:—

A saintly character may be introduced into a play, and the main drift of a drama may embody an elevated moral teaching; but the drama is so much occupied by the collisions of violent passions, that, although Aristotle claimed for Greek tragedy the special function of purifying the heart through the influence of pity and terror, our own must be regarded as that department of poetry the sphere of which lies farthest apart from that of religion.

Perhaps the weakest and worst of the arguments which have been put forward in defence of the employment of young children in theatres is that in which it is pleaded that the child's earnings are necessary to keep poverty from the home of the family. Rev. B. Waugh has not hesitated to designate the bartering of a child's health to provide for the hunger of adults as a barbarism, and it certainly seems that the promoters of the Factory Acts, which have done so much to save England from the shame of child martyrdom, might have been, and doubtless were, met arguments of that kind.

It is almost incredible that so recently as in 1883, even in well-managed factories near Manchester, the hours of labour of children still were eleven per day, and that, although the ordinary age for children to go to factories was nine years, in all parts of the country there still were many of only five years old at work. At Birmingham fifteen hours a day for children, "often very hungry," says the Blue Book, was the rule, and at Wolverhampton children were kept at work eighteen hours out of the twenty-four. Doubtless, if the plea to which we have referred above had been admitted, these abuses would be rife to-day.

It is instructive to note from what a little seed great issues may spring. A child knelt beside her father in family prayer. His soul mourned in anguish for the poor slave. Morning and evening he prayed that the hour of deliverance for "poor, oppressed, bleeding Africa" might come. Crying and tears often mingled with his prayers. The recently published life of Harriet Beecher Stowe tells us how those cries planted in her heart a sentiment from which came "Uncle Tom's Cabin"; that book brought into full light the nations crime, made the wrongs of the slave known to the world, the lash of the slavedrivers' whip everywhere to be heard, and led in no small measure to the great emancipation. The fact is full of teaching for parents.

MR. JAMES L. STANLEY asks us to state that his connection with the Evangelistic Mission has closed. His address for the present is 36, Dunster-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

MR. GEORGE MULLER, who is returning home owing to the recent death of his daughter, Mrs. Wright, was unable to leave India so soon as he contemplated. He sailed from Bombay on the 13th inst., and is expected in England about the end of the month.

THE FRENCH EXHIBITION.—The Executive Council of the forthcoming French Exhibition, which opens at Earl's Court, London, on Saturday May 3, has decided to present a liberal portion of its surplus to the building fund of the new French Hospital in London.

MR. L. D. WISHARD has held a four days' convention for young men in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Jaffna. The attendance was good throughout and the interest deep. On the passage from Japan to Ceylon the vessel in which Mr. and Mrs. Wishard sailed was encountered by a typhoon which nearly wrecked the ship and caused a considerable delay.

CHILDREN'S MISSION AT HOXTON.—The annual special mission to the children and young people attending the Harvey-street Mission Hall, Hoxton, was held from February 9 to 16. The services were conducted by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer. The attendance was well maintained from first to last, and the large numbers who waited for conversation at the inquiry meetings showed that the power of the Holy Spirit had laid hold of many.

CITY TELEGRAPH MESSENGERS.—The annual meeting of the Eastern Central Postal District Telegraph Messengers' Institute was held on Friday last at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, under the presidency of Sir Arthur Blackwood. Some of the officers of the department were present, and encouraging testimony was given to the value of the work among the lads engaged in this branch of Her Majesty's service. Needless to say, the primary object of the Institute is to enlist them in the service of the King of kings. Miss Edmonstone (secretary of the Christian Post Office Association) whose active interest in the work is well known and other friends delivered addresses.

THE EMIGRATION TEST FARM SCHEME.—A further meeting in connection with this scheme, which was noticed in our columns recently, was held on the 11th inst., at 15, Russell-square. Among those present, in addition to Rev. F. B. Meyer B.A., and Mr. W. Hazell, who were the conveners of the meeting, were Mr. Peregrine Platt, Mr. Howard Hodgkin, Mr. H. Gurney, Mr. J. E. Viney, Mr. Glyn, and others. Mr. J. Blackie, from Clacton-on-Sea, who has from the first taken a great interest in the proposal, attended, and replied to many questions which were raised in the course of discussion. It was resolved to form a committee, with a view to carrying out the scheme, which will provide for the testing of intending emigrants prior to their departure to the colonies, and Messrs. Hazell and Blackie were appointed secretaries. Doubtless, subscriptions in aid of such a much-needed social and philanthropic movement will be forthcoming, in order that a satisfactory experiment may be made.

The Earth's Future.

A DISCUSSION has recently taken place in the columns of the press, started by a letter in The Times, on the probable failure of the earth's fertility, owing to the artificial exhaustion of the soil in the process of cultivation. The teachings of Liebig give countenance to such an idea, and we remember that The Times several years ago drew an alarming picture as to the using up of the humus, or vegetable mould, which is necessary to agriculture. The poet has described, as in a vision, how

> "Ships were drifting with the dead,
> To shores where all was dumb."

But, although it is argued at some length that we are on the very verge of the long decline—the down-grade of the earth's physical history—it is admitted that the complete descent must occupy an enormous period of time. If time be allowed, of course the descent must be a greatly prolonged phenomenon. But will such time be granted?

As might be expected, there are those who believe that there are compensatory forces at work, which will serve to maintain the earth's fertility, so long as the solar heat remains undiminished. On this latter point there is a general concession that the sun will ultimately lose its splendour and its power, and with its decline the solar system will become a desolation. Thus it is acknowledged that, from one cause or another, at some period as yet undetermined, the glory of this world will absolutely pass away. The date may be nearer or more remote, but earth cannot "with eternity endure."

Science scans the prospect so far. But Revelation is more precise, and brings the subject closer home, telling us that the final scene will not be ushered in by "slow gradations of decay." The human race will not find the earth ceasing to sustain them. On the contrary, there is the covenant, with the rainbow for its token, that "while the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease." All things will continue "as they were."

But there is a day fixed, and a veritable hour, when the present order shall terminate. In the meantime, science and Revelation agree that "the things which are seen are temporal." Beyond all, the children of God look, according to his promise, for "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Unto the last hour the earth shall yield her fruit, and the husbandman shall gather in the harvest. So fair shall all things be that men shall be crying "peace and safety" in the very hour of doom. So rose the sun on the Cities of the Plain. The birds sang among the branches, and the flowing waters flashed in the sunlight; but in a moment all was changed, and the catastrophe was accomplished.

JERUSALEM.—With much regret we have received news of the death of the wife of Mr. D. C. Joseph, well known to many of our readers for his labours on behalf of the Jews in East London, and more recently in Jerusalem. Mrs. Joseph had been attending on her husband, who was suffering from illness. She was taken ill on January 12, and died the following day. Mr. Joseph was still unwell according to the latest accounts.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

We are glad that Evangelical Christendom, in its current number, publishes the following valuable paper by the late venerable George Bowen, of Bombay:—

THE ministry of Jesus of Nazareth is described in these words: "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of disease." This statement is found at the end of Matt. iv. The Sermon on the Mount immediately follows, and is doubtless to be regarded as an exposition of the Gospel of the Kingdom. It is the glad news of the restoration of that rule from whence man departed when he chose to follow his own inclination rather than the will of his loving Father. In the entire life of Jesus, in all his teaching and being, we see the Kingdom of Heaven portrayed in its twofold aspect of loving government and loving surrender; the kingship and the allegiance. The Kingdom of God, as seen in Him, was righteousness, peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost. That will of God from which man has such an alienation, is beautifully exhibited in Him, and the condition of its exhibition, complete, unquestioning surrender, has also its illustrious exhibition in Him.

Man's idea of kingship is the exaltation of his own will to the place of authority and the subjection of the wills of others. He does not undertake to write his own law in the hearts of his subjects, so that their inclinations shall correspond with his inclinations; he knows too well the insubjection of the heart of man; but he aims so to clothe himself with power as to secure external obedience. There have indeed been instances of men who have become the idols of their people and received an extraordinary devotion from their subjects, but in these cases, sooner or later, the incompetency of the ruler to secure the welfare of his subjects becomes manifest. It is only in a very limited range that his ideas dominate them, the multitudinous dissimilarities that separate them make it impossible that they should be ruled by one, except in a particular limited sphere.

In the Kingdom of Heaven the will that is to rule is the will of Him who created us and who knows perfectly all the demands of our nature, and who has all power in heaven and in earth, and is Love. This Divine rule is made inoperative by the alienation of the will of the creature, and another kind of rule comes in, combined of the will of the ruler and the will of the creature, the result of which must be suffering on the part of the creature, and the exhibition of the wisdom, holiness, and power of God.

The Lord Jesus is Himself the Gospel of the Kingdom, showing, in a way that man may apprehend, the mind of the ruler in perfect harmony with the mind of the subject, and revealing also a marvellous method whereby the sinners of this world may be made conscious of the ruin wrought by their self-will, and may be restored to amity with the Divine mind. This last could not be apprehended until Christ should have become a propitiation for the sins of mankind by his death on the Cross, preparing the way for the spirit to reveal the love of God to the sinner.

My Kingdom, said Jesus before Pilate, is not of this world; if it were, then would my disciples fight for Me. The kingdoms of this world are founded on force, and obedience is secured by the power arrayed against disobedience. Alas that Christians have too often failed to recognise the contrast between Christ's Kingdom and the kingdoms of this world, bringing into the former the characteristics of the latter. What Jesus refused to take to Himself, at the suggestion of the tempter, many of his so-called followers have sought to obtain—the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them. Our Lord had power to reduce Palestine and the Roman Empire to his own sway, if He had been willing to make them his by the assertion of authority, and the use of force. But He knew well that the Kingdom of Heaven was something entirely different. Royalty and allegiance are to come together and kiss each other in each individual heart; there is a vital union of the will of the ruler and the ruled, so that kingship may be predicated of both. "As Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."

Some, reading in the Scriptures that the saints are to reign, fancy that they are to reign over men as kings reign over their subjects, by a measure of coercion. In the very nature of things it is impossible that any should belong to the kingdom who have not the will of the ruler swaying them, whose will is not coincident with his. Some speak of the Kingdom of the Messiah as involving the presence of Christ upon a throne in Jerusalem, swaying an iron sceptre that all must obey. But the Kingdom of Christ implies Christ's presence in the heart of each believer. The inflexibility of his rule demands that the hearts of his subjects become the place of his throne. He comes to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe. His mighty power may be displayed in ways fitted to show his absolute supremacy over all other potentates and dominions, but the Kingdom is not realised until the hearts of believers are in all respects one with his. Then wherever there is a believer there is the Divine majesty of the Messiah. Where the subject is there is the Kingdom.

SPANISH MISSION WORK, TANGIER.—Mr. N. Hardingham Patrick has an interesting report for the latter half of last year. He says: "We entered the Café Oriental on July 15. It was well situated, admirably adapted for our work, and we needed larger premises, so we took it in faith. The place that had been a den of iniquity is now a house of praise. We have platform instead of stage, and preaching in the place of acting. Our evangelistic meetings have been well attended. We believe that souls have been converted, and converts strengthened and comforted." There is a dispensary associated with the Mission, which has the hearty support of Mr. Spurgeon.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Mr. John Wilkinson has issued a summary of the deeply interesting work done last year under his direction at home and abroad. Operations at home are not confined to London, and testimony abroad went beyond the Continent of Europe to North Africa. The workers are numerous in many spheres, and the agencies varied and well approved in character. Towards the provision of a centre for the growing work in East London a further sum of £2000 was recently received, so that about £3000 remains to be subscribed, to provide the sum of £10,000 required to meet the undertaking. During last year the distribution of Hebrew New Testaments was vigorously prosecuted in Russia. By this means thousands of Jews who had not previously heard of Christ have become acquainted with his life and teaching. Many have gladly taken the truth into their hearts; others are inquiring further concerning the way which their people have so persistently and so long misnamed "heresy." To a large number of our readers every word of the report will have a peculiar charm, and to not a few the pages will be both instructive and encouraging. Copies may be had (sixpence each to non-subscribers) from Rev. John Wilkinson, 79, Mildmay-road, London, N.

XXIII.—LOVE COVERING SINS.

1 PETER iv. 8.

IT is what we might have expected to find the Apostle Peter insisting so strenuously on love. At a never-to-be-forgotten interview, the Master thrice reminded him that the supreme qualification for ministry was love. And now he takes care to insist upon the possession of love by those who essay to do aught for God in the use of the gifts with which they have been entrusted.

Above all things.—It were better to dispense with all else in the Christian's character and work than to miss love; though, in point of fact, where this is in operation, all that is likely to impress and touch men must be present also. This love must, of course, go forth in its sympathies and activities to all the world, but it should begin at home. We must have love among ourselves as believers in the same Lord, before we can presume to speak of our love to the great world of men around. Nor must it be a Platonic love, a love of the cold light of reason; it must be fervent, at boiling point, on full stretch, going to the furthest extents of love, and in doing so, learning the breadths and lengths of the unsearchable love of God.

But we have now rather to consider the way in which this love will act; for it is remarkably practical. The state of heart which weeps tender tears and expresses itself in rhapsody or sentiment, but at the same time does nothing to relieve distress or to sacrifice itself for others, is the shadowy ghost of love, its imitation and counterfeit. Love gives itself, pours itself forth as a libation, counts all things but loss in comparison with the benefit of the one on whom it has centred itself. It imperils its life to fetch water from the well of Bethlehem, breaks alabaster boxes of very precious ointment on the person of its beloved, and braves the reproaches of a world in arms, surprised to find any considering the pain or hardship great. Oh, for love like this!

I. LOVE COVERS THE MULTITUDE OF SINS (8).—These sins are, of course, not those of the man who loves, but the sins of those with whom he is brought in contact. The thought is, in fact, quoted from Proverbs x. 12. And the whole conception may have been based on the filial act of Noah's sons, of whom it is recorded that they took a garment, and laid it upon both their shoulders, and went backward, and covered their father's drunken sin.

How few men there are without grave faults! "Even in the most highly cultivated countries there are tracts of land which have never been brought underthe plough; so is it with the characters of some men—perhaps of most men; there are patches of waste ground lying here and there utterly useless, offensive to the eye, and covered, not with wholesome corn, but with briars and nettles and weeds of poisonous quality." We need not now enter into the question of how these faults come to be permitted by devout and saintly souls; but, if it be so with respect to these, how much more must it be the case in respect to those who do not avow allegiance to the holy Gospel.

Men are constantly sinning against one another. They take unfair advantage; they deceive with lying words; they lose their temper to each other's face, and slander to each other's back; they grasp at their own pleasure or gain, irrespective of what it may cost to those whom they were bound to consider; they snarl, and bite, and devour, as the beasts of the forest glade. Ah! what wrongs man has endured at the hands of his fellow!

There are some imperfections in men which, though not to be classed in the front rank of sins, are yet very trying and hard to bear. The vanity which is so self-conscious, and is always expecting flattery or extorting it. The discontent which is ever repining. The restlessness which betrays the irritable brain and the overstrained nervous system. The petulance of the sufferer, and the growing penuriousness of the aged. The cynical temper of those who feel that they have not received their dues in life, and depreciate others. The recklessness which is courage exaggerated. All these are irksome and fretting, and produce almost as much revulsion as the blacker kinds of sin.

Now we are not required to form a false judgment of these people, and to think or say that they are not offenders. If they are doing wrong it is not our duty to whitewash their fault and to call evil good. It is perhaps rather a temptation to do so; because, if we are not too strict with others, we can venture to be lenient to ourselves. Thus our moral sense will become warped and deteriorated. To gloss over the faults of other men is often the first step to making light of our own. We must be very careful, therefore, not to look at these faults with that easy good-nature which is careless of the distinction between white and black.

And, again, we are not required to abjure all words of reproach or methods of punishment.—There is a soft, weak, reckless kind of feeling abroad in society, which is always saying pretty nothings, and scattering rose water on open sewers, but which does not dare to be stern and severe, and true to righteousness. This is not Christian love, though it is often mistaken for it. The love which God inspires will withhold, will leave the results of sins to work themselves out in the life, will dare to linger for three days at a distance, rather than go at once in answer to the appeal for aid. There is nothing so wholesome, so salutary, so strong as Christian love.

But with all these limitations, love does cover a multitude of sins. (1) It forgives.—This is a marvellous prerogative placed within our reach, in the exercise of which we are most like God. Probably in this world only shall we have the chance to put it into exercise. When once we have entered the world where there is no sin, then will the need of mercy stay; other graces finding full development, but this out of date. The Christian heart does not wait for confession or explanation, but so soon as it is sensible of having been wronged, it looks to heaven asking the Father to forgive; and it cherishes the sweet sense of forgivingness, until it has an opportunity of pronouncing its absolution to the contrite offender. We are to be imitators of God in the swiftness and completeness of his forgiveness.

(2) It avoids giving occasion for sin.—Suppose you have a favourite horse, which always takes fright and shies at a certain point in the road, you are careful to come along another road if possible, or to coax him, by speaking to him kindly, to go by without fear. So if you are aware that a certain subject will always invoke an outburst of hot temper in your friend, true love will lead you to avoid it. You will not needlessly incite to sin if you know how to avoid giving the first inducement.

(3) It is quick to discern some generous construction to put upon the fault, or to quote some consideration to weigh in the opposite scale.—"True, he was unpardonably dull and slow, but then how trustworthy and reliable." "Yes, he was very irritable and abrupt; but, then, remember what a strain he has been under lately in his business, not leaving the factory or counting-house till late at night, and going back early in the morning, with no recreation or respite." "Granted, that he is now becoming soured and crabbed; but, then, what a glorious man he was in those earlier days, when he stood in the breach." "Are you sure that there is not some other explanation possible for his action?" In some such ways as these, Christian love argues with itself and others, and, as the result, many a sin is hindered on its way, and many a fault condoned.

(4) It rebukes with great tenderness.—There are cases where duty demands public censure. The sore must not lie covered up, lest it prove to be deadly. It must be lanced or it cannot be cured. But the lancing is done with exquisite tenderness. The wrong-doer is reproved, rebuked, and exhorted, but with all long-suffering (1 Tim. iv. 2). The man overtaken with a fault is restored in a spirit of meekness (Gal. vi. 1).

"There is a great deal of spiritual art and skill required for dealing with another's sins; it requires much spirituality of mind, much prudence, and a mind clear from passion, for that blinds the eye and makes the hand rough, so that a man neither rightly sees nor rightly handles the sore he goes about to cure; and many are lost through the ignorance and neglect of that due temper which should be brought to this work." But love gives the delicacy and tact required.

II. LOVE AFFORDS UNGRUDGING HOSPITALITY.—This does not mean the giving of extravagant feasts, but rather the calling in of the poor, the lame, the halt, and the blind, who cannot recompense. It is right to look on the home as a talent for God's service, and to use its guest-chamber, not only for our friends, but for his servants. Those who live at the sea-side, or in salubrious neighbourhoods, should consider whether they cannot refresh and reinvigorate some jaded worker. And those who live in large towns might throw open their rooms to young people, fresh from the country, and sorely tempted to go wrong for want of a friendly welcome, into a circle like that left far away. "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers." In the person of his children the Master still often asks the question, "Where is the guest-chamber?"

Without grudging.—To God the intention of the heart is all important. He loveth a cheerful giver. He takes such delight in doing good that He has no sympathy with anything like reluctance. Not that hospitality should necessarily be profuse; for, if it be, it is difficult to maintain, besides reminding the guest that he is regarded as a stranger; only that which is done should be done freely, gladly, with the whole heart. There is no hospitality so grateful as that which makes the stranger feel at home, because there is nothing forced or restrained, and he is permitted to feel completely at his ease.

III. LOVE MINISTERS (10, 11).—The Apostle speaks here, not so much of the extraordinary gifts with which the early Church was endowed, but of those which are possessed by us to-day. The gifts of speech, of wealth, of administrative ability, of song. All these things are gifts from the hand of God. There is nothing to be proud of, for we have nothing that we have not received. And instead of envying another, let us thank God for what he also has received, asking that we may benefit by it, and win as much of its grace as possible.

Each member of the Church is a steward, entrusted with something.—No note without significance. No wheel without its function. No pin or axle without importance. "Every man hath received the gift." Oh, you who are doing nothing to make the world better, it is not for want of a talent, but because you are not using the talent you have. You have buried it somewhere in a napkin. Go and unearth it, and put it out to usury. It may not be brilliant; but, so surely as it has been given, you will be held accountable for its use. Let us never forget that we are not owners, but stewards, who must render an account of our stewardship to the Master, who may even now be at the door. It matters not what our fellow-servants think or say, so long as we are right with Him, and are developing and administering to our utmost the precious talents with which we are endowed. The main object with each of us should be, to act up to the ability which God hath given.

Manifold grace is many-coloured grace. As when a ray of light breaks into a spray of many hues, so each of us receives God's grace at a different angle, and flashes it back broken up into some fresh colour. In some it is speech, in others service, in others giving. But all are called to bear their several parts in the great household of the Church, the management of which may be thoroughly disorganised by the sloth or refusal of one.

In all the motive should be the same. The service great or small, conspicuous or obscure, but the glory of God being the supreme passion. If we work from any other motive, we are doomed to disappointment. But none can work for this in vain. In our failure and death, if He wills it, He can be glorified. Let us bring Him glory through Jesus Christ, our Mediator and Priest, and may it flow in towards Him from us, and from all created beings for ever and ever. Amen.

OUR SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

IN a recent letter written from Saugor, Central Provinces, India, Rev. G. M. Davies, Church of England chaplain to the troops, asks for prayer on behalf of work among the soldiers in India. He also gives praise for manifest blessing on the labours of those who are striving to lead the redcoats to faith in Christ and service for Him. A few months ago, says Mr. Davies, there was not a Christian soldier in the garrison at Saugor; at the period of his writing there were ten men at least bearing testimony to the power of God to save and keep, even amid the many allurements of barrack life. While thankful for the good done in connection with the temperance cause, the writer says that impurity of life is a much more prevalent and deadly enemy in the army than intoxicating drink, and only the power of God can enable a man to withstand the abounding temptations.

A quantity of Mr. H. L. Hastings' anti-infidel literature has been distributed among soldiers in India, but Mr. Davies adds that if any friends would send to him a few thousand copies of the tract on "The Inspiration of the Bible," he would gladly circulate them. He knows of no other book of the kind so convincing and calculated to do so much good.

Oneness, Unity, & Reasonable Service

III.—REASONABLE SERVICE.

SURELY, when we realise that we are one in God, we must each see that it is our reasonable service to be a living sacrifice, wholly yielded up to the Lord to do his pleasure: this is how we prove that his will is good, and acceptable, and perfect (Rom. xii. 1, 2).

The service of each believer may vary like the various members in the human body (1 Cor. xii. and Eph. iv.). But, whatever the special service may be, it is reasonable to conclude that all we do here should be with the desire that God may be glorified by others being brought to know his love, and share the same oneness that we enjoy, and then seek the same unity that we desire, and yield themselves up to the same reasonable service.

Christ prayed, "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me. And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them; that they may be one, even as We are one: I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them, as Thou hast loved Me" (John xvii. 21-23).

There may be a deeper meaning in these words than we have yet seen; still, it is very clear from other Scriptures that, as disciples of Christ, we are sent into this world to represent Christ, and to make known the love of God to the children of this world, that all who will may "believe" and "know" his great love to them (John xvii. 18, xx. 21).

Also Christ prayed "For them also which shall believe on Me through their word" (20). This shows that when we know the Lord we are expected to speak of Him to others, as He shall give us grace and opportunity, that many from the world may receive the word into their hearts, and have this prayer of Christ fulfilled in their experience, to his glory.

As true disciples of Christ we should humbly confess that, by the grace of God, we are saved in Christ Jesus, that we have eternal life in Him, and are rejoicing in the prospect of soon being like Him, and with Him, where there can be no more sorrow of any kind, but where we shall be perfectly satisfied and happy for ever! Also, we should warn unbelievers (John iii. 18, xvi. 9), and show that this unspeakably precious salvation of God is free to all who really believe the truth (John i. 12, iii. 16, v. 24, vi. 40; Acts xiii. 39).

Not only are suitable words to be spoken, but also the fruit of the Spirit is to be made manifest in our lives (Gal. v. 22-24). Where the conduct has not been in harmony with the truth, individuals of this world have said: "If such conduct be Christianity, then, I do not want to be a Christian."

Those who can appreciate the good and the beautiful are readily attracted thereby. And we know that there is none so good and so beautiful as the Lord Himself. A loadstone is always attractive to what is congenial to it (e.g., to iron). Spiritually, Christ is the true attracting power; and when by his grace we are enabled to make manifest some of his goodness and beauty, the enlightened, whose eyes are opened by the Lord, will be attracted to Him.

The consistent conduct and simple testimony of very humble believers have often been owned to the salvation of many. Therefore, as separate individuals, let us each seek the salvation of men; and also be banded together, and show our unity in this good service. When has God most manifestly poured out his Spirit on the people? Has it not been when believers have united in continual prayer, and been living in devout fellowship with Him, and in love and unity with each other? It was so on the day of Pentecost, which is still the pattern for us to follow (Acts i. 14, ii. 1).

This subject should move many nominal professors of Christianity to ask themselves whether they are really one in God. For can those be truly in fellowship with the Lord who have no tender, yearning desire for the salvation of their fellow-creatures? See John iii. 16; Rom. x. 1; 2, Cor. v. 18-20, and many such portions of Scripture.

These remarks are made to move true believers to devout reflection; but not to lead the unconverted to undertake this service; for here, as in seeking unity, we must be careful that we put the Lord Himself before the desire for the salvation of men; He must always come first in all our thoughts about service as well as all other matters. But when we are saved ourselves, and in fellowship with the Lord, then we should seek to be the means in the hand of God to save others; that they, as well as ourselves, may live by faith, and in love and unity, and seek to be the means of the salvation of those with whom they may be brought into contact; and thus show that they are in heart one with God now, and waiting in hope of the glory; when it will be most manifest that we are one."

If we take each first letter of the four words that make the heading, O, U, R, S, we have a word of appropriation, ours. Let this brief word continually remind us of the three subjects that we have been considering, and lead us humbly and intelligently to say, "The Oneness in God is ours; the Unity with all believers is ours; and the Reasonable Service is ours." It is written, "All things are yours...things present or things to come; all are yours: and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's" (1 Cor. iii. 21-23). We are "made perfect in one."

PREVENTIVE WORK IN PARIS.

WE have often dwelt, but not too often, on the danger that young Englishwomen incur by accepting situations abroad through advertisements or agencies, and without proper information. In many cases, girls who have done so, turn to Mrs. Lewis's (née Miss Leigh) Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris broken in health, without money, and with a very scanty supply of clothing. Their only hope seems to be to reach its shelter, and meet an English-speaking friend. The preventive work done in this way cannot be estimated. It comes at a moment of extremity, and rescues from despair.

Some ladies once brought to the Home an English-speaking negress who was wandering in the streets. She came to Paris as an ayah, but was dismissed by her employers, without money, and with only the clothes she wore, on the charge of "eccentricity." Eccentric perhaps she was, but if we were all liable to be deprived of our bread on this score, who might not suffer? At least she was truthful and honest, and stood clear of any serious offence. She served us faithfully as a servant in the Institution, until, wages and clothes recovered, she was engaged by an English lady going out to Panama. That nurse is not the only one who would almost certainly be in a suicide's grave to-day, but for the timely aid offered by the Home. "It is not that I wish to die," said one who had attempted to take her own life, "but that I did not know how to live!"

Hundreds of our English and American young women are helped each week. English families are visited, and a system of relief for the poor established. Further information can be had from Mrs. E. E. Hornibrook, Paris and Continental Y.W.C.A. Home, 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

CAMBORNE, CORNWALL.—A worker writes to say that there have lately been many decisions for Christ in connection with the Camborne Town and District Mission. The hall is in one of the poorest parts of the town, and it is encouraging to find that the Gospel is taking hold of the careless and neglected.

Farewell to Graham Wilmot Brooke.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

IT was a great pleasure to welcome this true servant and knight of Jesus Christ, to spend at my home one of his last nights in England, before starting with a chosen band to Africa, to initiate that crusade on behalf of the 60,000,000 of the Soudan, on which his heart has so long been set, and in respect to which the Church Missionary Society is to be heartily congratulated for its enterprise, and spirit, and evident capacity in adapting methods to missionaries and their aims.

The talk we had was too interesting to keep wholly to myself, and as it remains clearly cut on my memory and heart, it is befitting to share its impressions with others. Ever since I have known him, on an evening when he suddenly appeared at a meeting which Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and I were holding in a town on the South coast, my heart has been strangely fascinated by that noble spirit, so lofty in its aims, so devoted to the Lord, so unselfish, so strong, decisive, and resolute. And this has been a common experience throughout the wide circles which have opened to welcome him during the last few months.

Many of my readers are familiar with that slight, tall, athletic form; that strong, though young and almost boyish, face, every line of which indicates decision and strength of will; that emphatic way of expressing opinions which might seem dogmatic, if the hearer had not had other opportunities of remarking the gentle, humble spirit lying beneath. And surely a man who has lived much alone with God and his Bible, far away from this perpetual human clatter and newspaper gossip, can afford to be dogmatic on many things which concern the highest interests of man. There are certainties, obscured from all the world, which are revealed to child-like, humble souls. It was the Apostle of love who so incessantly reiterated "We know."

During weeks and months of enforced solitude, with no companion but God, and no books but the Bible and the outspread page of nature, the mind rids itself of the silt which so often obscures the judgment, and becomes receptive of heavenly illumination. Besides, how strong, and true, and vigorous he must be who is perpetually imbibing the thoughts of God, and views all things from the same standpoint as those did who, in wholesomer, quieter times, held converse with Him on lonely mountains, or in deserts, or in the uneventful lot of comparative obscurity.

It has never been our habit to discuss ordinary or trivial topics in long and memorable talks. Somehow they seem out of place, and we are naturally drawn to speak of such themes as the Redeemer's glory, the progress of his kingdom, the best ways of winning men. Eternity is near to Graham Wilmot Brooke; he lives on its border-land, its light is in his soul, and all things interest him only so far as they promote the one purpose of his life.

First, he was full of glee and thankfulness that it had been arranged, with the concurrence of the committee, and in negotiation with the highest authorities at home, that no special protection should be afforded to him, as a British subject, when he left the friendly shelter of the frontier town, Lokoja, and began itinerating amid the millions of Hausas. Anyone who endeavours to turn Moslems from their faith exposes himself to the death penalty, which is rigorously inflicted. All such efforts then are carried on at peril of life, and he had felt that it was unfit that converted natives should be urged to brave perils, from which Englishmen, by the fact of their nationality, are exempt.

He told me that he had already been down five times with the worst of the African fevers, and I did not like to hear him speak of the improbability of surviving two more attacks. Indeed, he professed his desire that if any were required to lay down his life as a martyr, he might be the first, as he could do comparatively little now, and already the hopes, and prayers, and purposes of years were being realised as he had never dared to hope. His age, I judge, is somewhere about twenty-seven, but he has lived longer than most of us. It is pleasant to think that his young and noble wife is by his side, newly married indeed, but thoroughly familiar with every detail of his enterprise; and the devoted Charles Battersby is with them as a skilful and beloved physician. He spoke warmly of other members of the party whom I am sorry not to know.

It has been said that before a martyr can burn at the stake, he must have burnt in his cell; and in some sense our friend has met and mastered that natural fear of death which clings to us. "No man," he said, "ought to go into such dangers as I have been in with the least thought about saving his life; if he does, it will be sure to make him unsteady in the hour of danger; his only thought must be that he should die in a way worthy of an ambassador of Jesus Christ." And then he told me how once for four hours he had sat in the midst of an African town, surrounded by hundreds of painted savages, brandishing their spears and clubs, and urging him to rise from the ground and run, because they never spear a man until he makes them sport by trying to escape; and he calmly reasoned with them, quite prepared to die, but anxious to live for their sakes who threatened him. Also, how on another occasion he heard the mysterious African signal that all women and children should hide before a victim is massacred, and suddenly a passage was made through his frenzied captors for an old chief to take his life, but he went up to him, laying his hand on the muzzle of the gun, and speaking kindly and gently, till the old man smiled, and he knew that he was safe. He was most anxious, he said, to act in a manner worthy of Christ.

One sentence will remain with me till I die: "This is my one opportunity in eternity of dealing for Christ with a rebel world." It has often been my cherished hope that in the great life which awaits us, we shall be permitted still to engage in the pursuit which has been the passion of our lives, carrying to other worlds the tidings of redemption. But perhaps he is right; and, lest it may be as he says, how tremendously in earnest should we be.

"I get clearer light each day," he said, "in respect to the purposes of God; not trying to explain them, but to see things as He states them in his Word, and as He sees them. I believe in the absolute authority of the Bible, and when a truth is clearly stated, if I am sure of the literal accuracy of the rendering of the Greek, it is final with me."

We spoke a good deal about the constant realisation of God's presence in the soul, and he seemed to think that we might certainly count on it. For my part, I am not sure of this, because often, through physical and other causes for which we are not blameworthy, we may temporarily lose the light of his face. Still his words are worth recording: "If there is any break in my perception of God's Presence, it is because I have missed a meal which was provided for me."

We agreed in holding that, though the abiding fulness of the Spirit may be in us for character, yet there are tidal waves of holy influence, equipping us for service, empowering and gifting us, which sweep over us from time to time. And he said, "I am conscious of successive accessions of power in specific directions, as when I have had to compose differences, or answer objections." And he seemed especially conscious of help afforded during the long and anxious days when the plan of his new enterprise was being patiently threshed out in committee.

In any emergency or difficulty it is evidently his mental habit to find some parallel in Scripture. He seems to think that there is no incident in our lives which has not its analogue in the Word of God. "Pray," he said, "for ingenuity in finding a parallel for every incident or character you encounter from the Word of God. Thus you will know how to act."

Very earnest were his expressions of indebtedness to Finney for his Lectures on Revivals and those to Believers. The former of these had been read aloud as he was ascending the Congo on one occasion with a missionary party. It seems to have entered into the texture of his soul. "The Authoritative Inspiration of Holy Scripture," by Waller, and "The Importance of Accuracy in Studying Holy Scripture," by Bullinger, are also evidently much prized by him, as anyone would have supposed, considering his devotion to the Word of God.

His opinions about missionaries and missionary work are very definite. That there is a great danger of their becoming explorers, civilisers, and settlers. That it is a profound mistake to send men out who have not been actual soul-winners at home. That young men ought not to go out on an equal footing, or have an equal voice in the management of a mission, as their seniors, but should serve a sort of novitiate. That their one aim should be the conviction of sin and conversion to God. On these and kindred subjects he has had abundant opportunities of forming opinions, which are based on careful and minute observation. And, as an illustration of his conscientiousness in determining to be strictly on God's lines, it is interesting to see that a special fund is being instituted by the Church Missionary Society, for which no appeals are to be made, because, "if the Lord approves the enterprise, He will incline the hearts of his people to give what is needed, in the shape of free-will offerings."

We spoke a good deal of individual work among people, as we come in contact with them; and he seemed to think that, if we were known to be Christians, and had an opportunity of speaking to others about their condition which we did not make use of, we might exert a hardening effect on them, tending to confirm them in their opinion that salvation was after all not vastly important.

Such are a few gleanings from those golden hours. Would that all our talk with each other were more savoured with such grace and salt! But where is there time in this hurrying life to sit down and gaze into each other's souls! Who does not long for the world when there will be time for society with lovely and noble spirits, and when we shall know as we are known! Meanwhile, let the name of Graham Wilmot Brooke be spoken daily in secret by hundreds of the Lord's remembrancers.

EAST LONDON WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—In order effectively to carry on its work, this Union employs a missionary, who daily visits the police courts in the East district, following up cases of intemperance among women. As she gives up all her time, this worker has to be provided for in temporal things. It is with great difficulty, however, that this is done. Mrs. Paddón, the hon. secretary of the Union, writes to us: "We greatly desire to keep our missionary at her work. The need among the wretched women is indeed terrible." Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Paddon, at 42, Tredegar-square, Bow-road, E.

THE LEGHORN BETHEL AND HARBOUR MISSION steadily extends. A more thorough visitation of the vessels in port and other measures have resulted in an increase in the attendance at the meetings. Close to the ships, the Bethel is far from the town; but, nevertheless, earnest friends have seconded the workers in their efforts. As in former years, the Gospel has been received with great attention by the sailors; and, though results are not very patent to the eye, there is no doubt that the seed of the kingdom is taking root, and will in due time bring forth fruit. Communications relating to the Mission may be sent to Rev. J. G. Mackintosh, Offices of the Free Church, Edinburgh.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler.

DEAR SIR,—I send you, for THE CHRISTIAN, the following extract from The New York Tribune. It is a tremendous trial to surrender this noble church, but my health is not quite as firm as formerly; and I want to assist my beloved people in putting the church into the right hands, as God may direct us. It is my intention to use tongue and pen for the Master's service as long as life and strength last.

Our dear brother D. L. Moody commenced a series of meetings in Brooklyn on Sabbath evening.

The article which I enclose tells the whole story in regard to my proposed resignation of my pastoral charge.—Cordially yours, in the love and labour of the Gospel,

THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Brooklyn, U.S.A., February 4.

(From The New York Tribune, February 3.)

DR. CUYLER TO RESIGN.

Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, of the Lafayette-avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, surprised his congregation yesterday morning. At the close of a powerful sermon on "The Conversion of St. Paul," he read the following letter, of which none of his congregation had had the slightest hint:—

"Nearly thirty years have elapsed since I assumed the pastoral charge of Lafayette-avenue Church. In April, 1860, it was a small band of 140 members. By the continual blessing of Heaven upon us, that little flock has grown into one of the largest and most useful and powerful churches in the Presbyterian denomination. This church now numbers 2330 members. It is the third Presbyterian church in size in the United States. It maintains two mission chapels, has 1650 in its Sabbath-schools, and is paying the salaries of three ministers in this city and two missionaries in the South. For several years it has led all the churches of Brooklyn in the contributions to foreign, home, and city missions, and it is surpassed by no other in wide and varied Christian work. Every sitting in this spacious house has its occupant. Our morning congregations have never been larger than they are this winter. This church has ever been to me like a beloved child. I have given to it thirty years of hard and happy labour, and it is now my foremost desire that its harmony may remain undisturbed and its prosperity may remain unbroken.

"For a long time I have intended that my thirtieth anniversary should be the terminal point of my present pastorate. I shall then have served this beloved flock for an ordinary human generation, and the time has now come for me to transfer this sacred charge to someone who (in God's good providence) may have thirty years of vigorous work before him and not behind him. If God spares my life to the first Sabbath of April, it is my purpose to surrender this pulpit back into your hands. And I shall endeavour to co-operate with you in the search and the selection of the right man to stand in it. I will not trust myself today to speak of the sharp pang it will cost me to sever a connection that has been to me one of unalloyed harmony and happiness. When the proper time comes we can speak of all such things; and in the meantime let us continue at the blessed Master's work, and leave our future entirely to his all-wise and ever-loving care.

"On the walls of this dear church the eyes of the angels have always seen it written, 'I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment, lest any hurt it. I will keep it night and day.' It only remains for me to say that after forty-four years of uninterrupted ministerial labours, it is only reasonable to ask for relief from a strain that may soon become too heavy for me to bear."

This announcement greatly affected the congregation. At the close of the service some stopped to speak with their pastor, but the greater number felt that they had no heart to talk of the change then.

MISS DE BROEN'S PARIS MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—I have returned from a few days' visit to the Training and Workers' Home in connection with Miss De Broen's Mission in Paris. I had the pleasure of speaking several times to the bright, rosy, healthy girls of the Orphanage. Two or three of these have given evidence of changed hearts, and all apparently love to hear the things of God. It is a pity that funds are not available to allow of more of the poor girls of Belleville being rescued before becoming the prey of evil men and women. Many little ones are there waiting to be brought into a Home where there is room for them; but the work halts because workers and means are not forthcoming.

Many of your readers know about the medical mission work, but all have not seen it. Three months ago I witnessed the mission-hall crowded with two hundred or more of the blind, sick, and diseased, having both souls and bodies dealt with by evangelists, workers, doctor, and dispensers. Again, this week, I have found no cessation of the rush of the sick and the poor, and the same kind friends were there seeking still to heal and save. Many have been healed, some of whom I met at the evangelistic meetings, and whose happy faces reflected the joy of their hearts. The kind-hearted doctor is distressed at the greatness of the need, and could spend a fortune on the poor sick and dying ones, whom he visits after seeing them at the Mission. He has, on an average, not less than one hundred new cases every week.

I was also present at the very interesting German Gospel meeting, and at a large class of young women, and another of men, who come regularly for Bible study, and to learn English. There are many other branches of the work which I had not time to overtake. I, however, visited the recently opened central "Reading, Resting, and Refreshment Rooms," at 205, Rue St. Honoré, where there is a daily prayer-meeting at one o'clock, and where Christian visitors and friends can meet, and, if required, lodge also.

Owing to the death of liberal friends, the Mission has been unable to meet its ordinary urgent wants without a great strain, and a reference to the last report shows that Miss De Broen has had to realise some little patrimony of her own to prevent a large deficit. There is great need at the present time; firstly, for additional voluntary young lady workers; and, secondly, for supplies of clothing and funds.

This Christlike work goes on steadily and quietly, as it has done for many years. The workers, as I found, are too busy to say much about it; but they often have to hurry their meals and be out late, to overtake it all with their present short numbers. I trust these few facts may help to enlist additional interest in this work. Yours faithfully,

West Wickham. DAVID BEATH.

Miss De Broen writes to say that her co-worker, Miss A. Ker, is about to visit England to hold meetings on behalf of her work in Paris, she herself being prevented from coming through ill-health. She will be very grateful if the friends of Christian effort in Paris will give Miss Ker a hearty welcome, and respond to her appeals.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

Two interesting Conferences have lately been held in connection with the Railway Mission. The first took place on January 29 and 30 at Bath, where the work is carried on by Miss Mary R. Williams, and where a new hall has been opened, accommodating four hundred, the attendances at the meetings having outgrown the hall formerly used, which seated two hundred. On the first day three meetings were conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, whose addresses were greatly enjoyed and found most helpful. The afternoon of the second day was devoted to a Conference, when delegates attended from other branches of the Mission, and gave encouraging reports of its progress.

In the evening a public meeting was held at the Guildhall, presided over by Mr. Chirnside. Addresses were given by Mr. W. H. Seagram, of London, and several other friends, in support of the Mission. In connection with the branch at Bath, a very successful work has been carried on for some years, during which a large number of the men have been truly converted, and are now actively working for Christ among their mates.

The second Conference was held at Cheltenham on February 8 and 9. The meetings commenced with a Delegates' Conference, which was preceded by a tea given to the railway men. Rev. John More presided, and a number of reports were given which told of blessing at other branches of the Mission. On Sunday, 9th, a public testimony meeting was held, presided over by Rev. J. Mugliston, and in the evening a Gospel meeting was conducted by Mr. R. Nixon, secretary of the Mission. On the 10th a public meeting was held in the Rotunda, at which there was a crowded attendance. Rev. H. James, principal of Cheltenham College, presided. An address was given by Lady Henry Somerset, who said she considered it an honour to speak on behalf of such a great work, and one which had her warm sympathy and support, because it went to the root of the matter, and sought to bring men to a knowledge of Christ as their Saviour. Rev. Dr. Flacker and Mr. R. Nixon also gave addresses.

The Cheltenham branch of the Mission is in charge of Mrs. Dr. Bennett, and a very interesting fact was mentioned at the Conference. Out of a total staff of 120 men employed, 40 have been converted. A good work is now going on among the men, which will, it is believed, soon result in others being won for the Saviour. The meetings have greatly stimulated those engaged in the work, and also interested many outside friends.

THE COASTGUARD. — "I am extremely pleased," writes a correspondent, "to see that some organised plan is to be adopted to reach our gallant coastguard. I have commanded them for many years, and know their isolated lives, their exposure to all weathers, and in many cases their banishment from Christian influences. They are instrumental in saving many precious lives every year at the imminent risk of their own. It should be remembered that they are now all naval seamen, many having served in all parts of the world. Not a few wear war and good conduct medals; many also have life-saving medals and other distinctions for saving life from shipwreck.

THE DUBLIN VISITING MISSION, in connection with the Society for Irish Church Missions, is a very interesting work. Evangelists go through Roman Catholic regions, preaching grace and truth to such as have been led to trust in personal merit and priestly absolution. A special point is made of conversation with the people concerning eternal things, and, as a rule, the evangelists are listened to with kindly attention. While some persons are easily induced to leave a congregation on being assured that the preacher is a "heretic," there are always others who will hear out an earnest message when affectionately delivered. The report of the work of the Mission last year is full of interest. Copies and other information may be had from Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

Tidings from Siberia.

DR. BAEDEKER, who has recently returned from a six months' sojourn in Russian territory, gave a brief but interesting account at the Aldersgate-street prayer-meeting. When he was converted, he understood that he was "called out of darkness into marvellous light," that he might show forth God's praise in regions where the Gospel was unknown. The prisons of Russia and Siberia are very dark places.

Dr. Baedeker travelled straight across Europe into the heart of Siberia, which is a wonderful country for communication in the summer time, owing to the fine, navigable rivers. On this occasion Tomsk was reached; on the next visit, if the Lord will, in the spring, the Doctor hopes to reach Saghalien. To this distant place hundreds of prisoners are sent. While travelling on one of the Volga steamers, a party of young men were met, sons of Russian priests. They had passed through the seminary, and had been prepared for ordination. The priesthood is hereditary in Russia; but these young men had refused to be ordained, and had resolved to go to Tomsk (where there is now a fine University) to study medicine. They had refused to enter the priesthood, because the office is so badly paid. The priest, after each service, goes round with a large plate, on which one worshipper will place an egg, another a turnip, and so on. Often there is not in the priest one grain of spiritual life or understanding. Their fathers have been priests, and they have followed on.

Amongst the prisoners was a young married couple; the husband was not a priest but a political exile. Probably we English would all be political exiles if we lived in Russia, for they allow no free expression of thought. This man, like some favoured ones, was permitted to go into exile at his own charges! His young fiancée hastened to be married to him, and bravely resolved to spend her life in exile with him. Their orders were to present themselves at Irkutsk on a certain day. Then they did not know what orders would be given, or what fate might befall them.

These political exiles are generally sent far north in Siberia, to Yakootsk. There is no town. The thinly populated district is inhabited by the native race, who speak a language of their own. They are, generally speaking, a heathen people, though a few are baptized. Here, in the intensely cold and bleak country, the exiles settle down in wooden huts. They do not understand the people, and they cannot make themselves understood. They have nothing to do. No wonder that many of the educated and intelligent lose their reason. It was a great satisfaction to carry to these Russians the glad tidings of the Gospel.

Coming back from Tomsk, Dr. Baedeker again met some interesting people—amongst others, a young man and his wife, who had been so long in exile that, although highly educated, they had become excessively awkward in walk, dress, and manner. They were Polish exiles, who had at length been set at liberty. The man had been taken prisoner on the death of the late Emperor. There was no charge against him; merely a suspicion. He had been kept six months in solitary confinement in Russia. He had never been permitted to speak aloud, or to hear a word spoken aloud. He was not even allowed to clean his cell or make his bed. He was kept in forced idleness and silence. He did not go mad, as many do. But he got very ill with scrofula. The doctor thought he would die. He was taken out of solitary confinement and put into another prison. He might have what he liked to eat. He recovered, and then had chains placed on his feet, and was sent off to Siberia. One-half of his hair was shaved off, and, escorted by soldiers, he was sent forward by train and steamer till he reached his destination, Tomsk. He narrated his whole story. His brother filled a high political office, and gave himself no rest till, at the close of six years, he obtained his liberation. When he was originally arrested his wife heard nothing of it, and knew nothing of his whereabouts, until she herself came under suspicion and was similarly arrested and sent to Siberia. There to their intense joy they met again.

The officials in charge of these Russian and Siberian prisons are in despair on account of the overcrowded condition of the prisons. They are sympathetic and warm-hearted, kind to the prisoners, kind to everybody. One official, with a parchment face with no expression, never smiled except once when Dr. Baedeker asked him if he ever had a holiday. They work night and day, and stick at their posts till they die. They are noble, faithful men.

At Tiumen, too, prisoners were constantly arriving, and going on in batches to their further destinations. Dr. Baedeker got into the prison hospital. It was a little bit of heaven at the gate of Hades. Scarlatina had broken out amongst the children, who, with their mothers, follow the prisoners. Every now and then they are allowed to have an hour with their husbands and fathers. It is a pathetic sight to see the children with their arms round the chained men, and sweet to see the fathers fondling the children. The mothers were allowed to nurse the sick children in the hospital. These Polish mothers, like those of all nations, were devotedly fond of their children. One of them, kneeling down by her child, was lifting up her arms to the Lord in agonising prayer. There were eight to ten children in one room. The distribution of some of Mrs. Grimké's picture cards gave intense joy to both mothers and children.

At Tiumen the prison is only constructed for one-third of the prisoners who are thrust into it. Mr. Kennan's descriptions are perfectly true. There is a long wooden shelf, on which all sleep who can find accommodation; the rest lie beneath upon the ground. This is all very well in summer, when there is plenty of ventilation; but in the winter, through the close confinement, the prisoners sicken and die. When frost sets in here, one who has visited Siberia knows what it means there. Frozen limbs; sickness; death! Have not these poor sufferers a right to the same Gospel we enjoy? Why are they left outside? Darkness has a claim upon the light. They want and desire the Gospel. Dr. Baedeker intends, if the Lord will, to leave home again for Siberia at the close of April, and then to reach dark places further off than any he has yet visited. He seeks prayer for blessing on the work of the past and in the future.

TRAMPS' LABOUR SHELTER.

THE Church Army, having opened a Labour Test House for tramps and vagrants, are anxious to find men who are truly anxious to reform and live Christian lives. Those received must be mostly from the age of twenty to twenty-five, and with few exceptions none can be taken older than thirty. After they have been tested in the Shelter for three or four months, if found reliable, an effort will be made to secure them situations in England; some, it is hoped, will be sent to a farm near London, and, if they desire it, they can go to Canada later on, where every prospect is offered of a useful life. Strong religious influence is brought to bear in the Shelter, and on this chiefly is the hope of real restoration.

The manager will be grateful to receive orders for firewood to deliver within two miles of the Marble Arch, at 3s. 6d. per hundred bundles. Old clothes would often enable a man to obtain a permanent situation. Clergymen and others in the country are invited to recommend suitable young men to the Manager, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. They should not pay the fares up to London. It is best for applicants to tramp up to London as a test of their sincerity.

Gathered Gold.

GOLDEN SILENCE.

GIVE not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is, like the sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue.—Quarles.

A NEGATIVE RELATION TO CHRIST has always ended in his crucifixion. Pilate said, "I find no fault in Him;" Herod said, "I find no fault in Him;" but they gave Him up to the murderers! From the spiritual necessity of the case that was inevitable. This is the irresistible sequence. Beware of it! There is no security in negativeness. If you merely find "no fault in Him," you will assuredly give up Christ under external pressure. Christ asks us for no good conduct certificate. He asks us for the loyalty of the heart's whole trust, He claims the throne of our undivided love.—Dr. Joseph Parker.

AN ASSURANCE.

Called through desert wastes to roam,
Desert paths shall bring thee home.
Love hath led thee in the past,
Love will lead thee to the last.
Blest assurance comes to thee,
"As thy days, thy strength shall be!"

Needs unnumbered may be thine—
Rich supply hath Love Divine;
Sweet the promise, full of cheer,
Faith inspiring, staying fear,
God, thy Father, saith to thee:
"As thy days, thy strength shall be!"

—R. M. Offord.

THE REDEEMER'S TEARS.

They signify how very intent He is to save souls, and how gladly He would save thine if yet thou wilt accept of mercy while it may be had. For if He weep over them that will not be saved, from the same love that is the spring of these tears would saving mercies proceed to those that are become willing to receive them. And that love that wept over them that were lost, how will it glory in them that are saved? There his love is disappointed and vexed, crossed in its gracious intendment; but here, having compassed it, how will He joy over thee with singing, and rest in his love! And thou also, instead of being involved in a like ruin with the unreconciled sinners of the old Jerusalem, shalt be enrolled among the glorious citizens of the new, and triumph together with them in eternal glory.—John Howe.

BITTER SWEETS.

Consider that sin is but a bitter sweet; that seeming sweet that is in sin will quickly vanish, and lasting shame and sorrow will come in the room thereof (Job xx. 12, 13, 14). Many long to be meddling with the murderous morsels of sin, which nourish not, but rend and consume the heart and soul that receives them. Many eat that on earth that they digest in hell; sin's murdering morsels will deceive them that devour them. Adam's apple, Esau's mess, the Israelites' quails, Jonathan's honey, and Adonijah's dainties, were all bitter sweets. After the meal is ended comes the reckoning. Men must not think to dance and dine with the devil, and then to sup with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; to feed upon the poison of asps, and yet that the viper's tongue should not slay them.—Thomas Brooks.

LUTHER'S BIBLE.—After thirty years' work, the revision of the German Bible is completed. At the meeting of the German Bible Society last month the question of publication engaged attention. The delay before the work is in the hands of the public will not be long. It need hardly be said that publication is being awaited with lively interest.

For the Young.

DR. TALMAGE ON THE HOLY LAND.

THE following vivid notes of travel in Palestine from Dr. Talmage's pen appear in a recent contribution to The New York Observer. We have already referred to the baptism in the Jordan; but an account from the chief actor in the striking scene will be welcomed:—

"Bethlehem.—At nine o'clock this December morning I am afoot on the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem. I have just crossed the Valley of Hinnom. It is deep and impressive. A wall of rock on one side, and a steep hill on the other mounting toward the Holy City. A few olive trees on the way up, as though they had climbed as far as they could, and halted. I pass the plain where Absalom marshalled the troop against his father David, and the 'Hill of Evil Council,' where Judas planned for the capture of Christ. I am on the road where the wise men went to find Jesus at the order of Herod—men wise enough not to make report to the cruel monster. It is the road that makes the distance between the birthplace and the deathplace of Him who made the world, and will yet redeem it. Christ made long journeys, but after all died within five miles of his native place.

"In all the region through which this road runs, the Davidic, Solomonic, and Herodic histories overlap each other. I meet many camels with heavy burdens on their way to Jerusalem. These animals set one thinking as no other creatures of God—proud, mysterious, solemn, ancient, majestic, ungainly shapes; stalking out of the past. I enjoy meeting them on foot better than I enjoyed riding on their backs the other day in Egypt. But now Bethlehem is in sight, and we are toiling up the hills which Joseph and Mary ascended in this same month of December long, long years ago.

"The town of Bethlehem is, to my surprise, in the shape of a horse-shoe, the houses extending clear on to the prongs of the horse-shoe, between which I look, and see beyond the fields where Ruth gleaned and Boaz was fascinated with her charms, and about which is garlanded the immortal pastoral which in the Bible lies peacefully between the war lyrics of Judges and Samuel. Though David was a 'man of war,' his great-grandmother Ruth was a farmer's wife, and a woman of peace. Near one end of the semi-circle of rocks on which Bethlehem stands is 'David's Well,' now a wide, deep basin of stone, almost dry, but at certain seasons almost full. No wonder that when David was hounded by persecution, and thirsty, he wanted a cool draught out of it, crying: 'Oh that one would give me to drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate.' The mouth of the well cut out of the eternal rock is about four feet across from edge to edge, and a wet goat-skin bottle was lying near by.

"But we must not dwell too long on the topography of Bethlehem. Hills, hills, hills. Rocks, rocks, rocks. From the village looking down, the backs of the mountains appear like the backs of the mountains of New Hampshire from the top of Mount Washington. The whole scene is more rough and rude than can be imagined. Verily Christ did not chose a soft and genial place in which to be born. But the scenery, though rough, is sublime, and the hills, for width and precipitation, are displays omnipotent. The gate through which our Lord entered this world was a gate of rock, a hard, cold gate, as the gate through which He departed was a swinging gate of sharpened spears.

"Jerusalem.—Yesterday, on horseback, we left Jericho (Joshua's Jericho), and passed along a later Jericho (Christ's Jericho), and, having dipped in the Dead Sea, we came with a feeling that we cannot describe upon the Jordan, a river which more people have desired to see than any other. On our way we overtook an American who requested me to baptize him by immersion in the River Jordan. We dismounted at the place were Joshua and his hosts crossed the river dryshod. We were near a turn in the river, and not far off from where the rocks are piled in shape of cathedrals, domes, and battlements. We pitched our tent and selected portions of Scripture appropriate. One of our Arab attendants had a garment not unlike a baptismal robe. With that garment girdled around me I led the candidate down under the trees on the bank, while near by were groups of friends and some strangers who happened to be there. After a prayer, I read of Christ's baptism in the Jordan, and the Commission, "Go teach all nations, baptizing them." The people on the banks then joined in singing to a familiar tune the familiar words:—

On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye
To Canaan's bright and happy land,
Where my possessions lie.

"With the candidate's hand in mine, we waded deep into the Jordan, and I then declared: 'In this historical river, which was three times divided to let God's people pass dry-shod, and in which Naaman plunged seven times for healing from dire disease, and Christ was baptized, and from the banks of which Elijah ascended in equipage of fire, and which has been used in all ages as a symbol of the dividing line between earth and heaven, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.' As the candidate went down under the waves and then rose, I felt a solemnity that no other scene could have inspired."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, St. George's Church, Tufnell Park, to Feb. 26. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Sussex-street Mission Hall, Brighton, to Feb. 23; Sutton, Feb. 27; Town Hall, Loughton, Mar. 4; Romford, Mar. 6. Mr. A. Armitage, Assembly Rooms, Westbury-on-Trym, Bristol, to Feb. 21; St. James's, Hatcham, Mar. 2—9. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Rawtenstall, Lancashire, Feb. 22—28; Manchester, Wilmott St. Mission Hall, Mar. 1—7. Mr. James S. Tyler, Winslow, Mar. 1—7.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.—The last yearly narrative gives some idea of the important and growing work which Mr. Chorley directs. Halls, Institutes, and Homes combine to make this ministry essentially practical, philanthropy and religion being combined in earnest work for the glory of God. The poor factory girls sadly require the kindly solicitude which the Mission exerts. The report says: "We can tell much to cause thankfulness, if we speak of their changed behaviour; while in some we trust we can discern more than a moral change. Of course there are numberless trials and disappointments." Copies of the report may be had from the superintendent, Mr. William Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

METROPOLITAN DISCHARGED PRISONERS' AID SOCIETY.—For a number of years this organisation has endeavoured to afford opportunity for persons who have fallen into crime, to reinstate themselves as honest members of society, after expiating their offences in prison. During last year the Committee assisted 408 persons. Moreover, thirty-three persons, unconvicted, but suited to the Society's work, were received from the Metropolitan magistrates, kindred societies, and private persons, and satisfactorily dealt with. In every year some few cases turn out badly; but, on the whole, the results have been encouraging, and furnish ample proof of the success which continues to attend the operations of the Society. The central office is 15, Buckingham-street, Adelphi, W.C., Mr. T. Ralph Price, secretary.

HACKNEY UNITED MISSION.

MR. HENRY THORNE, though labouring in great bodily weakness, has conducted a very successful mission in Hackney, under the auspices of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations. Upwards of 6000 have attended the services, and more than 100 have professed conversion at the after-meetings.

The Bible-readings in the afternoons at the Y.W.C.A., Seymour House, Lower Clapton, were well attended and very much appreciated. A farewell praise-meeting was held in the Richmond-road Wesleyan Chapel. About a hundred of the converts and workers met for tea in the Y.M.C.A. hall, Mr. Thorne giving a very earnest parting address to the young believers. Christians have been stirred up to greater zeal, and the membership of the two Associations and neighbouring churches will be considerably increased.

REVIVALS IN ASIA MINOR.

IN a letter to Dr. Constantine, of Smyrna, dated Dec. 10, Rev. C. Tracy, of Marsovan, Asia Minor, tells of an awakening of religious interest there. A few friends met for prayer, confession, and conference as to the prevailing spiritual coldness. Special meetings were held, and a number, chiefly from the college and school, have been brought to decision. Mr. Tracy entreats the prayers of fellow Christians that the work may deepen and extend to other parts of the province.

Dr. Constantine has lately paid a visit to Ordu, a town on the Black Sea. He held meetings, when many rose for prayer, and some decided there and then for Christ. Our correspondent says that entire families have been converted, and the ingathering is still going on. There has been some opposition, but this has not stopped the work. As in the recent awakening at Aintab, the chief interest is among the women. The Greek Evangelical Alliance of Smyrna is seeking to extend its influence, and Ordu is now its centre on the Black Sea.

TO THOSE VISITING BERLIN.—The newly opened Pension, 34, Wilhelmstrasse, Berlin, built on the ground of the Young Men's Christian Association, in one of the best streets of Berlin, is recommended to Christian families travelling abroad, especially to such as desire to make a stay in Berlin. The fifty-five rooms are comfortably furnished. A drawing-room, a ladies' room, and a gentlemen's reading-room are at the disposal of the guests. Prices are moderate. A Christian lady of long experience has undertaken the management of the house, which is conducted in a Christian spirit.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY continues to make substantial progress. Last year 816 persons were assisted to emigrate, the majority of them to places in Canada. That these were acceptable emigrants there can be no doubt from the returns and commendations received. Those for whom situations had not already been secured, were for the most part successful in obtaining employment within two days of arrival. Every intending emigrant provides, either personally or through friends, a contribution towards the cost of his or her emigration, and usually the larger portion of the cost is thus provided. Advice and information are freely given to applicants, and those sent to Canada are received and cared for on arrival at their destination by the Society's voluntary agents and correspondents, of whom there are more than fifty in the different centres of trade and agriculture in the Dominion. These correspondents are provided by the committee with sufficient funds to enable them, in case of need, to supply assisted emigrants with food and lodging until employment can be obtained for them. The offices of the Society are, Memorial Hall Buildings, Farringdon-street, E.C.; Rev. R. Mackay, is the secretary.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.*

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER XII.—"ONE BY ONE."

"WHY do you come to the meeting, Jessie? Do you wish to be saved?"

Jessie B., a young girl, could give no satisfactory answer.

"What is between you and the Saviour, Jessie?"

Jessie is silent. She is now in the hands of a friend to her soul. Isabella explains the way of salvation, and with exquisite tenderness urges the girl to immediate acceptance of Christ. Jessie hesitates and is about to leave, one more victim of delay. "If you were in my garden, Jessie, and I promised you a flower, what would you think if I gave you a withered one? Are you going to spend your life in the world and sin, and then offer Jesus the withered flower?" This went like a sword to Jessie's heart. A sleepless night followed, with strong crying to God: next morning saw her decided and saved.

"You are driving my daughter daft," said a woman to Isabella who had followed the girl home. Mother and sisters were wild with rage: they could not, they would not, put up with this way of doing.

"Annie, are you converted?" said Isabella. "Yes," was the reply.

Our worker explained the "blessed daftness" of conversion, and despite opposition said, "Let us pray." As Isabella poured out her heart in prayer with all her wonted power and tenderness, the mother and sisters began to weep. A new door was thus opened; a new friendship formed; and the visitor was invited to return and take the daughters to church that they might get the same daftness as their sister Annie.

Lily —— was engaged by Mrs. Simpson for domestic service—in room of her servant, who was laid aside by temporary sickness. During this brief period Lily had her eyes opened to a new kind of life. She often found her mistress alone reading her Bible. This struck the girl with amazement! she could not understand it. Perceiving this, her mistress said to her one day, "Lily, I love to be alone; I could live on bread and water: I live on Christ." This astonished her still more, as it was intended to do. Isabella's ways, "so holy and so kind," as she tells, touched the girl's heart, and she began "to feel very strange."

One night at a meeting, the hymn, "Ye must be born again," was sung. Lily could not join in singing it; she felt she was not born again. She came home in distress. Her mistress noticing her trouble immediately proceeded to deal with her about salvation. Lily could not tell her difficulty, simply because she could not discover it. The way of salvation was carefully explained to her. Pointing to a picture on the wall representing the Saviour sitting alone in a wilderness, a fox peering at Him over the rocky brow of the hill, while a bird perched on a tree near by is looking down sorrowfully on Him, Isabella quoted our Lord's words, "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Isabella then burst into tears and wept much as she spoke of Jesus, his sufferings, and his love. Bringing the girl face to face with the Saviour in the Word, she said: "Leave yourself with Jesus, Lily." By and by light came with the Word, and Lily rejoiced in the Lord. The rest of her term was spent in a new world. She loved her mistress with a passionate love, admiring the beauty of her life and striving hard to copy her ways.

"I wondered at her," says Lily. "She would weep at the sight of misery, although she knew it was brought on by sin; and yet she was as bold as a lion. When I left for my new situation, she prayed a beautiful prayer for me, that the Lord would keep me. I was afraid to go away. Then she put her hands about my neck and wept like a child. In my new place the thought of her always came back at worship; and the remembrance of her love and her words did me good. Oh, what a friend I have lost!"

Lily told the story of her conversion to another servant, who was thus led to seek and find the Saviour. If mistresses got nearer to their maids in Christian sympathy, we should hear less about

THE DIFFICULTIES WITH SERVANTS.

As in many other social troubles, the solution lies in the charity that seeketh not its own.

Jessie E., an intelligent young woman from Morayshire, invited by a friend, attends a service in the mission church, and is deeply impressed. At the close of the meeting she falls into the hands of Isabella, who, in a long and searching conversation, opens to her the way of salvation, and finishes her dealings with the inquirer with a fervent prayer and a touching appeal. The little spark is thus fanned into a flame. Jessie, with the new light in her soul—half-believing, half-doubting, goes her way trembling; on the street the love of God in Christ suddenly fills her heart, and she reaches home in a flood of joy. With a bursting heart she writes a full account of the marvellous change to her brother in Elgin, who reads the story of his sister's conversion with amazement and alarm. The letter is a message from God: his sister's story cuts the ground from beneath his feet. He cries to the Lord for mercy, and sooner than he thought it possible the answer of grace comes, and he too is saved. He must now work for his new Master. He is consumed with a desire to preach Christ to the whole world. After a season of study at Mr. H. G. Guinness's Institute, London, this gifted young man sails for Africa, travels into the interior, prepares a dictionary of the Balolo tongue, and lays the foundations of the kingdom of God in the heart of the dark continent.

For the salvation of those for whose souls nobody cares—the tramp, the tinker, the gipsy, the showman—she cherished a tender solicitude, and took no small pains in carrying the message of God to them. One summer at Ballater, when enjoying a much-needed rest, she was sorely pressed in spirit about the salvation of the men employed in connection with a travelling menagerie which was "exhibiting" in the village. Watching for an opportunity near the show, she entered into conversation with the lion tamer, a young coloured man of princely physique and manly character, who daily risked his life among the fierce natives of the Indian jungle and the African wild. He touchingly admitted that every time he entered the lion's cage he was "in terror of death"; and in a tone of sadness said he felt certain he would one day perish. Why then did he not give it up? Because he had no other means of winning his bread. She appealed to him about his soul with the utmost fervour and tenderness; and when she spoke of "the lion of the tribe of Judah," he was deeply affected. Since he could not give over those terrible ventures, had he not the greater need of Christ? If the lions sprang on him, how well it would be with him were he safe in the arms of the Saviour! He accepted her affectionate counsels with expressions of gratitude, and she left the arrow of God's message in his conscience. Some five months afterwards the sad announcement was made that the lion-king had perished—torn to pieces by his infuriated subjects of the den.

Isabella was also much exercised about another class of wanderers—the theological gipsy, the tinker in religion, the pulpit showman, the young apostles of "advanced thought"—who, having left the paths of sound doctrine, have gone a-gipsying in regions vague and obscure, and lost themselves in mists of deadly error. According to this new teaching, man is scarcely fallen; and sin, being only an incidental infirmity of human nature, is sure to vanish as the race develops. So religion consists in awakening the Christ that slumbers in every soul, and holiness is the culture of the good qualities of the natural heart; while, God being of necessity the universal Father, a future is certainly coming when somehow all evil shall disappear from the Universe, as it is bound to do. In dealing with those professors of the new wisdom, Isabella's debating power not less than her womanly tact stood her in good stead.

In a long discussion with one she found that the young theologian carried in his vest pocket a neat little theory of the nature of God and the Universe, which could be comprehended as easily as the simplest sum in arithmetic; and if all things in heaven and earth did not square with his scheme of so much the worse for the Universe and its Author. He judged the government of God and settled the question of man's destiny by his own feelings. By this standard he measured the Divine Being and the mysteries of the Universe and Eternity. He talked flippantly on the most momentous topics. If things were so and so, the Universe was not worthy of his presence, and he would get out of this badly managed world by the nearest cut. What he did not like, he would not believe. But some of Isabella's young philosophers were not so far gone as that: they only leaned heavily that way.

"SIX AND SIX MAKE TWELVE,"

A remarkable change subsequently came over the opinions and preaching of more than one of those ministers. In one instance, indeed, the people said, "Our pastor is a new man and a new preacher"; an awakening in the congregation and his return to the old Gospel having occurred simultaneously. How far the prayers and personal dealings of Isabella had to do with those happy events is known to Him with whom are all secrets; but the ministers themselves speak with admiration of the noble character of their faithful monitor. It may be added that in these discussions our worker always maintained perfect calmness and serenity of temper, even when her antagonists were at a red heat; nor did she fail to accompany her plain speaking with her wonted generosity and unbounded hospitality. It ought not to be overlooked, however, that if she disliked dangerous error, she no less detested dead orthodoxy.

H.I.M. THE EMPRESS OF GERMANY.

THOUGH it remains true for the Church of Christ in all ages that "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called," we are yet allowed to rejoice, when, from time to time, we see earnest believers in the high places of this world using their larger influence to bear testimony for Christ. Such a one is the young Empress of Germany, Augusta Victoria, Princess of Schleswig-Holstein. She was born in 1858, and is the eldest daughter of the Duke Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein. The childhood and youth of the Princess were spent in the simplicity and seclusion of private life at Dolzig, and later at Prinkenan, country residences of her father.

The Duke himself gave great attention to the education of his children, and the time spent with the parents was always the most pleasant for the young princes and princesses. The natural kindness of the Princess Augusta Victoria and her sister won them early the hearts of all the inhabitants of the little neighbouring town.

Once on their way home from a walk the two young ladies met a poor old woman who had great difficulty in moving her wheelbarrow, and was obliged to take rest a moment. The princesses, seeing this, took possession of the wheelbarrow, and, the one on the right side, the other on the left, pushed it up the hill. Before the old woman could recover from her astonishment and express her thanks, the two kind helpers had disappeared.

They early took the habit of caring personally for the poor. It was always a great delight for them, when, on Christmas Eve, the fifty poorest people of the place were invited to the Castle of the Duke to receive their presents. But this was not enough; the princesses also went to the huts of the poor to visit them. When the day of their confirmation was celebrated, it was a real holiday for the whole town of Prinkenan. Princess Augusta Victoria always listened with great interest to the sermons. It was clear to all Christians who saw her that she had early given her heart to the Lord.

When she was married on February 27, 1881, to Prince William of Prussia, she continued to take warm interest in all works of practical benevolence, and she took an early opportunity of visiting personally all the institutions of charity. Everybody felt that she did not do it as a duty, but that it was the impulse of her heart. Her special interest was drawn towards the City Mission, as an agency to encounter the great spiritual need of the German metropolis. It was this which created the first difficulties in her way, and where she learnt that it is not always easy to confess the Lord before men. It was undoubtedly due to her influence that in 1887 her husband took part at a meeting in favour of the Berlin City Mission in the house of Count Waldersee. The leader of the City Mission, Court-Chaplain Stöcker, has many antagonists on account of his political activity; and in those days the first alarming news of the deadly illness of the Crown Prince at San Remo drew the attention of the public more towards Prince William. The Princess learnt in that time what it is to suffer for the Master's cause. She, however, met bravely in person the opposition which was roused almost in every quarter. She did not give up her object, but succeeded in obtaining from her father-in-law, to whom she was devotedly attached, and who had in the meantime succeeded to the throne, permission to assume the patronage of the Evangelical Church Aid Society. This is the name of the association which was henceforth to assist the City Mission and similar works. It was at the institution of the Society that the Empress, then Crown Princess, wrote the well-known letter to Mr. de Levetzow, which appeared in our columns at the time, and which is a testimony of her living faith in Christ's atoning work.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Reichard & Lindner, Berlin, N.W.)

Very soon after this, the much-lamented death of Emperor Frederick brought her husband, much earlier than was expected, to the responsible position he now occupies. His consort, the Empress, is a true help-meet to him. With the genuine kindness of her heart she had already won much affection, and thereby opened the way for her husband. Her five sons are educated in the simplicity of private life and brought up in the fear of the Lord.

A little story will illustrate this. One day the young princes were playing with the son of an officer of Court, the child of pious parents. In conversation one of the princes asked his companion: "Do you pray every night?" "Oh, yes," was the reply; to which the Prince remarked: "We say our prayers last thing before retiring to bed, but we like it much better when mother prays with us."

Wherever the Empress can, she tries to further mission work; when a church, a hospital, or some other building for religious purposes is opened, she is sure to be present. She makes personal endeavours to obtain more churches for the capital. When the new building for the Young Men's Christian Association was opened in November last, she was also present. She had visited the Association once before on the occasion of a lecture by the late Professor Christlieb, for whose work she felt great sympathy. She also takes great interest in deaconesses' work, which she would like to see extended. At her wish a number of leading men in that branch met recently to discuss further action.

The Emperor himself has shown a keen desire to benefit his people religiously, as well as socially and morally. His energies have been exerted in the preservation of the sanctity of the Sabbath, and other measures for the highest public good. It is gratifying in the extreme to realise that the Empress so consistently and ably seconds his beneficent designs. Our sincere hope is that she may be granted a long life of activity in the Master's cause.

Mr. Moody's Bible Institute.

THE building for the Men's Department of the Bible Institute, Chicago, was opened on Thursday, Jan. 16. Mr. T. W. Harvey, vice-president of the Chicago Evangelisation Society, had spared no pains in superintending the erection of the building. There was a large representation of the citizens of the city and its suburbs. A reception was held from four until eight, and then an audience that crowded the large chapel to its utmost capacity, and overflowed into the corridor, assembled to listen to the more formal dedicatory exercises. Mr. D. L. Moody, the president, spoke substantially as follows, on "The Chicago Evangelisation Society, Its Aims and Methods":—

First.—We want to train women for foreign mission work. I believe societies have made mistakes in sending workers to foreign fields until they have been tested in the home field. I was in the home of a friend some time ago, and a lady came to see me; she said that she had the foreign field laid upon her heart, and she wanted to go to China very much. I asked her what she had done for Christ. She said there was nothing to do in her town; she was sorry, but she couldn't find anything to do. Just then the minister of the village walked in. "Oh," he said, "Annie, I am really glad to see you; there is a family in the street you live in that is in a bad way; they have not been to church for a long time; the children have not been to Sunday-school for weeks. Take them in and look them up." She said she wished she could do it, but she could not. I wouldn't give that (snapping his fingers) for of such people. I want a woman first to try her own field, her own city, her own street where she lives. I think we should weigh them up and measure them here, and see what is in them, and if they succeed here they will probably succeed in the foreign field.

Second.—We aim to train ladies to work in our large cities. Nine-tenths of the mothers of Chicago feel they have no time for church services, with eight or nine children to look after. It seems to me that it is a great work to train ladies to go into these homes and carry the Gospel to them. It seems to me that there is hardly a woman with the love of God in her heart that would not be in sympathy with this work. Every church ought to have one to five of these workers, and in that way the non-church-goers can be reached. Our plan is to have a lady assigned to a district; we will have that lady hunt up one hundred families; she is bishop over that one hundred families, will visit them every thirty days, and report to the minister how these families are getting on. If they are in distress, let the Church of God help them, and not turn them over to some charitable society. I believe ladies can do that far better than men. Many men don't like when they are off at their work to have a man, and especially a young man, go around visiting their families; but a lady can go right into the kitchen, where the wife is at the wash-tub, talk with her, find out her trouble, and get hold of her affections. She will get the children to the Sunday-schools; if they do not go to the public schools, get her to send them there, and if there are very little ones get them into the kindergarten. It seems to me that some one member at least of the family might be induced to go to church, and thus we will lay hold of these lapsed masses, if we only train men and women for the work.

Third.—We aim to train men with gifts for music to be leaders. I think the most practical thing is to have a precentor or choir master to lead the choir; during the week he can visit parishioners or non-church-goers. There are many men who have a gift of this kind, which, if it were cultivated for one or two years, would make them efficient workers in this field.

Fourth.—We aim to train men to go into the saloons and the gambling-dens, where men congregate. If you are going to fish, you ought to GO WHERE THE FISH ARE.

It will not do to throw open your church doors and say, "Come in and be saved, or stay out and be damned." The church of course wishes to seek and save that which is lost. We want men to go into these gambling-dens, drinking-saloons, and other places where men are going by the hundred and thousand. I was at Denver some time ago, preaching, and I found the men were in the gambling-dens; they were not in the churches; they were not in the libraries. Over one place was a notice, "This game never closes." I found it had gone on for seven long years, never closing. We want men who will go after the lost, and if we cannot raise men to do that, Christianity is a failure. We must have men to lay down their lives, if need be, to reach them. We must train men to go into the highways and hedges and get that class of people.

Fifth.—We want to raise up evangelists—men who have gifts of speech. There was a printer in this city years ago when I was here; he found that he had a gift to open the Bible and interest people here in Chicago. A wealthy man found him out, and hired him to go to the State of New York, and I do not believe there is a man in the State of New York who has won so many souls to Christ as this man. Chicago is full of such men. I do not want these men to aspire to the pulpit. It seems to me that we ought to have a class of men between the clergy and the laity. Take a man of twenty-five or twenty-six years of age. If he gets ready for college it will take him three or four years in college and three or four in the seminary, and he will be nearly forty before he is ready for work. I say nothing against those who are studying Latin and Greek, and who are going through the regular seminary course; but I say while we have that class of men, we want another class. Let men and women with gifts put themselves in training. If a man wants to know the Bible, let him come and spend two or three years in study, and we believe he will do a grand work for God.

THE BIBLE AS A TEXT-BOOK.

Prof. H. MCDONALD SCOTT, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, said:—

I feel compelled to speak about the Bible as a text-book. I remember that it took about four hundred years for the world to get the idea that the Bible should be called one book; it was called a library of books, extending over fifteen or sixteen hundred years. When we speak of the Bible as one thing, as a text-book, it takes in the whole sacred Scriptures. This is called a Bible Institute, and I thought I would, in the few minutes allotted to me, point out some of the things that will be involved in teaching of the Bible here. The Bible is like a two-edged sword; if you use it right it does a great deal of good, but if you use it wrong it may do a great deal of harm.

In the first place, I would say that in teaching the Bible in this Institue we should have a course of introductory study. We should have a course telling about the history of the books of the Bible. A young man came to me the other day, and said, "I was talking to a young friend about Christian things, and he said, 'Pshaw! this whole Bible was simply voted about three hundred years after the time of Paul, the Apostle.'" Unless he could get that bubble pricked it was no use to talk to him about the Bible, because he believed the whole thing was made by a synod about three hundred years after Christ and the Apostles. Therefore at the very introduction to our work, we should emphasise that one requisite:—Where did the Bible come from? What is its origin? When I am going to read a certain collection of books I must know where they came from; what is their origin; what authority have they, because the Church is no authority for me. Suppose I take a New Testament, and feel my way toward it. Some men say this part does not belong to it; some say, that other was written two or three hundred years after Christ. All critics say you can take Romans, First and Second Corinthians, and Galatians, and all thinking men believe that Paul wrote these. If we start from that we have got a base of operations. So in coming to the study of the Bible we should KNOW WHERE TO BEGIN.

Then another thing that you and I in our Bible Institutes should emphasise is this: What are the rules for explaining the Bible, or what wise men call the science of paraphrastics? It is all very well to make Lot, and Isaac, and Jacob, and Abraham come to Chicago and talk with us. But if you and I want to explain what Isaac and Jacob meant, we must go to them. If I want to know what Abraham meant, I must not make him talk in the American dialect of the nineteenth century, but I must understand what he says in the Hebrew dialect. We have to go back to the use of language in those days. Take, for instance, where Peter had the keys given him: that, I suppose, refers to the usage in that day of the rabbis. When a young rabbi was ordained, he was given a copy of the law, and he was given a key to unlock the Word of God. It was not the papal key, or anything of that kind; so I say I should go back and use language according to the meaning of those days.

There are a number of theories that we must avoid in our Bible Institute. One is the allegorical method. People attempting to find a hidden meaning running all through the Bible. Another is the spiritualistic method. I have heard good brethren who seemed to think the more they can get out of a passage the more they have done for the glory of God. Sometimes a man will take the Tabernacle, and preach a whole theory of religion out of the Tabernacle; they put these things into the Word of God in order to make it fit their theories. There is only one way to explain the Bible, and that is to explain it historically and grammatically. We must find out just what a word meant then and there; if we try to give it a particular turn this way or that, we dishonour the Spirit of God. The Lord could not give his meaning in any other way except through language, just as it was when those different men wrote. Therefore, we should emphasise that in our Bible Institute, and we should emphasise it by explaining the Bible reproductively, not glossatorically, if I might use a big word. In other words, we should explain the Bible by finding out the meaning of it, and then reproduce it, and not skim along, one verse after another, merely making a remark about it.

In our Bible Institute we should study Biblical theology. Suppose the Bible stopped with the last chapter of Genesis, and that is all the Bible I have got. I could make a theology out of that. I could find a trinity in the first three verses, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." I find a great deal in it, but I have a certain narrow theology, with some things obscured and some things not in it. If I come down to the Pentateuch, I have another theology; if I come down to the end of the prophets (the prophets were the Protestant reformers of those days), I have another system of theology. So I would have different theologies. But they are all like men looking at a landscape from different points of view. One man says the tree is higher than the house: another says the house is higher than the tree. The relations are different according to the standpoint of the man. According as you take the ideas contained in Genesis alone, or take the whole of the Old Testament, you have a different prospective. In the New Testament it is the same thing; you might divide it into three or four groups. Take the groups falling about Peter and James. Read the Epistle of James. James does not talk about the atonement; he doesn't say a word about sacrifice, and if you were reading James alone you would say, he does not know the Gospel. He speaks about Christianity as a perfect law; it is a law from beginning to end. Yet you will find in the Epistle of James more of the sermon on the mount than in all the rest of the New Testament together. James is looking at Christianity from the point of view of perfect law.

It has been said that Paul's theology on the other hand might be stated in

TWO GREAT INTERJECTIONS:

"O wretched man that I am!" "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God."

So it has been said that John's Gospel contains a complete theology. He wrote his Gospel, first, to prove the man Jesus is the Christ of God incarnate; and second, to prove that we may have eternal life through Him. So then we might have the whole New Testament arranged according to three theologies: that of James and John and Paul; each looks at the same great truth from different points of view. We might get into endless confusion if a man were to take James alone, or mix up James and Paul; just as if you look at a picture from this point of view, it is all right, but if you get half way here, you have the glare from this window, and the glare from that other light, and you will not see anything well. So in studying the Bible and its teachings, you have to take some good standpoint; in that way the whole falls into harmony.

Mr. Moody called upon PROFESSOR WEIDNER, D.D., who had been teaching in the Institute for a month, to give his impressions of the work:—

I have been asked to give my impressions. It has been my pleasure to train men to go out and preach the Gospel for many years, and I must say I have never met in my experience a more earnest set of men and women than those who have come before me in the past four weeks. There are men here of very marked ability and promise. I have been astonished at their hunger for the Word of God; their familiarity with and quick apprehension of Bible truth. I am convinced that the method of training followed here—that of combining study with actual Gospel work, is the true method. I believe, too, we must, as is aimed at in this Institution, take the Gospel into the homes of the people. If men will not come to church to hear the Gospel, then let us go to their homes and talk the Gospel to them there.

Rev. S. J. MCPHERSON, D.D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, spoke as follows upon "The City Pastor's Need of the Assistance of TRAINED LAY WORKERS."

The personal ministry of our Lord emphasised personal and pastoral work. He is the Good Shepherd, dealing chiefly with particular sheep, or with some little flock. Addresses to crowds, like his Sermon on the Mount, were exceptional. Even the wonderful addresses at and after the institution of the Supper, were delivered to a group of twelve or eleven. He gave Himself much to household ministries, as at the home of Simon Peter, in Capernaum, at the wedding in Cana, at the feasts of Levi and Simon the Pharisee, and at the favoured home of Mary and Martha in Bethany. He made many of his greatest revelations to individuals, like the Syro-Phœnician woman, the woman of Samaria, the woman that was a sinner, Nicodemus, Zaccheus, the pair walking out to Emmaus, and the penitent denier on the shore of Galilee. Whether in seeking converts or in edifying followers, his method was largely conversational. He commended the same method to his representatives. When He sent forth the twelve (Matt. x. 5-24), and the seventy (Luke x. 1-17), on their early circuits in Galilee, He despatched them not merely to cities and towns, but also to homes. "Into whatsoever house ye enter, first say: Peace be to this house." Even his great commission instructs us to preach the Gospel to "every creature" as well as to "all nations."

The early Church constantly followed the same method. Pentecost was confined to a single occasion. Thereafter, the Lord usually added to the Church daily, by smaller accretions. Peter dealt not only with multitudes, but also with the one lame man at the gate Beautiful, and with Cornelius; "daily in the temple and in every house, he ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." Paul also, in his missionary tours, often appealed to small companies and to individuals. He talked of Christ in the market places as well as in the synagogues. He began his work for Thyatira in Lydia's little prayer-meeting by the river. He preached effectively to the jailer and his family. He protested to the elders of Ephesus that he had taught them both "publicly and from house to house." The last that we hear of him is that while a prisoner at Rome he "dwelt two whole years in his own hired house," receiving all that came, and preaching the kingdom of God. Afterwards, for more than 200 years, Christians were persecuted, and propagated the Gospel, for the most part, privately, in houses, among hunted groups in hiding in the catacombs.

Such facts as these may well lead us to ask whether we are giving enough prominence relatively to personal and pastoral work. We must family by family. The leaven of the Gospel always follows lines of individual influence. We must, therefore, follow the people into their homes, especially those multitudes who do not go to the churches. True as it is, that preaching is aiming a bow at a venture, I do not belittle the pulpit. On the contrary, even while insisting that it should be largely supplemented by personal and pastoral work, I would magnify it. I rejoice greatly that our pulpits and their occupants are multiplying. But the demand is still far from being met. College students are snapped up as soon as they graduate. While in some villages there are so many churches that they must live, like feudal barons, by making raids on one another, in every large city there is a most lamentable dearth. A church for every 3000 to 5000 is the rule in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco. And many a faithful minister in such large cities is carrying the work of two men to five, even while his pastoral activities are to a great extent neglected.

Here, for example, is a minister with a church of about 800 members. Almost 500 families look to him for pastoral care, while the multitudes around have and seek none at all. There are a good many poor. He can hardly keep up with the sick-calls alone. It is a common thing for him to write fifteen or twenty letters in a day. He has to make at least two sermons a week, brand new and "great" sermons, or half his auditors will think he has "loafed" all the week. There is the ecclesiastical machine, which he must run. There are prayer-meetings, weddings, installations, committees, and boards. I plead for trained workers. I know their beneficent usefulness, for our church is employing two capable and efficient Christian women already. If we had two more, and one more minister, I could walk the streets of the south side without fear or remorse. I don't want any numerous official class of paid ecclesiastics to lord it over God's heritage; I don't want an army of cranks whose zeal is great and whose knowledge is so small as to make it a dangerous thing. I don't want the ordained ministry discontinued, discredited, or more poorly educated. I don't want any decrease in the number of volunteer workers, because I believe that voluntary, unofficial work is the very life of Protestant Churches, and still more of Protestant Christians. But I have no fear of any such results amongst us—the peril is on the other side. What I do want is to see our Lord's service reinforced by skilled workers; to see the work accomplished as it is not now accomplished; to see the churches actually doing what they endeavour and profess to do; to see the great vineyard kept clear of weeds and better filled with snug, trim, vigorous plants, and to see the white fields adequately supplied with reapers. That is why I welcome this promising experiment and bid it God speed.

Rev. WM. M. LAWRENCE, D.D., pastor of the Second Baptist Church, sent the following letter:—

I feel that there is need for trained workers in the inquiry-room; I would train them first in familiarity with the Scripture, and while they have the Bible in their hand they would be able to quote the proper passage without being obliged to turn to it. Then I would train them in the science of the heart. Some men can be reached through the imagination; others through reason; others through the affections. I would have the worker trained so as to know what avenue to take to reach the citadel.

I would also train them in familiarity with the different grades of social life; one kind of inquirer you must take by storm, and another you must capture in effect before the final assault is made. I would train them to reach the rich as well as the poor. We are neglecting the former while we are seeking the latter. It is surprising to know what a smattering of disbelief the inquirer can exhibit. It really is essential that, to a certain extent, workers should be familiar with current opinion. I have seen scores of workers in the inquiry-room entirely lost by their inability to know "What is the matter with this inquirer?"

I do not know that I will be understood when I say that I would train them in the matter of prayer. There is a way of praying so as to carry the heart of the inquirer to the "Mercy Seat"; and there is a way of praying to cause the inquirer to feel a great distance between himself and the Christian worker. My impression is that I have never seen the inquirer taken to the "Throne of Grace" in prayer, but that he did not rise a better man, thus fulfilling the promise, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there will I be also."

Rev. ROBERT MCINTYRE, pastor of Grace M.E. Church, sent the following paper upon

TENT WORK IN GREAT CITIES.

I am glad to take part in the auspicious opening of this great school, and eager to recognise the authentic Gospel work done in this city by that mighty man of valour, D. L. Moody, and to cheer him on to bolder and broader attempts to honour God and save souls in Chicago. I wish also to publicly acknowledge the great debt due to those who upbear this stately and blessed Academy, where eager souls can get free equipment for the noblest work on earth. These pillars in the Church Militant, like those in the old temple, not only stand erect in lofty integrity, but disclose the comely lily-work of sympathy and benevolence becoming those who are servants of Him whose heart had room for all people.

I am asked to speak briefly on "Tent Work." I believe in this form of Gospel effort, because it is a Scriptural method. The Bible is AN ORIENTAL BOOK.

It is full of sycamores, deserts, caravans, flocks; the people wear turbans, tunics and sandals; they travel with camels and asses, and camp under thatch of palms or wayside tents; the local colour is pastoral, the speech is poetic. The tent takes us back to first principles. Being the primitive human habitation, it will help to keep us on the ground principles of preaching. The few simple, essential truths of the Gospel befit a tabernacle. No man would dare read manuscript in a tent; no hired heathen singer would break the silence by inarticulate shrieks in a tent; no frescoed ceiling or stained glass will mock the shawl or frayed suit of the worshipper in a tent. It is a place where rich and poor can meet on a common level and all feel equally at home.

It accords with the spirit of the Gospel, and braces city work at the very point where it is weakest. There is growing in our land a feeling which will by-and-by, unless checked, imperil the very existence of the Church. The chief sin of Jerusalem is rampant here. What was it among all the iniquities of Jewry that provoked the blistering wrath of Jesus? He had gentle words for the publican, the harlot, the thief. Surely, the sin which could ruffle his serene soul, and call forth such terrific outbursts of indignation on the Pharisees, was a sin most awful in his sight. What enormity was black enough to so stir his heart? What was the iniquity of these on whom his woe fell? It was "contempt of the common people." I had rather face God at last with any sin on my soul than that sin; and though I have come far short of my duty, I have never, even for an hour, checked my fraternal love for all men. So I praise God for the tent work which appeals to the common people. This was the glory of Methodism. When a worldly, proud church neglected them in England, Wesley sent his preachers among the masses, and the Lord honoured them for their work.

I believe in tent work, because this method of applied Christianity actually converts many souls. This we know by the records of the tent work of the Chicago Evangelisation Society. I have many incidents of touching pathos and thrilling power, gathered from this work. One man, now studying theology in one of the seminaries of this city, was converted in a tent. A leader in mission work was converted in a tent, the roughest souls are reached, homes are purified, stoutest sinners weep for mercy, devils are cast out of whole communities. The tent, like has medicated and healed whole neighbourhoods. Plague spots in the city, where no church could live, have been sweetened, the few cowed Christians banded into a mission school, or a church planted to eventually destroy anarchy, misrule, and misery in that place.

The final battle of the Gospel is not to be fought in foreign and pagan lands. It is to be fought in our great cities. What unwisdom to send evangelists to China, India, and the isles of the sea, if we cannot hold America. If we lose here we confess Christianity a failure; all hope dies, and the race lapses into the horrid misbeliefs of heathenry, or the blank unbelief of godless materialism. Satan has left his haunts where superstition's hell-brood lurks, and with his boldest leaders has invaded our soil. The Gettysburg of the Gospel is to be fought here—on Christian ground. Once defeated here, he is routed everywhere. God speed the work of such as Mr. Moody. May his tribe increase. And may the tents be multiplied till every centre of feverish unrest shall have its white pavilion filled with good soldiers, who have put on the whole armour of God, ready, when the trumpet sounds, "to your tents, O Israel."

A WORLD'S MISSIONARY COMMITTEE OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN has been established. It is to form a means of communication between the various societies, in the hope of securing concerted action on matters touching general, foreign, and home missionary work. Twenty-eight women's societies have already joined this "World's" committee, of which the president is Miss Abbie B. Child, of Boston, U.S.

HOXTON HALL.

THE friends at Hoxton recently celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the introduction of the Blue Ribbon movement into this country by Mr. William Noble. The meetings throughout were of an enthusiastic description. On Saturday week the Hon. James Munro presided at a gathering in Hoxton Hall, and hearty addresses were delivered by "local favourites." Mr. Munro said that in Melbourne they had no extreme poverty and distress, but some people would go to destruction under any circumstances, People who spent their money at the public-house could hardly expect to thrive. They had 10,000 Rechabites in Victoria.

On Sunday afternoon the Town Hall, Shoreditch, was well filled to hear a practical address on "Wealth and Want," by Rev. Charles Leach. Mr. John Hilton (who had presided at the first Blue Ribbon meeting held in this country) took the chair on this occasion. On Sunday evening Mr. George Nokes gave a Gospel address to a crowded audience.

On Monday evening the conference and anniversary meeting were held in Hoxton Hall. Mr. William I. Palmer, the president of the Gospel Temperance Movement, took the chair, and speeches were delivered by Rev. R. Faraker, Rev. Robert Berry, Dr. Walter Pearce, Messrs. Whitwell and Goulding. The most important feature of the evening was the announcement by Mr. John T. Rae of a new departure in the development of the work. In the course of his statement he said the original expectations of the promoters of the Blue Ribbon Mission have been realised, not only in its great success, but in the fact that it has influenced the older movement from which it sprang. Opportunity has served through changes in the offices of the National Temperance League to divert to that Association the more general work of the Hoxton Hall Committee. The Hoxton Hall Committee will continue to carry on the local Mission, with its various agencies. The success of the enterprise commenced by William Noble twelve years ago calls for deep gratitude to God from all who have the best interests of mankind at heart. It is a source of rejoicing to realise the deeper sense of responsibility existing among Christian pastors and people; a result undoubtedly influenced by the Blue Ribbon crusade.

GLASGOW CITY MISSION.—A correspondent in Glasgow who recently attended a meeting in the hall in Cambridge-street, Glasgow, says a good work is being quietly yet effectively done among cabmen, who by their calling are seldom permitted to attend church during the day; many of them find their way to the hall in the evening. The much-esteemed missionary has worked during the past eighteen months for the social, moral, and spiritual good of the men and their families, and his efforts have been accompanied with tokens of the Lord's approval.

THE BIBLE CLASS conducted by Mr. F. W. Warmington on Sunday afternoons, at the Christian Institute, South-street, Greenwich, held its annual meeting on Monday week. Mr. C. M. Warmington, M.P., brother of the president, attended to give them "a straight talk" on clean thinking, clean speaking, and clean living. Never forget (he said in closing) that Christians are the manifestation to the world of Christ-life. If we pass through the world with our hearts firmly set in this direction, by and by we may expect that we may enter into a habitation where nothing defileth. Mr. George Lidgett, L.C.C., introduced himself as a good old Methodist, a class leader, and an out-and-out believer in the need of cleansing through the blood of the Saviour. Perhaps the hardest thing a Christian had to do was to show his colours at home; anybody could go and preach in the next parish. This Bible-class is manifesting youthful vigour in a variety of ways. The building is being made useful for social, economic, and educational purposes, and on Sunday afternoons it is filled with students of the Word, under the leadership of Mr. Warmington.

Letter to the Editor.

"APOSTOLIC WARFARE."

Sir,—Pastor Douglas has thought proper to make an attack upon "Apostolic Warfare," which will, I hope, at any rate cause many readers of The Christian to examine the pamphlet for themselves. They will then form their own opinion as to whether it was written in an "extremely accusative spirit," or whether the following sentence from page 62 truly described both my spirit and action:—

"As we have already remarked, we systematically abstain from attacking the opinions and practices of any of our comrades in the service of the great Master."

The question of which the Pastor complains, "Where are the men who dare to say that the whole Bible is true?" &c., is on the fifth page, and forms part of my reply to the question on the fourth page, "Why have the churches so largely lost touch with the crowd?" and the remark, "Oh that those who are anxious to see the name of Jesus honoured in our days would study the subject to its foundation."

I verily imagined that I should carry the sympathy of every "evangelical minister" with me in attributing the general admitted indifference to the, as I thought equally admitted, general lapse from the faith. Surely the Pastor would not describe any of "the noble army of ministers who do believe" as having lost touch with the crowd, least of all the noble men he mentions!

But I am struck with the fact that in his list of examples the only pastor (I think) is Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Surely nobody can have forgotten that Mr. Spurgeon has thought it necessary to break away from the associations of a lifetime, or that his reason for doing so was the general want of fidelity to the old faith. Another name given is that of a Wesleyan minister, who is notoriously engaged in a new special work organised to make up for the confessed impossibility of reaching the masses by the ordinary services of that Church. Surely, by such examples, Mr. Douglas only confirms what I have said. "Where are the men who dare to say that the whole Bible is true?"

Nevertheless, if this question causes Pastor Douglas, or any of his brethren, to stand up for the whole truth—say, in their next Church assembly—as boldly as in your friendly columns, I shall rejoice, even to have been misunderstood.

As to the main point of his attack, I am amazed that the Pastor, after saying that "this report is an attempt so to construe Scripture that the Salvation Army shall possess a manifold Apostolic imprimatur," should forthwith proceed to argue as if we had no claim whatever to Scriptural authority for our system of government.

And then our critic proceeds to show his respect for the Scriptures by leaving quite unmentioned the Old Testament. The entire Bible of the Apostles is ruled out and shelved as if it were nought, when God has thought proper therein to describe in the utmost detail his system of organising and directing his armies! And this, though the Pastor, if he read our pamphlet through, must have noticed that I repeatedly claimed to be guided by the grand old Book as to what the Apostles thought and did upon any points whereon no extended descriptions exist in the New Testament!

By what authority is the Old Testament so completely shelved nowadays? Certainly not by that of Him who "came to fulfil" the law. Certainly not by that of the Apostle Paul, whose orders to Timothy and Titus, and to the Church at Thessalonica, I referred to (page 62) as showing that the old military government was followed as closely as circumstances would allow in the churches under his command.

The Scriptural militarism, however, was never the Papistic despotism which the Pastor so mistakenly confounds with our plan of government. The fulness of devotion and subjection to one another in love which made it possible to mobilise God's armies in the olden time with a rapidity that even the modern monarchies cannot rival, never interfered, any more than our system does to-day, with individual conscience and the direct authority of the Lord of Hosts. We never try to constrain anyone to accept our view of duty in this matter, but we do claim the right to our own judgment with regard to the best utilisation of our own lives, and we protest against our condemnation as rebels against Christ's own plan simply because our view of the meaning of his order to "go and disciple" all nations is not that taken by others.

It will not do, either, for the Pastor to ride away with a simple cry of horror at my question how our discipline could have become established all round the world otherwise than by the power of the Holy Ghost. That is the question to which I hold him firmly, and I ask him to account for this marvel in a democratic and self-seeking age by any earthly power, if he can. If, instead of having such a mass of Scriptural authority behind us, we had none at all, such a wonder as this ought to convince heathen, let alone evangelical ministers, that "the finger of God" has been at work in the Salvation Army.

I will not notice the Pastor's last reproachful paragraph, except to challenge him to produce, if he can, out of "Apostolic Warfare," or of any publication issued from any of our presses during the whole existence of the Army, any such attack upon the Presbyterian or any other Church.

As to the "accusative spirit," I heartily plead guilty in one sense. Having been instructed to write something that might be of permanent service to the Army itself, and having, I confess, little hope of writing so as to influence many persons who do not ordinarily listen to us, I kept continually before my mind those who gladly hear us, and strove, by the grace of God, to attack their consciences at every turn. For the great fact ever present to my mind is that the faithful to God, all put together, are as a mere handful when compared with the vast world lying in the arms of the wicked one, and that we all need to be continually "provoking one another to love and to good works." In no other sense had I any desire to provoke anybody. If I have not already trespassed too much upon your space, permit me to conclude with the final question of the accusative pamphlet:—

"Have you in your heart any of that living love which made the Apostles say they 'could not but speak' for their Master? Have you let the fear of man or the cares of this world smother that love into silence until the fire has been deadened to the smoking flax level? Or have you daily called for the wind from heaven to fan the flame until it consumes you as a living sacrifice to Him to whom you owe your all?" (page 80).

HEBREW CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NEW YORK.—Since returning home from his travels last year, Rev. Jacob Freshman has been privileged to experience much blessing on his labours. Writing lately, he said: "Many Hebrews come to the meetings, and we have several earnest inquirers." The eighth annual report of the work states that there are 100,000 Hebrews in New York city. Among these Mr. Freshman carries on Christian agencies that keep him very fully occupied. He has undertaken responsibilities in connection with the labour of Pastor Hirsch in Paris, and sustains a Hebrew Christian missionary at Jerusalem. Some good friends second his endeavours, but he would be glad to make the acquaintance of many more. Mr. Freshman's address is 17, St. Mark's-place, New York.

"The Kingdom of God IS NOT IN WORD, BUT IN POWER."

"For we which live are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal flesh. So then death worketh in us, but life in you. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the exceeding greatness of the power may be of God, and not from ourselves" (2 Cor. iv. 11, 12, 7. R.V.).

The subjoined verses are indeed somewhat rugged, but we are impressed by their reality, and pray that they may convey to the reader a blessing like that of which, in the case of the writer, they have evidently been the outcome. They were accompanied by a note, in which the writer says:—

"I venture to ask if you will kindly put this hymn in your paper, The Christian. I ask very humbly, well knowing that, as poetry, it is most poor. But I know it is true. It was not 'made up,' with effort, by myself, but quickly put into my mind when waiting alone upon God. After being an earnest worker, but mourning over the small results, in spite of whole-hearted effort, He has taken me aside into the desert and for a time obliged me through ill-health to 'be still,' and learn. What this hymn says is the solemn lesson He has taught me in months of intense lonely waiting upon Himself. I shall be very grateful if it may be a message through you to earnest workers."

"How can we reach the people?"
We everywhere hear the cry:
"How can we waken dead souls to life?"
There is but one answer—"Die."

Die—and make room for the Mighty!
Emptied—let Him fill thy soul!
Then carry, not words, but the Life Himself,
Again to make sick souls whole!

We read how "the Second Adam,
A life-giving Spirit" shall be.*
Be silent, be helpless, be nothing,
Till He shall give life from thee.

Can He not speak life into souls?
Is He dead, or sleeping, or gone?
No, we are too busy with our own works,
With giving the hungry a stone.

Words about Him are not Himself,
Are different as stones from bread;
And with aching hearts we must sadly ask,
"Has life come, for all we have said?"

For all our zeal and our tears,
Have the devils been cast out?
Have men been set free from their chains of sin?
From their deadness, anguish, doubt?"

The Kingdom of God is not words—
Not words, "but is power," we are told;
Yet words we pour out to the thirsting world,
And seek not that power of old.

Forgetting his "wait for power!"
Forgetting to "die to live!"
Forgetting that only as He shall arise
Within us can words life give!

Forgetting his promise sure,
"The works that I do shall ye do;
Because I will dwell in your souls Myself,
And again do my works through you."

Forgetting the training of old,
In the desert alone with God,
Of each of his servants, that self might die,
In the lonely path they trod.

How solemn that every word,
Or deed, or plan of our own,
Is utterly powerless life to give:
He must speak, and He alone.

Then wait, and "be still," till He rise
Within you, the "life-giving" One;
Bear Him, not yourself, or your own poor words,
But the life-imparting Sun!

And the world shall find that the Christ still lives,
By seeing his words come true!
By seeing Himself, as a "life-giving spirit,"
Doing still his same works through you!

MISSION SERVICES AT JAFFNA.

e have had blessed times in Jaffna, says a rrespondent of The Ceylon Observer. Rev. G. Grubb and his three colleagues arrived ong us, just after the united prayer-meeting d been held in the Nellore Church for a essing on the proposed work. Next day the ssioners began their labours, Messrs. Grubb d Campbell working at Nellore and Jaffna, hilst Messrs. Millard and Richardson worked Batticotta and throughout the American ission. The Gospel has been fully preached. he work of the Spirit in the heart and the eserving nature of the power of Christ in our ily life was clearly pointed out. Sivites have en most attentive listeners, and some of em have decided for Christ, whilst Christians ve been grounded and settled in the faith d filled with joy.

Services have been held for all classes, includ- g children. The Nellore Church has never tnessed such densely crowded and attentive ngregations, as on these occasions. At the anksgiving service last night, the scene was paralleled. From our worthy government ent, and the European residents, to the umblest Christian — together with many vites—the church and its verandahs were cked. There were at least 1800 people there many think more—from all the missions, hilst Mr. Grubb preached a powerful sermon Neh. viii. 10, "Go your way, eat the fat," c. Long will this mission be remembered.

THE LATE MRS. LUCAS.—We are desired to y that the husband of the late Mrs. Bright Lucas as a member of the Society of Friends and not a oman Catholic, as stated in our obituary notice st week.

OPPRESSION IN AUSTRIA.— The Hon. and ev. E. V. Bligh, Vice-President of the Evangelical lliance, writes to The Times respecting the case a humble evangelist in Bohemia who has been rbidden to invite to a religious meeting in his use any but those of his own religious denomi- ation. This is a novel and retrograde interpre- tion of the law, but it has been confirmed on peal to Vienna. Mr. Bligh acquits the Austrian mperor of any desire to restrict the religious eedom of the meanest of his subjects, and hints at the prime movers in this oppressive action are me pastors of Protestant churches recognised by e State.

MISSION TO ITALIAN SOLDIERS.—The ninth nnual report shows that the work is prospering. avalier Luigi Capellini writes:— "Seventeen ears have passed since I first heard the call of the Master to what has been the work of my life. I ink of that first Lord's Supper in Rome, with its wenty-five communicants, and then glance over e register of the past year, to find that no less an 930 soldiers have sought religious instruction, f whom 150 have given me cause to hope that a ue work of God has been commenced in their uls." The faith and steadfastness of the converts sorely tried. The report says: "At Viterbo a minarist, whom the conscription had called under rms, having been promoted sergeant, began to arass in every possible way the evangelicals of his mpany. Some were deprived of their books, thers unjustly punished under petty pretexts. At st it so happened, in the good providence of God, at one day, when, as usual, he was venting his pleen against his evangelical subordinates in hreats and angry abuse, a captain overheard him. Merging suddenly upon the scene, the officer, no vangelical, but just and liberal, confounded this riest in uniform, and, by inflicting on him a well- eserved spell of imprisonment, released our rethren from that time forward from the vexa- ions of their petty persecutor." Premises in ome for a soldiers' church and mission are more han ever needful. Communications in England ay be addressed to Miss Anna Stoddart, 36, Den- ington-park, West Hampstead, London.

THE LLANERCH DISASTER.

In Monmouthshire, as our native county, we have a special interest, and particularly in the neighbourhood where the terrible colliery explosion recently occurred. We are thankful to see that the nation is beginning liberally to contribute to the Lord Mayor's Fund, which now exceeds £10,000, of which £4000 has been distributed. Meanwhile, an old friend, Mr. Gillespie Prout, who has rendered excellent service on similar occasions in Wales, as well as among our soldiers abroad in time of war, writes us a touching letter, from which we quote the closing sentences :—

I will not trespass upon your indulgence by giving any details, although there are not wanting many pathetic incidents, and not a few thankfully precious records, of the dear fellows to whom the solemn message came so swiftly. I will but say that very thankfully I shall receive within the next fortnight for careful distribution, a few pounds to supplement my very limited private resources; and I think I can promise that, with God's blessing, they shall do some good. With or without cheques or postal orders, I ask for earnest prayers that in much weakness I may be permitted to bring to some desolate hearts the consolations of "his great love."—I am, most faithfully yours, J. G. Prout.

7, Bridge-street, Pontypool, Mon., February 15.

We can vouch that good use will be made of any sums entrusted to Mr. Prout, and that their distribution will be accompanied with faithful and kindly Christian visitation.

But, while the sorely needed temporal relief is afforded, we also urge our readers to contribute to the Institute which Mr. T. M. Wintle is about to build at Pontymoile, for the moral, social, and spiritual benefit of the young workers in this neighbourhood, as mentioned in our last. We shall very thankfully receive contributions towards the £700 still required.

BERWICK-ON-TWEED.—A united mission for the deepening of spiritual life was commenced in Wallace-green Hall, Berwick-on-Tweed, on Monday. The meetings on Monday and Thursday next are to be addressed by Rev. W. J. Mayers; and on Tuesday and Wednesday by Rev. F. B. Meyer. On Friday evening Dr. A. T. Pierson is to speak at a foreign missionary meeting.

Y.W.C.A., FINSBURY INSTITUTE.—The meetings in connection with the week of prayer for young women were very encouraging. A noon-day meeting held each day, with an address by Miss Pigott, was a time of quiet waiting upon God, whose presence was indeed felt. Miss Pigott gave addresses on Sunday afternoons and each evening during the week. The workers praise God for believers revived and encouraged, and for several who have been brought to decision for Christ. Just before the week of prayer, a series of "Bible Talks," by Mr. H. Kidner, on "Remarkable Instances of Fulfilled Prophecy," proved of great value and interest to the members and their friends. The evening educational classes, including such practical subjects as type-writing, book-keeping, shorthand, dress-cutting, preparation for the Civil Service, &c., continue to make very satisfactory progress and have proved useful auxiliaries to our Y.W.C.A.

CAPE TOWN CHILDREN'S SERVICE MISSION.—The fifth annual report states that this work makes encouraging progress. Several new branches have been opened, the books containing 1194 names. It is a source of satisfaction to the promoters to know that the services have been effective in increasing the attendance at the afternoon Sunday-schools. Another pleasing feature is that in some cases the churches are taking up the work by providing services specially suited to the young. The objects of the Mission have been to train the children in habits of respect for the Lord's Day and in the study of God's Word, as well as in ordering their lives in accordance with Scripture principles, but above all, efforts have been put forth to win them to the Saviour in the days of their youth. Libraries are being formed in connection with the Mission to supply the children with wholesome reading. Communications to the secretary should be addressed: Mr. C. H. Macdonald, care of Y.M.C.A., Capetown.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BRITTANY.—Strong drink is a great hindrance to godliness in this part of France. A worker at Havre writes:—"Some of the Temperance Band stand well, but only a tithe of the eighty-seven who signed the pledge."

HOLLAND.—An Anti-Opium League has been formed in Holland with the object of bringing of public opinion to bear on the system of raising revenue from the opium monopoly in the Dutch West Indies. The manifesto of the League is signed by a considerable number of present or former members of both branches of the Netherlands Legislature, ex-colonial officials, and other influential persons.

THE LORD'S DAY IN SWITZERLAND.—The railway authorities, anticipating legislation in the interest of their employés, have granted their ticket collectors and pointsmen seventeen free Sundays per annum, in place of the equal number of free working days hitherto accorded. In addition to this the men are to have nineteen free working days per annum. The concession has been hailed with joy in Switzerland as an earnest of an improved state of things in relation to Sabbath observance.

GERMANY.—The Upper Consistory, together with the Council of the General Synod, has recently discussed the question of evangelisation. Strong ecclesiastical guarantees seem to be demanded from those who wish to evangelise. The name "evangelist" is objected to; also the difference between the gifts of "fishing for men" and "shepherds watching the flock." Of course the Church Government have no right to limit the liberty of the evangelists, as the right of holding meeting is based on our civil laws; but it is much better if the pastors are friendly to it, and their position is naturally influenced by the attitude of their ecclesiastical superiors.—Evangelical Christendom.

Appeals.

Camberwell Mission and Ragged Schools, Toulon-street, S.E.—We have been much encouraged since the formation, a little over a year ago, of the Christian Band in connection with the Sunday-school. Meetings are held weekly, and are largely attended. It is our desire to supply our members with interesting, elevating, and instructive literature by means of a circulating library. Members and friends have done their best, but still we lack a sufficient number of volumes to enable us to make a start. Books suitable for girls of from seven to eighteen will be gratefully acknowledged by Mr. E. A. Smee, 53, Gresham-road, Brixton.

A Good Work in Need.—Rev. T. J. Hazzard writes:—"Almost within a stone's throw of my chapel in Blackthorn-street, Bow-common, there is a cluster of streets in which poverty, squalor, and death abound. We have just started a Bible-woman in this district, who will be daily coming into contact with sickness that must be relieved, and tales of woe which may not be dismissed with indifference. Gospel tracts must follow bread, and spiritual talk must go hand in hand with bodily nourishments. For these needs I have no funds. I am in great need, too, of hospital letters, for which there is a constant demand. I also want workers in this movement, which, without any noise or éclat, is most truly a 'forward' movement, in the very heart of the masses."

Famishing Board School Children.—Of all the districts of London there is perhaps none that more swarms with children than Clerkenwell, for there appear to be a dozen large Board schools within half a mile of St. James's Church. A large proportion of these boys and girls suffer more than can be described from hunger and insufficient clothing at this time of the year, and their teachers suffer also through being brought face to face with hardship they cannot relieve. At the present time Mr. John A. Groom, hon. superintendent of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission, is making an effort to give a breakfast of cocoa and bread and butter to nine hundred famishing scholars on five mornings of each week; but, although the cost is under three farthings a head, the exchequer is empty, and the provision cannot be continued unless funds for further supplies are sent in. Some eight hundred dinners a week are also being given at a cost of about twopence each, though the children pay only a halfpenny. The tickets are distributed by teachers who know their scholars' needs; and great numbers appear to be in want who cannot be relieved at all.

THE REGENT'S PARK COLLEGE PREACHING STATION SOCIETY supplies village and other chapels that are not able to support a settled minister. During last year ten stations, in and around London, were regularly supplied, and ten others visited occasionally. The plan generally adopted is to send several students successively to the church or congregation applying for assistance, with a view to one being elected superintendent. So far as the circumstances allow, the superintendent acts as pastor, visiting his charge once a month, the remaining Sundays being supplied from among the other students. Last year's report shows that the labourers were cheered by seeing fruit of their toil. Communications should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. R. C. Lemin, at the College.

WORKING WOMEN.

PERHAPS there is no branch of the Young Women's Christian Association that has so rapidly developed in recent years as the domestic "Employment Agency," carried on at Old Cavendish-street, in the West-end, by Miss Annie Gough. This proves at once the great need for such an agency and the fact that the need is being well supplied. In these days we hear much of the difficulty of getting good and reasonable servants in our households, but Miss Gough appears to have discovered the secret, for she has a steady and growing list of applicants, both of mistresses and servants. We are thus encouraged to believe that, where there are mutual respect and a desire on the part alike of employers and employed to do things honestly and faithfully as in the sight of God, the domestic problem is not so difficult of solution as popular complaint would lead us to suppose. At any rate, the Divine blessing clearly rests on Miss Gough's endeavours, and many a young woman is helped into a sphere of happy service through this medium. The branch is self-supporting, and its proved efficiency is its best advertisement.

Miss Annie Gough is as solicitous about the spiritual welfare of her clients as about their temporal comfort; and in this we discern one great element of her success. Much time and pains are expended in keeping up communications by letter with those who have passed through her hands. The sympathetic advice and counsel she strives to give find a due reward in the affection of these working sisters, and in the strengthening of their Christian character. The "Scattered Branch," as she terms those with whose interests she is linked in this way, is a most useful institution, and one of far-spreading influence. An occasional social evening is provided for those members within easy distance, and these evenings are greatly prized as bright, if brief, intervals in a life that is "cumbered with much serving." One evening last week Miss Gough entertained over a hundred guests, gathered from different parts of London, at one of her free and easy "socials," and everybody seemed to find it a happy and profitable time. In addition to the inevitable tea and talk, there were good music from piano and violin, recitations, humorous, pathetic, and practical, two simple and effective Gospel talks, and plenty of hearty hymn singing. The surest proof of the evening's success lay in the circumstance that all seemed loath to depart.

Miss Gough, it may be said, caters for all kinds of womanly work in homes and families, and also for matrons, Bible-women, and other workers among the poor. She would be thankful to know of situations of that sort, and also for housekeepers, governesses, &c. Christian mistresses will be consulting their own interests, as well as helping on a splendidly practical work by writing to Miss Annie M. Gough, or calling upon her at 17, Old Cavendish-street, London, W.

CHELSEA PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE HOME, 28 and 30, Margaretta-terrace, S.W. Since the Preventive Home was added to the Rescue Work, three years ago, 200 cases have been taken in, most of them very young. Pains are taken to teach the girls to earn their own living; at the same time, care is shown not to lose sight of such as have been rescued. Poor girls out of employment are encouraged to stay at the Home while looking out for fresh situations. With regard to rescue work, 55 cases were taken in last year; out of these 19 were unhappy mothers with babies. The workers have been cheered to see some of those whose benefit they have sought turn to the Lord and lead a new life in his service. A small shelter for urgent cases taken off the streets would be a desirable addition to the institution; but, seeing that the present enterprise is only supported with difficulty, extension cannot at present be entertained.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. George Clarke's mission meetings in the Presbyterian Church, Bournemouth, are good. The interest is growing, and there are manifest tokens of blessing.

Rev. J. S. Harrison and Wife have held some special services amongst the young women in the City, in connection with Mrs. Fisher's work at the "Old Welcome." Blessing has been experienced, for which the friends desire to praise God.

Brixham, Devon.—Mr. James Harris has completed a month's successful and encouraging mission in the new chapel, Brixham, and East Allington Primitive Methodist Chapel. The word has been blessed to the conversion of sinners and the quickening of believers.

Messrs. E. W. Bliss and D. B. Towner are co-operating in Gospel work in the United States—the former as preaching, and the latter (assisted by his wife) as singing evangelist. They conducted a mission recently at Fort Scott, Kansas, and reports tell of much blessing in connection with their endeavours.

Dr. Munhall, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Lowe as singers, has conducted a special Gospel mission at Fitchburg, Mass. The newspapers report a widespread interest, and many brought under the regenerating power of the Gospel. The Bible-readings for believers were an interesting and profitable feature, and the work among young men was thoroughgoing.

Rev. W. A. Meaton concluded a sixteen days' mission on Sunday last in Hanbury-street Church, Mile End New Town (Rev. Dr. Tyler, pastor). A conference of the principal workers was held at the close to consider the best means of fostering the earnest spirit evoked by the mission, and it was felt that special means must be adopted to get in the people living close about the chapel.

Ireland.—A successful series of Gospel meetings has been held at Killeshandra, by Mr. and Mrs. Powers, of England, at which about 120 persons indicated their desire to decide for Christ. During last week, a series of meetings for the promotion of holiness was held in Hermon Hall, Belfast, when addresses were delivered by Mr. E. J. Johnson, Rev. James Robertson, and others. There was a large attendance, and much blessing experienced.

Chesterfield.—A very happy mission has been held in Trinity Church, Chesterfield, by Rev. Dr. Morgan, of Leamington. He held services for children every day, besides addresses on spiritual life and the evening mission service. He also addressed the inmates of the workhouse. A Children's Scripture Union was formed, which a large number at once joined. Many testimonies were given at the close of the mission by people who had received definite blessing.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONFERENCE.—In response to a cordial invitation from a considerable number of members and friends of the Evangelical Alliance, the Council have decided to hold the next Annual Conference in Manchester, during the autumn. In all probability the gathering will take place on October 7 and two following days. As in former years, a large representation is expected of ministers and laymen connected with churches of various denominations, and several leading men will be requested to give addresses on topics of common interest to evangelical Christians. The Alliance has twice met in conference at Manchester, the last occasion being fifteen years ago.

ROBERTSON MISSION, GRASSMARKET, EDINBURGH.—Erected as a memorial of the revered Dr. William Robertson, the "Working-men's Church" in the Grassmarket, Edinburgh, is the scene of much earnest labour. What with the services, meetings, and classes, the Mission buildings are in use on every week-night, and on Sundays from 10.30 a.m. to 8 p.m. almost without interruption. The attendance is such as to encourage every worker. From the report for 1889 we learn that at Sunday morning service the audience is composed almost entirely of "tramps," and men and women from the lodging-houses in the district. Holy Scripture is read verse about by the audience, and a short address is given. The work among the young is full of promise; and temperance effort is carried on with great vigour. The present minister is Rev. T. D. Watt.

PLAIN LIVING.

VEGETARIANISM, in the opinion of its thorou going devotees, would do wonderful things for improvement of society, if it were but larg adopted as a system of diet. It would relieve congestion of our cities by the wide extensio fruit culture and the employment of an army cultivators. It would conserve the public hea by its simple and natural regimen, and promot corresponding purity of life. It would ban luxurious and expensive gormandising, and free much money for good objects. This and great deal more of the same kind was forcibly pressed on a breakfast company at the Vegetar Hotel in the Strand one morning last week by President of the Vegetarian Society.

Archdeacon Farrar sat in the chief seat, and surrounded by members of Convocation and oth men of light and leading. In an eloquent spe he proved conclusively that the vegetarian cult high and worthy aims, and ought to be supporte but he is not yet convinced, evidently, that a f naceous and fruit diet would necessarily be the b thing for him. The Dean of Chichester confes that the excellent breakfast and the very a homily of Mr. Hills had almost persuaded him join the ranks of the despised abstainers from fle fish, and fowl. He hit a very stubborn nail on head when he said that the chief difficulty lay w the household cook. Our reporter sat at table n to a young man who had been a strict vegetar for three years, much to his advantage every wa especially in the matter of toothache, to which his flesh-eating days he had been a martyr. I then he had married a wife who was a vegetar on the highest ground of all—that it is sinful take away animal life even for food. If the bet half of creation should ever become wholly a entirely of this worthy wife's persuasion, the r of the process will be simple enough. We are course in favour of all the avowed objects of Vegetarian Society enumerated above, and theref we wish it a fair field and all the favour it can BARGEMEN AND BRICKMAKERS.—A h opened at the beginning of last year was Thursday last the scene of a most interesti meeting in commemoration of the anniversary the Faversham branch of the "Christian Li Boat Crew." Miss Child and her co-helper, M Tuck, from London, were present. The yea work, with its many mercies and blessings, w spoken of, and much prayer offered for the rescu and rescuers. Several of those present who h pulled the oars and braved the storms told faithfulness and strengthening power of God.

CANNING TOWN, E.—The first anniversa of the Victoria Mission Hall, Sabberton-stre Victoria Dock-road, was celebrated a few da ago. At a public meeting Mr. A. W. Walker, t evangelist, reported that meetings of some kind other are held every night. There is a Christi band and Sunday-school; moreover, temperan work is pushed forward, and the public-houses a visited. The Mayor, Alderman Smith, who occ pied the chair, expressed himself highly gratifi at the report, which showed that much had be done with small means and under great difficulti His Worship exhorted those who put their ha to the temperance plough not to stop there, but go further, and throw themselves also into Gosp work. The needs of the Mission are numerou Mr. Walker's address is, 3, Aldum Villas, Ca Hall-road, Leytonstone, E.

VILLAGE EVANGELISM.—DEAR SIR,—It h been my privilege during the past few weeks preach and sing the Gospel in several Suss villages. Ambersham, Cootham, Washington, a other places have been visited. The people ha crowded the meeting-places, some walking mil and then standing all through the service, to he the simple Gospel of God's grace, to which th listened with the greatest of attention. Sinne have been saved and saints helped. Services ha been held in mission-rooms, farm-houses, cottage and, in one village, the blacksmith's shop. T Lord willing, I hope to visit other villages in Ap next. If any of your readers are interested in a needy places, I should be glad if they will co municate with me.—Yours faithfully,

JAMES SPRUNT, Evangelist.

FOX AND KNOT SCHOOLS AND MISSION.

LAST week the jubilee of this Institution was held in the building in Charterhouse-street. Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, directed attention to some lessons suggested by the word jubilee. Mr. JOHN STABB, who for so many years has watched over both the schools and the Mission, was very cordially received when he rose to present the jubilee report. One sentence in it well described what the work has been in the course of fifty years. "Entire families have been rescued from the prostrating poverty in which they were found, crime has been prevented in many cases by a little timely assistance, the young have been instructed, the aged and infirm have been comforted, the Gospel of the grace of God has been proclaimed to young and old, and again and again has been seen to possess its ancient power." It was added by Mr. CÆSAR, the secretary, who read the cash statement, that there was a debt upon the building of £125, which it was hoped would be greatly diminished, if not entirely wiped off, during this jubilee year.

Rev. Dr. W. TYLER said it had been a treat to listen to the report. Although the condition of the neighbourhood had greatly altered from what it was fifty years ago, there was an urgent necessity for the work which was then begun being vigorously carried on. This was the text of several interesting addresses subsequently delivered by Rev. W. N. Dickenson, Rev. Dr. L. B. White, of the Religious Tract Society, Rev. R. Dawson, London City Mission, Mr. J. T. Cox, of the Sunday School Union, and other friends.

SCOTTISH NAVVY MISSION SOCIETY.—The sixth annual report tells of earnest endeavour in connection with several important undertakings. The missionary's approach to the men at the great works at the Forth Bridge was facilitated by the heads of departments and officials of various grades. It is matter for deep thankfulness that many men, now scattered throughout the country or in the colonies, can look back upon happy evenings spent in the "Forth Bridge Institute," and can point to it as the place where, by God's mercy, the great change took place in their lives, whereby "old things have passed away, and all things are become new." Up to the present the efforts of the Society have been mainly confined to the Eastern side of Scotland; for the next few years they will be largely transferred to the Western and Highland districts. Sir Archibald L. Campbell, Bart., 23, Moray-place, Edinburgh, is acting Hon. Secretary of the Society.

DRURY LANE WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE.—This useful institution, located at 73, Drury-lane, has entered upon the sixth year of its work. To the friends and subscribers who recently assembled at the House a very gratifying report was presented. Mr. Justice Grantham presided. On week days dinners are provided at very low charges for factory and flower girls in the district, but this part of the work has been much limited hitherto, owing to the lack of sufficient accommodation. Lodgings and a comfortable home have been supplied to forty working girls during the year, the majority of whom have been placed in situations. There is a club for young girls on three evenings of the week, when ladies of the committee and others lend their aid, the time being occupied with needlework, books, music, and so forth. A sewing class is also making good progress, while a nursery, in connection with the House is generally full. It was surprising to find that so much good work had been done on a modest income of less than £200 a year. The committee, of course, are anxious for new subscriptions, in order that their operations may be extended. Mr. Justice Grantham mentioned that one of their associates had kindly undertaken to provide another house a few doors off, and to pay the rent, rates, and taxes, so that there might be more scope for the work carried on.

The Book World.

A Unique Magazine.

The international monthly magazine, THE EVERLASTING NATION, which was started in May last under the able editorship of Rev. Albert A. Isaacs' of Leicester, has made for itself a distinct place in periodical literature. Devoted to history, biography, prophecy, literature, Biblical exegesis, and passing events relating to the Jewish people, the pages cannot but have a special attraction for Christians who realise the place of Israel in the Divine purpose, while to intelligent Jews they will assuredly prove interesting because of their characteristic contents. Gentile readers will learn much of Israel, and Jewish readers will by degrees gain an understanding of the claims of the Christian religion. Placed in the hands of the better class of Jews, this magazine will doubtless, with the Divine blessing, perform a true, though quiet, work for Christ. With the sympathy and help of friends of Israel, THE EVERLASTING NATION ought to become increasingly popular and useful. The first volume, containing the eight numbers published last year, is a goodly book (3s.); the two numbers already issued of the second volume are replete with interesting information, original and selected from a wide field of literature. A Life of Christ.

JESUS THE MESSIAH. By Alfred Edersheim, D.D. 7s. 6d. Longmans. This abridgment of the author's voluminous "Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah" has been prepared under the supervision of Dr. Sanday. The Gospel story is set in full relation at once to its own times, and to ours, by one who possessed a profound knowledge of the whole Jewish background of the picture presented by the evangelists. Though not presenting much of the information and learning which made the fame of the original work, this admirable condensation gives not only the broad framework of narrative, but a large proportion of the illustrative accessories also. Christ's teachings are explained at length, and a perusal of the book will go far toward a theological equipment. Students as well as plain English readers will find the pages lucid and eloquent, and valuable for reference on the many points and topics connected with the Life of lives. Descriptive and expository, this work is worthy of commendation. We would not, however, be supposed to approve of all the author's inferences. The chapter on Judas the betrayer ends with the following singular question: "Can there be a store in the Eternal Compassion for the Betrayer of Christ?" We are at a loss to see any force in the interrogation, in view of the solemn words of Christ Himself—to leave other Scripture statements for the present out of view—"Woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! It had been good for that man if he had not been born" (Matt. xxvi. 24).

MISCELLANEOUS.

MY BLACK SHEEP. By Evelyn Everett Green. 2s. C. H. Kelly. An attractive story, showing to what excellent purpose a benevolent lady befriended a young man of high temper. In the result the lonely benefactress was enabled to thank God for giving her in old age one who became as a true son, albeit she took him in hand with apprehensions as to his being but a "black sheep."

EARTH'S EVENTIDE. By Rev. J. G. Gregory, M.A. Partridge & Co. We have here a sixth edition of a work doubtless well known to many of our readers. The author has revised his work so far "as that in all parts it might be read from the standpoint of 1889 instead of 1863," when it was first published. It will be found specially helpful to students of the prophetic Word, as well as suggestive to all.

LEAVES FROM THE TREE OF LIFE. By Rev. J. Rate, M.A. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. The discourses contained in this volume claim to be "consolatory and practical," and the reader will find the claim to be well founded. They are also thoroughly evangelical, presenting very clearly the difference between a religion of the flesh, and that which is of the Spirit. The author's exposition of the leading truths of the Gospel is discriminating, lucid, and experimental. Such preaching is sure to be owned of God, whether from the pulpit or through the press.

GOSPEL STUDIES. By C. E. Stuart. 1s. Partridge. A series of helpful papers on grace and truth. Repentance, forgiveness, faith, and justification are lucidly explained and illustrated from Holy Writ, their place in relation to doctrine concerning salvation being indicated in a way which teachers as well as learners will duly appreciate.

THE IMPERFECT ANGEL, AND OTHER SERMONS. By Thomas G. Selby. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The discourse which gives the title to this volume develops much helpful teaching concerning the holiness of God, from Job iv. 18—"His angels He charged with folly"—and other passages of Scripture. Twenty in number, the sermons are in a high degree instructive, being rich in suggestion and powerful in illustration. We do not always find ourselves at one with the author in doctrinal statement, but the general drift of his teaching is as wholesome as his style is always vigorous and attractive.

BEATA SPES: SOME REASONS FOR THE BLESSED HOPE. By John Watkins Pitchford, M.A. 6s. Nisbet & Co. Any who are troubled with doubt or uncertainty as to the fact of a future life cannot do better than read this instructive volume. Its appeals to Scripture, with a judicious use of arguments to show that nature does not preclude, but actually confirms, the blessed hope of immortality, make it a book to be read, not only with deep interest, but with spiritual profit. It abounds with evidences of wide research, careful thought, and skilful reasoning, as well as devout confidence in the revealed Word.

THOUGHTS ON BAPTISM. By Rev. W. Barry Cole. 2s. Simpkin, & Marshall. This is an ingenious defence of infant baptism. According to this book, baptism is primarily a missionary ordinance. Grant this assumption, then the author demands another, viz., that the Church, which is composed of baptized persons, includes many who are not saved. The author says: "We read in the Acts of the Apostles, households were baptized, evidently upon the faith of the head of the household." We know not on what authority such a statement is made, but certainly the view is necessary to the argument of the book. Surely it is dangerous in the highest degree thus to read into the Scriptures things which are not actually written.

TALKS WITH MEN, WOMEN, AND CHILDREN. By Rev. David Davies. Elliot Stock. This portly volume abounds in sound, wholesome expositions of Gospel truth, couched in plain, earnest, and often striking terms. Its special feature is the sermonettes to children, which are good specimens of a practice happily becoming more common among ministers, that of giving five or ten minutes of the Sunday morning service to the junior members of their congregation. There is much originality in the subjects chosen, as also in the mode of treating them. This first series of the "Holland-road Pulpit" in Brighton, is likely to be widely appreciated as a readable, and, at the same time, thoughtful manual of sacred truth for family use.

CHRISTIAN CONDUCT. By Chas. A. Vince, M.A. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. Occasional sermons preached to the boys of Mill Hill School by its Head Master. Mr. Vince states at the outset that he has purposely avoided doctrinal topics, and limited himself to Christian ethics, realising "the immediate importance to schoolboys of Christian conduct and Christian motives." The subjects chosen are eminently practical, and suited for the purpose at which they aim. They are treated in a strong and masterly way, calculated, we should think, to deeply impress youthful minds. We might wish that in the case of one or two discourses, such as that on Protestanism, some of the paragraphs could be recast; but, as a whole, the volume abounds in healthy, vigorous thought, expressed in a manly and attractive style.

QUESTIONABLE AMUSEMENTS. On this subject Rev. John Parker, of Sunderland, has published, in pamphlet form, the overture of the Newcastle presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of England, and extracts from a sermon by Rev. Richard Leitch. It is a brave testimony, and will, we trust, enable some to see that the vocation of the Church of Christ is spiritual and not carnal. Sunderland: William Duncan, Fork-street.

"MYSTERY, BABYLON": A Treatise on Romanism and Ritualism. By Rev. J. G. Gregory. 1d. S. W. Partridge & Co. We sincerely trust that God will greatly bless the circulation of this outspoken booklet, which the author, who is incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Hove, Brighton, tells us in a preface is published "with the hope that it may lead its readers to search the Scriptures diligently, so that they may see clearly what is the true mind of God as to those encroachments which the Roman Catholic Church is making—chiefly through the agency of the Ritualistic conspiracy—upon the peace and liberty of English hearts and homes."

The Temperance Cause.

A WEEK'S Gospel temperance meetings at Woolwich have resulted in over 200 pledges.

The recent anniversary meetings of the Irish Temperance League were marked by much enthusiasm.

The use of American and European intoxicants is increasing in Japan, to the great injury of the people.

The Daily Graphic protests against the frequent introduction of drinking usages into dramatic representations.

Mr. Francis Murphy has lately conducted a ten days' mission in Indiana, which has resulted in about 3000 pledges.

Johannesburg, the great gold-mining centre in the Transvaal, is said to have 336 licences for a population of 25,000.

The Chief Constable of Fifeshire speaks in high terms of the good effects of the Early Closing Act, of which he has had a year and a half's experience.

Dr. Lees, of Leeds, is about to bring out a monthly magazine to be called The True Thinker, in which temperance principles will be strongly edvocated.

Mr. Robert Rae is giving in The Temperance Record some interesting "Notes and Recollections" culled from his lengthened experience as an official worker in the cause.

At the close of a masterly temperance address in Calcutta by Canon Wilberforce, dusky Mohammedans and Hindoos crowded to the table, and nearly 800 pledges were taken. The Canon had to return to the sick-room from which he had come.

A "Health and Temperance Exhibition," similar to one held in 1881, is announced to be opened at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, on April 26. One of the features is "to bring forward prominently the newest and best temperance drinks and appliances connected with their manufacture and use."

Notwithstanding an increase in the drink-bill for 1889, Dr. Dawson Burns finds encouragement in a comparison between the ten years ending 1879 and 1889 respectively. The total value of the consumption—1870-1879, was £135,978,780; 1880-1889, £125,538,857, showing on the last decade a total decrease of over 10¼ millions.

Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, at the annual meeting of the Ladies' Temperance Union in Belfast, brought a serious charge against the women of his own city. He finds in Glasgow a strange and unaccountable apathy on the part of many women as to the habits of those with whom they associate. He believes that young women and mothers, if they only willed it, might do more on behalf of temperance than all the associations and leagues put together.

Questions as to the efficacy of Prohibition are frequently answered in accordance with the proclivities of the answerers. Those who object to such drastic methods, are eager to throw doubt on their utility. The true friends of temperance may have plenty of proof that where prohibitory enactments are carried out with thoroughness, and are supported by the great body of the people, they succeed as well as any other human laws. Mr. H. J. Osborn supplies undoubted evidence of this in his pamphlet "Does Prohibition Prohibit?" (1d. "Alliance News" Office, 30, Fleet-street) of which a second edition of 20,000 is published. Mr. Osborn has visited America, and gives the results of his personal inquiries.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—It is reported that Mwanga has re-established his authority at Uganda, has destroyed the slave dhows, and is friendly to the Christians. Probably, not much reliance is to be placed on Mwanga's new-born zeal for missions and their European promoters. He is, however, the most powerful chief of Central Africa, and the natives whom he rules are the finest of aboriginal races there. Should Mwanga use his great influence to put down the slave trade, as he has avowed, it will be a great step towards the civilisation of that portion of the "Dark Continent," and will greatly assist the work of the Church missionaries at Uganda, also indirectly helping the agents of the London Society at Lake Tanganyika.—Nonconformist and Independent.

Among the Churches.

METHODIST.

Rev. Alex. McAulay, an ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, has left England for an evangelistic tour in South Africa.

A three days' Holiness Convention has been held at Hinde-street Wesleyan Chapel, W. The attendance was good throughout; the meetings were marked by much spiritual power, and large numbers testified to having experienced a deepening of the spiritual life. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Jenkins, Mark Guy Pearse, G. A. Bennetts, J. G. Mantle, I. E. Page, and others.

A circuit convention in connection with the Nottingham and Derby Wesleyan district was held at Melton a few days ago. A Conference on Holiness was held in the afternoon, when Rev. C. O. Eldridge gave an address on the "Baptism of the Holy Spirit," and Rev. James Chapman an address on the "Old Evangelicalism and the New." At a public meeting held in the evening the Forward Movement was earnestly advocated.

CONGREGATIONAL.

In connection with the scheme of the Congregational Church Aid Society for the visitation of the churches, Rev. Thomas Bagley, of Tottenham, has conducted a series of meetings in the Isle of Wight, visiting Freshwater, West Cowes, Newport, Sandown, Ventnor, Shanklin, and East Cowes.

Rev. Dr. H. R. Reynolds, principal of Cheshunt College, has written to correct the statement that he has consented to be nominated for the presidency of the Congregational Union in 1891. Dr. Reynolds does not regard himself as sufficiently strong to bear the fatigues of a year of office, and even if elected to the chair, he would have to decline to serve.

Queen's Park Church, Harrow-road (Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., pastor), was formed a little over three years since, and now has about 400 members. Last year the congregation raised £2300, including the promises for the large new church which is to be opened at the end of May. The new building is to cost £7000. The London Congregational Union has promised a gift of £1000 on condition that the building is opened free of debt.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. Mathews and Rev. W. S. Swanson left London last week as a deputation from the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance to present a memorial to the Brussels Conference regarding the slave trade and the traffic in arms and liquor.

Special services were held on Sunday week in Belmont-street U.P. Church, Aberdeen, in celebration of the semi-jubilee of the pastor, Rev. David Beatt. At a meeting on Monday evening, Mr. Beatt gave an interesting sketch of his ministry, in the course of which he stated that the membership of the church had grown from 150 to over 500.

Rev. R. M. Thornton's congregation at Camden-road has held its annual meeting. Reports showed that ninety-two new members were received during the past year, fifty-three of whom were admitted on profession of faith; the present membership is 471. There are 615 Sunday scholars and eighty-three teachers. Special mention was made of two very successful series of meetings, viz., three afternoon meetings for the deepening of spiritual life, conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, last March, and a ten days' mission in November, conducted by Mr. George Clarke. Both these special efforts were a means of real blessing to many members of the congregation, and to others outside.

BAPTIST.

At the Baptist Church, Radcliffe, near Manchester, Rev. F. T. B. Westlake preached a special sermon to miners on the recent terrible explosion at Llanerch. The church was densely crowded, and the Holy Spirit worked with power amongst the people.

Disappointment is being felt in London at the withdrawal by Rev. J. R. Wood of his consent to be nominated to the presidency of the Baptist Union. Since he consented, he has been led to the conclusion that his health is not equal to the strain of his large church and the exacting duties of the chair.

Mr. T. R. Warner, secretary of the Irish Baptist Home Mission, is now in England, endeavouring to arouse increased interest among the churches on behalf of that Mission. He conducted the service in King's-road Chapel, Reading, on the evening of Sunday week, and the congregation was much interested in the story he told of the efforts being made to take a step forward in the Christian work of the sister isle.

The thirteenth anniversary meeting of Highgate-road Chapel was held last week, the pastor (Rev. James Stephens) presiding. From the reports presented it appeared that the present number of members is 666—sixty-six having been added in the past year. Five of the members have gone out to various mission fields during the year, making twelve of the members now in the foreign field. The amount contributed to foreign missions during the year was £495. The Sunday-school and the various institutions of the church are well sustained.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friends' settlement of Newberg, in Oregon, is threatened with the invasion of the rum traffic, and a fund of 30,000 dollars is being raised to prosecute offenders.

The Home Mission Committee's staff of workers has just been increased by the addition of Martha Strong, of Cumberland, a young Friend, whose services in her own neighbourhood have long been highly valued.

A very interesting event occurred at Carlisle on the 6th inst. The golden wedding of Hudson and Elizabeth Scott was then celebrated amid the rejoicings of family and friends, who "overwhelmed them with kindness and good wishes." Long may they be spared to each other, to their family, and the Church.

Friends' Missionary Advocate of this month gives cheering accounts of work in Alaska by E. W. Weesner and associates, where the Friends' Mission has 640 acres of land dedicated to the cause of Christ. From Japan, too, come reports of progress and blessing; but especially is work among Indians described and encouraged. Mexico also shares the blessing of the revival of missionary enterprise among American Friends. Were Eastern Friends as active and liberal as those of the West, all American home and foreign work would spread more and more, and the coming of Christ be hastened.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The members of Glasgow Young Women's Christian Union held their annual meeting in the City Hall Saloon, Glasgow, when satisfactory statements were submitted.

Speaking in Glasgow Free Presbytery, Rev. James Wells condemned the unspiritual idolatry with which many Free Churchmen viewed the Disruption, and which he thought was one of the greatest obstacles to their hearty co-operation with other denominations.

Rev. Andrew Douglas, of Arbroath, moved an overture in his Presbytery in opposition to the agitation for the abolition of communion "fast days," but was defeated. With the disappearance of this observance, he believes the deterioration of the religious life of Scotland will set in.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Society for the Orphans of Irish Presbyterian Ministers and Missionaries does a vast amount of good in a quiet, unobtrusive way. Its income last year was over £1100, and out of this many needy and deserving cases were helped.

The Londonderry Y.M.C.A. is one of the oldest in existence. Although thousands of young men who have passed through the Association are now the bone and sinew of similar Associations in various parts of the world, yet it has at present 513 members, of whom eighty-six joined during the past year, and is otherwise in a prosperous state.

Mountpottinger Methodist Church, Belfast, of which Rev. James Harpur is the pastor, has had a most successful year. The names of 195 new members were added to the temperance roll, over 100 scholars were added to the Sunday-school, 107 families to the congregation, 101 persons to the church membership, and about 150 persons professed to have found the Lord. Over £2030 was raised for all purposes.

A circular has been issued to the Wesleyan ministers of the Dublin district, advocating the use of colportage as an important auxiliary to the labours of the ministers. In Cork an encouraging beginning has been made by the appointment and maintenance of a colporteur. A committee has been appointed to see whether sufficient funds cannot be raised for the employment of one or more colporteurs to work in the Dublin district.

The Irish Presbyterian Board of Missions have received encouraging reports from India, China, and elsewhere. At a service recently held at Anand, India, at which over 500 were present, six persons were baptized. Five men have been baptized at Jinjow, and the names of five applicants for baptism received; two Jews have been received by Mr. Frank into the church at Hamburg on the same day by baptism, and three others avow themselves inquirers and attend the classes and public services. The missionary news from Spain and Syria is also hopeful.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Wm. Noble, incumbent of Tashinny, Ireland; a man of deep piety and earnest zeal.—Rev. W. D. Griffith, formerly rector of Clontuskert, Ballinasloe.—Rev. Hugh Park, parish minister of Cumbernauld, N.B.—Rev. F. Fairbank, pastor of the Congregational Church at Little Maplestead.—Rev. Daniel G. Mailard, Wesleyan minister, Cardiff.—Rev. Stephen O. Halloran, rector of Castletownroche, co. Cork.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on missions by the following evangelists:—Major Whittle, at Down Lodge, Wandsworth, to Feb. 28; Rev. J. S. Harrison, at Sloane-street Chapel, Chelsea, from Feb. 23; Mr. Henry Thorne, at Malvern, Feb. 24; Mr. Henry Lakin, at Melchet Court, Romsey, Feb. 22 to March 7; for mission conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith, at Stornaway, N.B., for three weeks, from Feb. 23.

DR. PIERSON IN SCOTLAND.—This well-known advocate of foreign missions resumed his tour through Scotland at the beginning of the present month, starting at Aberdeen. He has also addressed large meetings in Peterhead, Brechin, Dundee, Arbroath, Montrose, Dumfries, and Perth. The City Hall in the last-named place was crowded on the occasion of a great meeting convened at the request of a Committee of the united churches. Lord Provost Whittet presided, and Dr. Pierson's address was stimulating in a high degree. He dwelt upon the tardy attention which the Church of God has given to world-wide evangelisation, and called upon Scottish Christians earnestly to take up the subject from the bottom, which meant the consecration of the life to God.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 23—2 Chron. XXXVI.

IN this chapter we have:—

(1) Judah ripening for destruction.—Josiah was succeeded by Jehoahaz, his youngest son. He was the people's choice in preference to Eliakim. Ezek. xix. 3 refers to him, and 2 Kings xxiii. 32 describes his character. His brief reign added to his nation's guilt, and so hastened its punishment. His removal into Egypt, and the tribute which the land had to pay, were warnings of coming judgment. His brother Jehoiakim reigned not less wickedly, and for a longer period. His character is described (Jer. xxii. 13-19); and his doom foretold (xxxvi. 30). In Nebuchadnezzar God made use of a new instrument for the punishment of his people. The removal of some of the sacred vessels was an appropriate punishment for the people's neglect of the house of God. The brief reign of his son Jehoiachim, also called Jeconiah and Coniah, was not recognised by Nebuchadnezzar and so was not at variance with Jer. xxxvi. 30. Nebuchadnezzar set up Zedekiah, his brother—properly his father's brother (see margin); who took a solemn oath of fealty to Nebuchadnezzar (13). He violated his oath (14), and by his evil reign (12) filled up the measure of Judah's iniquity.

(2) The long-suffering of God.—This appears through the whole chapter. The first experiences of judgment were calculated to warn against a continuance of sin. These were God's calls to repentance. Besides these God sent other messengers—Jeremiah and others. But when the people's guilt only increased, and God's messengers were mocked and misused, only then did God destroy them. Nothing is more wonderful than the long-suffering of God towards the wicked, unless it be the guilty manner in which men abuse it (Prov. xxix. 1).

(3) The righteous judgment.—There was a point beyond which even Divine long-suffering could not go. The judgment was executed by the Chaldees (17). From the country in which God found Abraham (Acts vii. 4), He now called the people through whom to execute his righteous judgment. Kings are instruments in God's hands either to punish or to release his people (Prov. xxi. 1). Righteousness and even mercy mingle with the expressions of God's wrath.

THE BOOK OF EZRA.

The Book of Temple-Building (1 Cor. iii. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 21, 22; 1 Peter ii. 5).

Ezra was a Jew, sprung from the race of Aaron, and descended from the high priest who was slain at the capture of Jerusalem (2 Kings xxv. 18-21).

This Book is not a continuous narrative; but consists of two parts, separated by several years. The first (chaps. i.-vi.) contains a narrative of the return of the first caravan of Jews from Babylon, under the leadership of Zerubbabel and Jeshua. The second (chaps. vii.-x.) is an account of an expedition, sixty years after the first, conducted by Ezra himself, accompanied by large numbers of his fellow-countrymen, and empowered to re-establish order and religion.

The Book is supposed to have been written by Ezra, who was a great student of the holy writings, and a ready scribe in the law of Moses. He must have been a man of note among the Jewish captives to have won the favour and trust of the king of Persia. There is an absence of the miraculous, and a great similarity to the Books of Chronicles.

The Book teaches that enthusiasm characterises the beginnings of work for God; then coldness and apathy succeed in face of opposition; but when men get back to foundation principles, the work is carried forward to completion.

MONDAY, FEB. 24.—Ezra. I.

Cyrus with his uncle Darius conquered Babylon, as recorded in Dan. v. 31, vi. 28. He might well say that "all the kingdoms of the earth" owned his sway, for his empire reached from the Indus to Egypt. Isaiah, 170 years before, had prophesied that he should come to imperial power (Isa. xliv. 26-28, xlv. 1, 12, 13). And these predictions were doubtless brought under his notice by the venerable prophet and statesman, Daniel, whom Cyrus found on his accession to the kingdom. Daniel had made the prophecies of Jeremiah the special ground and argument of his prayer (ix. 2), and now he uses the prophecies of Isaiah to awaken the interest of the king. Do ordinary Christians sufficiently value prophecy, which is God's guide-book preparing us for coming events, not seen as yet by worldly men?

These Divine stirrings are interesting. He who stirred up the heart of Cyrus (1) stirred up the people (5). The same Hebrew word is used in each case. "The hearts of kings are in the hand of the Lord, and, like rivulets of water, He turneth them which way soever He will." See also Phil. ii. 13.

The proclamation (2-4) was universal and generous, recognising the supremacy of God, and calling upon all to have a share in the great enterprise, either by going or giving. The full edict is in chap. vi. 3-6.

The response (5, 6).—The proclamation, according to Josephus, was sent as far as to the ten tribes in Media, so the first caravan probably included persons from all the tribes, though it was specially under the lead of the chiefs named. It would seem as if the very heathen assisted by their gifts, so that the temple represented Jew and Gentile, emblem of Him in whom is neither the one nor the other.

The temple vessels (7-11).—The number and value of these vessels was very considerable. Through many vicissitudes, they had been preserved. "God knoweth them that are his." This is a motto which may be inscribed on all the vessels of his sanctuary. And though they may be carried into captivity, He will bring them again out of the hand of the enemy. Sheshbazzar is probably the Chaldean name for Zerubbabel (ii. 2, v. 14-16; Zech. iv. 9, 10).

TUESDAY, FEB. 25.—Ezra II.

We have first the numbers of those who returned (1-35).—These genealogies were carefully preserved, because of their value in proving the rights of families to their inheritances, and in indicating the line of Messianic descent. Judah was now only a province. This catalogue is repeated in Neh. vii. The sum total is the same in both, but the numbers of the several families vary. Some who gave in their names at the first may have drawn back, their places being filled by others. Zerubbabel was the grandson of king Jehoiachin, and Jeshua the grandson of Seraiah, the high priest slain by Nebuchadnezzar. The word translated "children" is generally translated "sons," and it evidently means descendants when it follows the name of a person; inhabitants, of a place.

Next, come accounts of priests and temple officials (36-63). The priests were a tenth of the whole. They belonged to four only of the twenty-four courses, but these four were subdivided, so that the complete number was made up again. The Nethinim have been supposed to be the Gideonites, who were spared by Joshua (ix. 22-27). How important it is to be sure of our pedigree. We have no right to the comforts and privileges of Christians, if we are not able to show our descent by birth. Tirshatha was the Persian title given to the rulers of Palestine.

The offerings (64-70).—The small proportion of servants and animals proves that the majority were of the poorer class. How does wealth clog our souls and impede our Christian usefulness! The offerings fell far short of David's, but were accepted according to their ability (69). They came to the site of the house (68). Our first duty is ever towards the house of God. Only let us offer freely (2 Cor. viii. 12).

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 26.—Ezra III.

If the caravan left Babylon in the spring, they would take three or four months on the road; and after a very short interval spent in their cities, which seemed to have remained intact and uninhabited, the people met in their sacred month, and observed the feast of trumpets, the day of atonement, and the feast of tabernacles.

Their first care was in the erection of an altar (1-5). They were impelled to this, because fear was upon them (3). Being in the midst of enemies, they eagerly claimed the protection of God. Note the epithet for Moses (2). Remember that there should be in each Christian life an equivalent to the daily burnt offering: thus the duty of every day requires (4).

The cost of sacrifices and of the payments to the Zidonians must have been very heavy on the impoverished people; but they did not flinch from it, doing all in the strength and for the glory of God—their taxes, instead of being sent to Persia, being diverted for this special object. The temple of the Lord is always being built up at great cost, and Gentiles are not excluded from a share in it (Eph. ii. 18, &c.).

The foundation of the temple (8-13).—Religious revival is ever characterised by a revival of sacred song. There is one hymn never out of date, which speaks of the mercy of God enduring for ever (11). Even though they had but just come out of captivity, they could sing that song. Are there any circumstances in which we may not sing it? Psalms cvii., cxv., cxvi., cxxvi., and some others, known as songs of degrees, were probably composed at this time. The second temple, though as large as the first, lacked its magnificence (Haggai ii. 3), but there were to be compensations. Orientals express their emotions by loud outcries, and this blending of emotions must have been very striking. How differently the same events affect differing minds!

THURSDAY, FEB. 27.—Ezra IV.

Adversaries (1-5).—These were descendants of the heathen colonists who had been sent into the land by the Assyrians (2 Kings xvii. 24, &c.). Whenever true religion revives, there will be opposition. Insidious cunning which proposes a confederacy is more to be dreaded than declared opposition (2). It is better at once to disown those who are not like ourselves in devotion to God, and to tell them that they have no part nor lot in the matter (3).

A parenthesis (6-23).—These verses describe what happened years after, and narrate an analogous attempt on the part of the Samaritans, directed then against the Jews rebuilding the walls of the city. A letter was written to the then reigning monarch, Artaxerxes, which Ezra seems to have copied from the records of Persia, because it stands in the original in the Chaldee language. Notice that now the Israelites are first called Jews, i.e., Judahites (12). They urge that the temple-building should be stayed for the king's own sake. Secret enmity to God's kingdom is often hidden under pretended devotion to Cæsar (John xix. 12). We, too, have our maintenance from the God of heaven (we have eaten the salt of the palace, 14), and we should never allow his name to be dishonoured without doing our best to prevent it. The king was imposed upon by their representations, and ordered the work to cease. But, it is probable that something was due to the supineness of the Jews, who were already half-hearted in their endeavours (Haggai i. 2-9).

Cessation.—The rebuilding of the temple stopped during the reigns of Camoyses and the Magian Smerdis; but in the second year of Darius Hystaspes it was recommenced, and was then finished in four years, or nineteen years after its commencement (Zech. viii. 9; Haggai ii. 18).

FRIDAY, FEB. 28.—Ezra V.

It is necessary to read the books of Haggai and Zechariah to see what difficulties the leaders of the people had to meet, and how much they needed the help of the prophets. At last matters were brought to an issue by the failure of the crops, which gave the prophets additional arguments. When God's judgments are abroad in the earth, men learn righteousness. How often exclusive devotion to our own interests, to the neglect of God's work, defeats the very end we had in view. The greedy search for selfish emolument is like putting money into a bag with holes.

The second letter (3-17).—As soon as the rebuilding began again, after a lapse of fifteen years, another letter was sent to the metropolis for advice. Tatnai appears to have been incited by the Samaritans, and he made a visit of personal inspection. His account of the proceedings is very graphic. The eye of God is on those whose heart is perfect towards Him (5; 2 Chron. xvi. 9; Ps. xxxiii 18).

It is very well to imitate these elders in giving an answer in meekness and fear, but not terrified by our adversaries (1 Peter iii. 12, 15). If God has clearly set us to do work for Him, let us go through with it in spite of all human opposition. Storms are the methods by which He reveals our weakness and his all-sufficiency. Be not greatly moved.

The walls of the spiritual temple are built "in troublous times," but the work goeth fast on. The rulers of this world cannot understand, and gnash impotently with their teeth. God's plan shall stand, though earth be in arms to resist it. The rolls or records of the kingdom were kept in the treasure-house.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1.—Ezra VI.

Achmetha was the summer residence of the Persian kings and the chief city of Media. There was found the decree of Cyrus, which is repeated (3-5), and forms the basis of the injunctions given to Tatnai (6-12). These directions are even more minute and magnificent than those given by Cyrus.

Day by day without fail is God's command for us all (Josh. iii. 10; 2 Chron. xxx. 21; Neh. viii. 18). Even ungodly men believe in the prayers of God's people (10). So the wrath of man praises God, whilst the remainder of it is restrained.

The temple at last finished (15), and dedicated (16). What joy was there! but amidst all a solemn memory of the sin of the whole people of Israel. Though scattered to the four winds, they could not forget that in God s sight they were one still. It is held to be highly probable that Psalms cxlvi.-cl. were composed at this time. In the Septuagint they are called the Psalms of Haggai. Burnt offering and song go together (2 Chron. xxix. 27).

After the dedication came the Passover. Separation must ever precede our feasting on God's Paschal Lamb, and out of this state of heart come joy and strength (22). All things go well with him who is one with God. He turns the hearts of foes, and into our hearts puts joy. And even proselytes, who separated themselves from sin and sinners to seek Israel's God, were welcome. There is a sound of resolution in these words which is very refreshing. Certain it is that none of those who resolutely turn away from evil to seek God shall ever miss finding and seeing Him. And these are permitted to take their position amongst his children.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 2.

JESUS AT NAZARETH.—LUKE iv. 16-32.

GOLDEN TEXT: JOHN i. 11.

IN two brief verses (14, 15) Luke passes over all the incidents referred to in John i. 35-iv. 54. The order of events following the temptation is thus given by Lange:—(1) The first friends (John i. 35-52); (2) The first miracle (John ii. 1-12); (3) The first Passover (John ii. 13-22); (4) Jesus and Nicodemus (John iii. 1-21); (5) Jesus in Samaria (John iv. 1-42); (6) The second miracle in Cana (John iv. 43-54); (7) The first sermon in Nazareth (Luke iv. 16-30).

Verses 16-20.—"Where He had been brought up" was surely a likely place for the Saviour's testimony to be received. His previous life must have made some impression upon the people; and as his fame has already preceded Him (15, 23), they may be expected to feel a measure of pride in receiving once again their own townsman. "His custom" was to go to the synagogue on the Sabbath Day. There could be no better custom. Neglect of the house of God has been the beginning of many a ruined life. The synagogue was not a place for priestly service, like the temple. Its main purpose was to read, and to give instruction in the Scriptures. Children were admitted from the age of five or six, and were compelled to attend at the age of thirteen. He "stood up," thus intimating his desire to read. "The book" (17) was a roll which contained the prophecies of Isaiah. Having "opened" or unrolled this, "He found," by Divine direction, the passage which follows (comp. Isa. lxi. 1-3). It is quoted by Luke from the Septuagint version, hence the slight deviations from our Old Testament text. It was a most appropriate text for describing the work our Lord had come to fulfil. It teaches us who are the subjects of the ministry of Jesus—"the poor, the broken-hearted, the captives, the blind, the bruised." If any of these terms describe us, the work of the Saviour is intended to meet our need. The first condition of being blessed by Him is the knowledge and confession of our need. It reminds us that his work fulfils an Old Testament type. "The acceptable year of the Lord" (19) clearly refers to the year of Jubilee, when slaves were released, lost inheritances were restored, and debts were forgiven (Lev. xxv. 9, 10). The antitype of this is the whole Gospel dispensation. It also emphasises our Lord's qualification for his work. "The Spirit of the Lord," &c. (18). Luke seems to give special prominence to this (1, 14). It proved Him to be the Christ—the Anointed; and therefore invested with Divine authority. The same qualification was needed by the Apostles (Acts ii. 1-4). The success of the teacher's work requires the same anointing. Having read his text, He sat down to teach (20). Note how graphically every movement is described. All eyes were upon Him, and all ears were open to hear what He would say.

Verses 21-30.—Of the discourse which followed, we have probably only the opening words (21). But these words give the theme of the whole. With such a text, and such a Preacher, and such an anointing, no wonder that the sermon produced a profound impression (22). While He claimed to be the fulfilment of one prophecy, their admiration proved that He fulfilled another (Ps. xlv. 2). Their attitude towards Him was not yet determined, but they were compelled to bear witness to the gracious words He spake (John vii. 46). But it is possible to admire a teacher yet reject his teaching.

"Is not this Joseph's son?" (22).—As such they had known Him (Mark vi. 3). But this was no justification for their being offended at Him. If He could do the work which the prophet had foretold, what folly to reject Him because they knew who He was! Instead of receiving the gracious message, they begin to speculate as to how Joseph's son could speak it. Such hearers cannot receive the truth. Our Lord's reply recognises this (23). "Heal thyself."—The words are explained by what follows. "Do here such miracles as we have heard were done in Capernaum." But the spirit prompting their desire for miracles was one which precluded the Saviour from doing any. He would not, either in Nazareth, or before Herod (xxiii. 8-9), perform miracles for mere display. It was another form of the temptation (9-11), and, instead of yielding to it, He accepted his rejection. The proverb He quoted (24; Matt. xiii. 57; Mark vi. 4) prepared Him in some measure for rejection by his own people (John i. 11). Two Old Testament examples are quoted against them. The first (25, 26) refers to the famine during the time of Elijah, when, passing by many widows in Israel, the prophet went only to the widow of Sarepta, a city of Sidon (1 Kings xvii. 9). The second tells how Elisha, while many lepers were in Israel, cleansed only Naaman, the Syrian (2 Kings v. 14). These incidents were illustrative. Israel, by reason of their unbelief, were passed by, while others outside Israel were blessed. Nazareth, though the native town of Jesus, rejected Him, while other less favoured districts received Him. And now, his own people, having rejected Him, are scattered abroad, while to the Gentiles his name is preached. Such preaching exasperated the people. A little while before they were amazed at his teaching (22); now that their own guilt is described, they bitterly resent it. From the rocky wall on the west side of the town, rising to a height of about 40 or 50 feet, they sought to hurl Him down (29). His escape need not be regarded as a miracle. "Calmness, silence, the moral power of self-possessed righteousness have in themselves a power often proved to baffle the fury of an angry mob."—Ellicott.

Rejected at Nazareth, Jesus makes Capernaum his centre (31, 32). Its geographical position; its being less under the influence of the Sacerdotal party than Jerusalem; the fact that Peter's house was there; and the moral wretchedness of the town, all combined to recommend it as a suitable place from which to do his work.

LESSON POINTS.

"As his custom was," &c.—Enforce upon scholars the importance of imitating this custom. To forsake Sunday-school and to spend the Lord's Day in pleasure-seeking have been the first step in many a downward career.

"Came to Nazareth" (16).—This was Nazareth's opportunity, and one the people ought to have been ready to welcome. Their previous acquaintance with his life and character, their opportunity of inquiring into the circumstances of his birth, their recognition of the wisdom with which He spake—all should have made it easy to receive Him. An equally favourable opportunity comes to us.

"Filled with wrath" (28).—Because the truth was unpleasant when personally applied to them. God's message is of a humbling character, charging all with sin. Many are unwilling to receive it. Comp. Mark vi. 17-20. An Indian woman, who saw her own ugliness in a mirror, straightway destroyed the mirror, and prohibited any of her tribe from possessing one. Many act with equal folly.

"Went his way" (30).—That is, from Nazareth. They had misused their opportunity, and now they were to lose it (Luke xix. 42). To Capernaum. Others receive Him (Matt. viii. 11-12).

OVERLOADING SHIPS.—Mr. S. Plimsoll has prepared and is promoting a Bill to deal with the overloading of ships. "The evidence of Mr. Rothery, the Wreck Commissioner," he says, "shows that the loss of 46 per cent. of missing ships is due to overloading. The average annual loss of ships is 106, of precious human lives 944."

Obituary.

M. SARDINOUX, FAUGÈRES.

M. SARDINOUX, honorary Dean of the Theological Faculty of Montauban, has just died at Faugères, Hérault, aged eighty-two. Many of the French pastors of to-day were instructed by him in years gone by, and hold him in affectionate remembrance as a Christian and a teacher.

M. JULES DELAPIERRE, NYON.

The death is announced of this well-known Vaudois Christian, at the age of eighty. He was closely associated with Sunday-school work, and well known as an expositor of Holy Scripture relative to the return of the Lord. With the assistance of several others, he had been for some years engaged in the compilation of a concordance to Segond's French version of the Bible, which is now largely used in Switzerland. M. Delapierre was also a friend of Israel, and a worker in the temperance cause.

MRS. ROBERT BEST, BOLTON.

Mrs. Best, widow of the late Rev. Robert Best, for many years pastor of Mawdsley-street Congregational Church, died at Bolton on Saturday week at the age of 71. For many years she was a weekly visitor at the old infirmary, and was one of the prime movers in the establishment of coffee-taverns in Bolton. She also conducted a working-men's class, and was instrumental in the organisation of Sunday morning services on behalf of cabmen. She was widely known throughout the country as a temperance worker.

TARSUS, ASIA MINOR.—Pastor Jenanyan, missionary of St. Paul's Institute, Tarsus, in a recent letter, tells of some accessions to the ranks of the converts from the Sabbath-school, opened a year ago. In December meetings were held almost daily in the church, and they were crowded, notwithstanding opposition from Armenians, Greeks, and Catholics. Among the converts are two who were leaders in the Catholic Church, who have come out with their families. Two Greeks are suffering great persecution. The Protestant community now numbers 250, with a church membership of 90.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.—The beneficence of the work of the St. Giles Christian Mission among first offenders is well known. Many a lad has been rescued from the prison cell through the readiness of the Mission to take care of him at the expiration of a week's remand under the First Offenders' Act. This gives neglected and wayward boys a new start in life, and we rejoice to learn that many have fully profited by the advantage. At a meeting in connection with the Mission a few days ago, no fewer than fifty boys, now at work and doing well, showed in a touching way that they duly appreciated the benefit of having been rescued from a life of crime; they presented the secretary of the Mission, Mr. Wheatley, with a reading glass, album, and inkstand, as a token of love and esteem. In acknowledgment, Mr. Wheatley took occasion to urge the boys to give their hearts to God while young. Such an incident is very encouraging to the workers, and also cheering to the respected superintendent, Mr. George Hatton, although he is still prevented, through sickness, from taking an active part in the Mission operations.

THE DODS-BRUCE CASE.—About 200 Free Church ministers and elders attended the meeting in Glasgow on Monday last week, at which the resolution was carried requesting the College Committee to take action in this case. Rev. Dr. Andrew Bonar presided, and, in the course of a brief address, said that in the old days it was always understood that professors of theology, in whatever department, taught the things that were most surely believed. But times have changed. Two professors, about whom none had an unkind word to say, had made statements, going to the length of a total denial of all true and real inspiration in Scripture, and set forth, in a most degrading way, views of the atonement and the divinity of Christ which had immensely gladdened the hearts of Unitarians. Rev. A. Wallace, of Hamilton, maintained that Dr. Dods's bias against orthodox doctrine was such as to lead him to misstate it, while Dr. Bruce's recent book showed clear and distinct want of reverence. Mr. J. Galloway, Rev. Hugh Mair, Rev. Wm. Findlay, and others also delivered addresses, specially dwelling upon the importance of the crisis which has arisen.

"There is no volume equally moderate in price giving to English readers so full and clear an account of these sepulchral remains of the early Christians. The work is executed with strict accuracy as well as enthusiasm; it is copiously illustrated; and in an age of revived sacerdotalism among the Anglican clergy its appearance is specially opportune."—Christian Leader.

"We have looked carefully through this volume, and find it most interesting. It practically contains all that is necessary to know about these subterranean vaults. The style of the author is popular and the book is really within the comprehension of the uneducated as well as the educated, and in this consists much of its usefulness. We heartily wish it may be read by thousands of peop'e."

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS:

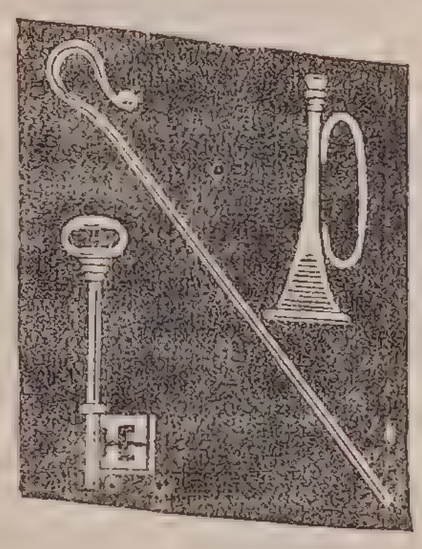
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

FOURTH THOUSAND.

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the bes methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is al chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"
Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

"This is a neat, attractive, and strongly got-up edition of a first-class work. The edition before us is brought down to date by Rev. Ingram Cobbin, who also writes an introductory Essay on Popery. The notes and comments of the Rev. John Milner are very valuable, and add much to the interest and permanent value of the volume. . . . . No Protestant ought to be without this marvellous history. It will repay many a perusal."
Oldham Chronicle.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."
Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in Sword and Trowel.

"A new edition of this useful and standard work; and a most masterly exposure of what Romanism really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery can find no favour where Foxe's Martyrs is studied."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

ON THE  RAILWAY.

THREE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIX RAILWAY SERVANTS WERE KILLED during the year 1888 (the last return), and TWO THOUSAND ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-THREE WERE INJURED.

During the same period, EIGHT HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-TWO MILLIONS OF PASSENGERS were conveyed by railways, and ONLY ELEVEN LOST THEIR LIVES from circumstances beyond their own control.

The 400,000 Railway-men employed, who serve the public so well, are in many cases debarred from attending places of worship by their peculiar duties, and are thus deprived of the spiritual privileges which others enjoy. The Railway Mission seeks to supply their need by bringing the Gospel to them. It has a staff of missionaries and workers, who organise and conduct services at times when the men can attend, in mess-rooms, waiting-rooms, sheds, halls, and other places.

Over 800 meetings are held EVERY WEEK at 300 branches of the Mission, but there are still many Railway centres where no work is carried on, and several very large places, at which many thousands of men are employed, are in urgent need of missionaries to work among the men.

The Committee EARNESTLY ASK FOR FUNDS to carry on this work among men who have to sacrifice their religious privileges in the interests of the public.

SUBSCRIPTIONS will be thankfully received by—

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 21,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity, arising from the recent Dock Labourers' Strike and other causes; and from present appearances an unusually severe season is most certainly apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—YOUNG MAN AT HIGHBURY—BOTH LUNGS DISEASED.

This patient, Mr. GEO. WOOLCOCK, of 2, Witherington-road, Highbury, applied to me on the 9th April last.

Illness commenced with a bad cold and cough. After eight weeks he broke a blood vessel and had three attacks of hæmorrhage; after which he had a doctor for four months; and for one month at Brompton. All the symptoms of phthisis were present. He had lost a stone in weight, and had become very weak. Report of the doctor, "Consumption set in in both lungs."

In less than a month he writes me:—"I felt a change for the better from the first." June 3, he says:—"I am pleased to say I feel better every day."

On June 27, he came to see me at Coombe Lodge—was carefully examined. It was evident that Phthisis had laid hold of each lung (as had been stated), and that the disease had been successfully arrested.

At the end of July he went to work, as a coach-builder (somewhat prematurely), nevertheless he was able to stand it. "I have been to work two months (he writes me Oct. 1), and feel none the worse." Still he continued the treatment. Doubtless that prevented a relapse.

Nov. 13, he says:—"I am pleased and thankful to say I am still at my work and feel well."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION
TO DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

CRITICAL STATE OF FINANCES.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,

It is with grateful thanks we have to record that some £700 has been received (chiefly from readers of THE CHRISTIAN) towards the deficit of £1,500 which has been causing us so much anxiety since the turn of the year, and we now sincerely trust that the remaining £800 will be specially subscribed to permit this work to proceed without being fettered with debt.

We cannot but think that many of our friends conclude that large sums of money come to hand for the Prisoners' Branch of this Mission; but such is not the case, as we find considerable difficulty in meeting the annual outlay of £5,000, a sum which cannot be considered extravagant when the large amount of work accomplished is taken into consideration.

DONATIONS will be thankfully acknowledged if sent either to our Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. WHEATLEY, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn; or to myself, at 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Yours sincerely,

GEORGE HATTON,

Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission.

4, AMPTON STREET, REGENT SQUARE, W.C.

WORK AMONGST MEN

THERE are large bodies of men among the myriads of toilers in our metropolis who entirely neglect public worship.

Left to themselves, these masses of men become unchristianised, infidel and depraved, adding largely to the dangerous classes.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

in addition to its 393 Missionaries on ordinary districts, by its staff of 105 special and well-qualified Missionaries, is bringing large numbers of these men under the upraising influence of the Gospel of Christ.

Last year 72,827 visits were paid to poor Foreigners in our City, and 1,049 religious services were held for them in their various languages.

In upwards of 10,000 public-houses, quite 200,000 persons were reasoned with upon religion and temperance. Upwards of 85,000 factory people were instructed in the Gospel, and many attended the 1,782 meetings held for their benefit.

The Sabbathless tram-car, omnibus, and railway-men received upwards of 200,000 visits in the public ways, at the stations, and in their homes.

The known results of this earnest seeking to save the lost is most satisfactory. Tens of thousands have been rightly influenced and during the past year, 486 communicants have been won from amongst them, hundreds of drunkards have been reformed, and many thousands who have sunk back from the hard struggle of life have, in the time of sickness and approaching death, received consolation.

To support and extend this great work for the Lord Jesus, large funds are urgently needed. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.; or by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Walter J. Mayers, and Mr. Carlos White, will be held in the above Chapel, from Monday to Thursday, March 2 to 6. Afternoons at 3, and evenings at 7.30. Christians of all denominations are heartily invited.

A SALE OF WORK will be held at 11, Bryanston-square, W., by permission of Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Denny, on Wednesday and Thursday, March 5 and 6, on behalf of The Dublin Ragged Schools and Homes and Connemara Nurseries. Open at 2 o'clock. Close at 6.30. Admission 1s. Children, half-price. Tickets to admit for two days, 1s. 6d.

HELPING THE DESTITUTE.—Cast-off clothing, provisions, or cash will be thankfully received by the Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., to help in Relief work among the destitute, free meals to poor children attending Board Schools, soup kitchen, and other benevolent agencies. Offerings entrusted to us will be prudently and impartially distributed.

DINNERS TO POOR CHILDREN in Clerkenwell.—600 meals are provided weekly in Cow Cross Mission Hall. Funds urgently needed. Collecting cards on application. — WILLIAM CATLIN, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN SOCIETY.

Patron—Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

THIS Society labours among the great seafaring population of our country, numbering upwards of 625,000 men, who man some 36,000 Merchant, Passenger, Emigrant, Light, and other Ships, and 29,000 Fishing Vessels; not one of which carries a Chaplain. It also labours among the 60,000 Seamen of the Royal Navy.

AFLOAT—Its work is carried on by holding Services or Bible Readings on board the ships when in ports or roadsteads, distributing Tracts, selling Bibles and Prayer Books, and giving Boxes or Books of sound reading to be taken to sea.

In 1888, about 6,000 Bibles were sold; 750,000 Disused Bibles, Tracts, &c., distributed, and 10,000 Boxes or Bags of Books given to ships.

ASHORE—Its work is threefold:—

I. Spiritual: In 51 Churches or Mission Rooms at various ports, at home and abroad, where seamen are ministered to on Sundays and week-days, by the Society's Chaplains and Scripture Readers.

II. Philanthropic: The men being rescued from publichouses and crimps, and induced to come to the Society's Institutes, where they are provided with good reading, newspapers, &c., with means of writing to their families, and harmless games.

III. Temperance: In 1888, about 8,000 Seamen signed the Temperance Pledge; and during the last 10 years 77,000 have signed it.

Information as to the details of the work is given in the Society's Magazine Word on the Waters.

Increased FUNDS are urgently appealed for, to enable this good work to be maintained and extended. Subscriptions and contributions should be sent to the Secretary, Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., at the Society's Offices, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of the late Bishop Sargent, of Tinnevelly, South India.

Reports reach us of not a few cases in which our home missions are suffering severely from lack of help, caused by the death of old and faithful supporters. Among the workers who are being tried in this way are Mr. George Hatton in Central London, Mr. Robert Bilke in the North-West, and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch. Much might be done to meet the difficulty if the younger generation of Christians would adopt systematic habits of giving. Let them seek out such efforts as they consider worthy of support, and enrol themselves in the list of regular helpers. Those who give time and energy to the carrying on of mission work ought to be freed as far as possible from the anxiety attendant on collecting funds. That might be accomplished if yearly subscriptions took the place of casual and uncertain donations.

Mr. Joseph Cook is again in the full swing of his Boston Monday Lectures; he is discussing the urgent topics of the hour with all his accustomed vigour of thought and masculine force of expression. His two first "preludes" dealt critically and trenchantly with Mr. Bellamy's socialistic theories broached in his famous book, "Looking Backward," and with the racial strife in the Southern States. As to the former, Mr. Cook thinks that methods of co-operation among workers will do far more to elevate their condition, than any centralised action on the part of the State. As to the social friction between whites and blacks in the South, he expresses the fear that before the close of the century there will be bloody episodes, unless justice is done to the coloured people in the exercise of their political and other rights.

The lectures are devoted to a consideration of the varied aspects of mission work. Mr. Cook, in the first lecture, reasserted his well-debated axiom that "it is not safe for a man to die in his sins," and strongly supported the action of the American Board in refusing to send out missionaries who hold the "second probation" theory. The second lecture was a very powerful plea for the suppression of the slave trade and the rum trade in Africa, and for the help of Christian America in the accomplishment of this.

Moral reformers in London need not expect much sympathy or support from The Daily Telegraph. The London County Council, being laudably desirous of purifying the theatrical and music-hall stages, has framed a Bill with this object, to be submitted to Parliament. The Telegraph, in a leading article, makes it the occasion for pouring ridicule on the members of the Council for their well-meant endeavours. Among the provisions of the proposed statute is one enacting that any public performer who shall sing an indecent song, or use indecent gestures, shall be fined for a first offence; and for a repetition of that offence shall be liable to be deprived of the acting certificate granted under the Bill. We should have thought that such a regulation, fairly applied, would be hailed as a boon by all true friends of the people. Our contemporary, however, very elegantly describes it as "the most monstrous proviso of this phenomenally imbecile Bill." Seeing that the purveyors of music-hall indecency have such a powerful backing in a section of the Press, it behoves all purity-loving citizens to strengthen the hands of the County Council in their efforts to conserve public morality.

Dancing as an institution of Barrow in the diocese of Carlisle, recognised and arranged for by the clergy, has called forth a brave and most timely protest from one of them. Rev. E. S. Savage says:—

> I wonder what Apostolic and early Christian times would say to the scandal of the Barrow clergy superintending parish dances. When the clergy arrange for a parish dance they are doing their best to create an inordinate thirst for something which is not worth one iota spiritually, and which must, without doubt, lower the spiritual tone of the parish. When the people have been buying from the clergy tickets for this dance, is it likely that such association will make Holy Communion that sacred thing, that holy bond that it ought to be when administered by such soiled fingers? I hear that a public-house licence was extended on account of a parish dance. Parish dance and extension of public-house, glorious tools for the Liberationists!

The mania for amusement which has seized some professing churches is altogether a movement backward. It is not one but all denominations which are involved. Happily a firm attitude of opposition is being taken. As we noted last week, devout Presbyterians are protesting against the evil among themselves. A northern contemporary has given insertion to a statement of what is taking place among other Nonconformists, and to this effect:—

> In Lancashire many teachers will not come to an annual Sunday-school meeting unless there be the comic man; at children's missionary meetings there must be droll and funny recitations; a "kiss in the dark" is held out as the attraction of an annual congregation meeting; a place of worship, while well-nigh empty for a week evening calling upon God, is filled to hear a humourist or buffo.

Godly men may well be alarmed at this backward movement, and their alarm ought to lead to practical protest.

Spite of the revolt even of Parisians at the proceeding, the correspondent of The Standard says that Madame Sarah Bernhardt is determined to assume the rôle of the Virgin Mary in a Passion play to be produced at Easter. The incidents of the Saviour's sufferings are to be brought as a spectacle of entertainment on the boards of a Paris theatre, and while one is the Virgin, another actor is to personate the Redeemer! Let us hope that such a threatened outrage on all Christian feeling will convey some adequate warning against growing dangers among ourselves.

The American Presbyteries are earnestly debating the question of revising the Westminster Confession of Faith, and revision seems now to be all but inevitable. The demand is for a short creed, simply expressing essential truth. Though averse to the multiplication of creeds, we cannot but recognise the fact that some, such as the Apostolic and Nicene, are by many regarded as priceless summaries of Christian faith and doctrine. Nevertheless this controversy as to revision gives strength and volume to the testimony of the Spirit of grace, that there is but one rock of stability for our troublous days, and that is the Word of our God which standeth fast for ever.

Miss Julia Wedgwood has pronounced against a proposal made by the St. Pancras Guardians to remove the workhouse into the country. She urges that the visits of friends to the aged and sick poor are about the only relief which the dwellers in our workhouses have from a life of dreary monotony, and such visits would be almost impossible were the workhouses at a distance from London. She further insists that such visits have an excellent effect in the direction of being a check upon the inhumane management of these refuges for the aged and infirm poor.

Measures are in preparation for dealing with the Lutheran Church in the Baltic provinces which, if successful, will make of it simply "an engine of governmental administration." The Russian Minister of the Interior will take over the appointment of rectors, incumbents, and all other Lutheran clergymen, and committees appointed by the civil governors of provinces will take the management of church property. What is deemed worse than all the rest in its probable effects is the removal to St. Petersburg, where it will be transformed into an ecclesiastical academy, of the Theological Faculty of Dorpat. Judging from the state of feeling among the Lutherans it seems as though it will not be possible to carry out the scheme without much persecution.

In the House of Commons debate last week on free education, a remark was dropped by Mr. John Morley which has caused dismay in some Protestant circles. He suggested that schools which are open to all should be subject to "popular control": but in the case of schools "for the use of a section of the community, such, for example, as Catholics or Jews," State aid might be given, while they might continue to be under the management of the sect to which they belong. This means, in other words, that Roman Catholics would receive public money for the untrammelled propagation of their religious errors, and we do not wonder that a leading Irish member greedily accepted the suggestion. Mr. Morley is an eminent politician, but we think he will find himself grievously mistaken if he supposes that the constituencies of Protestant Great Britain and Ireland will ever sanction a proposal of that sort.

Preaching the Kingdom of God.

BY JAMES VAN SOMMER.*

I.

THE Lord Jesus Christ said, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in the whole world." The Apostle Paul, reviewing his service with the elders of the Church in Ephesus, said that he had gone amongst them preaching the Kingdom of God. And at the end of the Acts of the Apostles, he is referred to as preaching [at Rome] the Kingdom of God, and teaching the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. It was a new and special ministry, commencing when John the Baptist appeared, from which time the Kingdom of God is preached.

In a general sense, all who publicly make known the merciful provision of deliverance from sin, guilt, sorrow, and wrath, and of righteousness, sanctification, and eternal happiness, preach,† or rather teach, some important truths which form part of the preaching of the Kingdom of God. But in a statement of that character, man's need and happiness come chiefly into view, whilst in the words, "the Kingdom of God," the Divine element prevails, and the whole scope of truth is embraced.

It is ever substantially true that God reigns, and yet if the Scriptures be carefully read, his Kingdom is presented rather as in progress than as having actually come... In this dispensation we still pray, "Thy Kingdom come." It has, however, been ever near since the days when John the Baptist proclaimed, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." It is being established in the heart, and it will ultimately appear in outward glory, majesty, and power.

From the Old Testament Scriptures—for instance the 72nd and the 145th Psalms—we find the Jews were quite familiar with the ideas connected with the Kingdom of God—peace, deliverance, judgment, the overthrow of enemies, righteous rule, redemption, happiness, joy, dominion. All these blessings were to be bestowed through the coming Saviour King. They looked, and properly looked, in a national point of view, to their being thus blessed in their land. Yet still many looked for the City which hath the foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. They desired a better country, that is, a heavenly. And in the days of Daniel the prophet both Jews and Gentiles had heard that the God of Heaven would set up a Kingdom which should stand for ever.

And now the Kingdom of God was at hand. The Son of God had been manifested in human nature, that He might destroy the works of the devil. He had come to seek and to save that which was lost. He was about to become all, to do all, and to suffer all, that was needful for the redemption of Satan's victim, Man. The Kingdom of Heaven was now at hand, for the King was born, and had entered on his course of humiliation, which was to be followed by his exaltation. Who, then, will repent and turn to God, and do works meet for amendment of life? Who will become Christ's subjects, disciples, friends, brethren? All need, but who wants, the blessings which this King bestows?

When the Lord Jesus entered upon his public service He took up the same proclamation, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Such a Scripture as Luke iv. 18 presents the blessings of this Kingdom in a summary way. The Spirit of the Lord was upon Jesus, because—

(1) He was anointed to preach good tidings to the poor; (2) He was sent to proclaim release to the captives; (3) and recovery of sight to the blind; (4) to set at liberty them that are bruised; (5) to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord. The blessings of the Kingdom are thus compendiously expressed, and then the gradual and final establishment of the Kingdom is set forth by prophetical parables and by illustrative miracles. The latter, when performed for the body, indicated by analogy the blessings designed for the entire man, body, soul, and spirit.

The Kingdom of God was the great theme of instruction after the resurrection. The Lord Jesus showed Himself alive to the Apostles after his resurrection, appearing unto them by the space of forty days, and speaking of the things concerning the Kingdom of God (Acts i. 3).

Filled with this truth, and having received the power of the Holy Spirit, how did the Apostles commence the fulfilment of their commission. Let us observe in the first place how "God," and not "man," was made the first object of attention. God, his purposes and works, must be brought primarily into view if we would preach the Kingdom of God. Thus—

ACTS ii.: Jesus, authenticated of "God"—signs which "God" did—counsel of "God"—"God" raised up—"God" had sworn—to the right hand of "God" exalted—received of "the Father" the promise of the Holy Spirit—"God" hath made both "Lord" and "Christ" this Jesus whom ye crucified.

ACTS iii.: The "God" of our fathers—the "God" of Abraham hath glorified—"God" raised—"God" foreshowed—"He" thus fulfilled—times of refreshing shall come from the presence of "the Lord"—"He" will send—"God" hath spoken—the covenant which "God" made—"God" having raised up his Servant, sent Him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

ACTS xiii.: The "God" of this people chose—"He" exalted and led them forth—"He" suffered—"He" destroyed—"God" gave Judges—"God" gave Saul—"He" removed him—"He" raised up David—"He" bore witness—"I" have found—"My" will—"God" brought unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus—"God" raised Him from the dead—the promise made "God" hath fulfilled, in that "He" hath raised up—"my" Son—"I" have begotten—"He" hath spoken—"I" will give—"He" saith also in another place—"Thou" wilt not suffer—the counsel of "God"—whom "God" raised up.

ACTS xvii.: "God" that made—"Lord" of heaven and earth dwelleth not in sanctuaries made with hands; nor is "He" to be served as if "He" were needy—"He" Himself giveth all things: "He" made and hath determined—"He" is not far—offspring of "God"—"God" overlooked—"God" now commandeth—"He" hath appointed—"He" will judge—"He" hath given assurance—"He" hath raised Him from the dead.

From these Scriptures it will be seen that the Apostles, whether they were addressing Jews at Jerusalem, or Jews and religious Proselytes at Antioch, or idolaters at Athens, commenced with truth concerning "God," Himself, his Christ, his character, and his works. They also spoke of men—our state, our need, and the provision for us; yet, pre-eminently, not secondarily, thoughts of God permeated their minds, and flowed out from the abundance of their hearts.

Next, as in the Apostles' preaching God was first considered, what of the preaching itself?

We read that Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them (Acts viii. 5). Then a few verses further on we read, "but when they believed Philip preaching good tidings concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts viii. 12). Thus, as regards the speaker, it is said he "preached Christ"; and as regards the hearers, that they heard the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ. Was not something more contained in Philip's proclamation than at first sight might be supposed?

* This pamphlet, with others, twelve in all, for 9d., post free, from Mr. J. Van Sommer, Cuffnells, Wimbledon, London, S.W.

† "The word 'preach' has come to be ordinarily applied to religious instruction; from which, however, it is always clearly distinguished in Scripture. It signifies, properly, to announce as a herald. Our Lord's preaching that the Kingdom of Heaven was at hand, and his teaching the people, are always expressed by different words."—WHATELY.

ANOTHER CRY FROM FRANCE.

THE article "A Cry from France," which THE CHRISTIAN inserted last year, produced good results, in arousing kind sympathies, and giving us helpers. May I continue to ask friends having independent means to consider whether the great destitution of priest-ridden France is not a call for them to come over and help?

I am not the only isolated worker in France; all over the country there are (alas, at too great distances from each other) faithful and earnest evangelists, battling against almost overwhelming difficulties, who would gladly avail themselves of help such as sympathetic visitors could render. France is very near to English shores. Why, then, should her millions of Romanists be sadly forgotten?

After nearly ten years of labour, a small congregation has been formed at Brive, and in Tulle, and in Aurillac where the Société Evangélique de France has lately placed another evangelist. Our difficulty in Brive relates to our place of worship. We have a room, but it is over a pork butcher's shop. Above our heads there is noise, and from below come horrid smells, while there is dirt everywhere. It certainly requires more than ordinary courage to come to one of our services. With money collected for the most part among ourselves, we have bought an eligible plot of ground for building. Towards this I have received several magnificent gifts. One old carpenter, who spends about 8d. a day on his living, has given £34. The cost of the building is estimated at £480.

Within a radius of two miles, there is not a single place of worship or Christian worker to be found. Towards the east and south-east, I can go about 120 miles from Brive without finding a fellow worker, or another building. So we are not overcrowded with places of worship.

THE BIBLE IN JAPAN.—Mrs. A. E. Robertson, Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W., hon. secretary of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, writes:—The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures has received an urgent appeal from Japan for £1000 worth of New Testaments, to be given away at the exhibition which is to take place this year at Tokyo. The doors of this most interesting country are open to the Gospel, and we cannot refuse to take advantage of every opportunity for supplying it with the Word of God. Will your readers help us to raise the sum needed? They have helped us before, and we trust in the Giver of all good things to move many hearts among them to spread in Japan the saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXIV.—THE MOTIVE OF OUR LIVES.

1 PETER iv. 11.

BEFORE passing on to consider the fiery trial which is to try us, it seems wise to stay very briefly to consider the master motive which should inspire our lives, namely, that God in all things may be glorified.

This was the motive which actuated our blessed Lord.—When He took upon Himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men, He set before Him, as the ideal and purpose of his life, to make God his Father more glorious. He speaks of Himself as seeking not his own glory, but the glory of Him that sent Him (John vii. 18). On the review of his life from the vantage ground of death He rejoiced that He had glorified his Father on the earth, and had finished the work given Him to do (John xvii. 1). He asked for glory only as the condition of glorifying his Father the more (2). And He promised to answer prayer, with the avowed intention that God the Father should be glorified in the Son (John xiv. 13).

We learn from the Lord's own words that the Spirit would glorify Himself, after He had passed away to the Father; and what the Spirit does for the Son, through the ages, that the Son also does, and did, for the Father. So that from the perpetual ministry of the Spirit we may form some conception of the ministry of the Son, during his earthly life, and throughout that blessed life which He is spending within the vail, intense, earnest, and blessed; and which is inspired by the same passion for his Father's glory as animated Him in the days of his flesh (John xvi. 14).

But what is glory, and how can God be glorified? Glory is the manifestation of the hidden attributes of the ever-blessed God. He dwells in light which is so transcendent in its burning purity that no mortal eye could bear the blaze which enwraps his Being. And if unknown He would be for ever unappreciated and unloved. How could men or angels worship an inaccessible and unknown God? But Jesus Christ, who has dwelt for ever in the bosom of the Father, has declared Him, has brought out his attributes from their eternal obscurity, and has displayed them. He has been the organ through which the Divine nature has manifested itself, and as it has been manifested, God has been known and loved and adored by countless myriads, who have seen his glory in the face of Jesus Christ, and have fallen down in ecstasies of devotion, ascribing glory to Him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb.

The prism, which shows the exquisite tints that hide in sunbeams, glorifies the sun and its Maker. The artist who reads nature's secrets, and catches bewitching smiles which are only seen by her lovers, glorifies Him who lives behind all nature. The student who shows some unsuspected beauty in our favourite author, adds to that author's glory in our esteem. So, though in an infinitely superior sense, as the Son has been the medium through which the Father has shone forth, and has attracted the admiration and homage of all intelligent creatures, we may rightly say that in Him He has been glorified.

This was so in creation, when the creative qualities of the Almighty passed through the Son into efflorescent beauty. It has been so in providence, wherein the sustaining grace of God has been revealing itself through successive ages of activity. It was especially so in the life and words and death of the Redeemer. These were windows into the heart of God. Never had He been known unless in contact with human sin. His Being had broken into the prismatic band of colour which makes the Gospels the priceless possession of mankind. And possibly in those events which are yet to transpire, we shall see how the Lord Jesus will contrive at every turn to bring into ever clearer prominence attributes of the Divine Being, of which we know little or nothing, or which only glimmer on our sight, like some distant star, on the very confines of creation.

This was equally the motive of the Apostles.—Not for emolument, or human praise; not for power or love of place; not for the souls of men only; but for the glory of God did they reckon not their lives dear, but endured hardships and persecution even to martyrdom itself. They yearned to show men how good and glorious He was; or to open the cavern of some heart to receive into its depths his light, that so the extent of his empire might be increased by one more being brought from darkness into light, and from the power of Satan unto God.

And this should be our motive.—(1) It would never disappoint.—If we work for any lower motive, we are always liable to disappointment. Either the desire of our hearts is not realised, or, when we have attained it, we are oppressed with a vague sense of dissatisfaction and depression. But here is a motive which can never mislead us. It is always in front of us. It is an ever fresh inspiration, ennobling, and inspiring, and elevating. When we have done our best, it is still in front of us, beckoning us to loftier ascents, to more strenuous endeavours. And the impression produced on us is one of adoration and devotion, which make all our life and work a means of grace.

If we are sensible of working from a wrong or inferior motive, let us bring our being to God, and tell Him that we desire and will nothing so eagerly as to live and work from this loftiest of motives. Ask Him to create the clean heart, and to renew the right spirit. Expect that by his Spirit He will replace the worse by the better, till your soul is on fire for the glory of God.

Many need this word. They are working for the salvation of others, to increase their congregation, to stop the ravages of sin, or to alleviate the distress of those immediately dependent on some sad case of dissolute and shameful behaviour. We cannot wonder at these motives; but they are not the best, and their presence will go far to explain the failure under which many devoted workers groan. Whether you work for God, or pray for the coming of the Spirit, or engage in philanthropic enterprise, be sure to do all for the glory of God.

(2) It will dignify all life.—We make distinctions which do not hold beyond the low ceiling of this world. We speak of some things as sacred, and others as secular; of great and little; of religious and the reverse. We judge things by their appearances and the space they take among men. We forget that with God the difference is entirely one of motives. A sacred motive makes everything sacred; a secular one drags down the most holy office to its own godless level. Little things become great when wrought from a great motive of love and consecration; but a mean motive will make the gift of a millionaire shrink into a nutshell as small as itself. A religious man will tie everything with a double knot of faith and prayer to God; an irreligious man makes the table of the Lord to become a table of demons.

Men often chafe at being confined to the secularities of daily life, and long to be set free to follow the work of the minister or missionary. If any such read these lines, let them ask their hearts if they are entirely yielded up to the Lord Jesus. If so, let them understand that He has put them where they are for a specific purpose. And then let them fill that position for Him and in his strength, so that many a gleam of his loveliness may be emitted through their behaviour; and men may think better of Him for their sake. "To me to live is Christ;" that Christ may be magnified. Whatever be our daily occupation, we should engage in it for the same high motive which should animate the chosen Apostle, or the burning seraph; inscribing on the threshold of each new day, "Glory to God in the highest." "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31).

But, after all, let it never be forgotten that no motive, however pure and lofty, can make our service perfectly acceptable to God. No glory can accrue to Him save through the merit of the Lord Jesus. And, therefore, the Apostle takes care to add, "glorified through Jesus Christ." There is only one way to God, and our incense must be scattered on coals taken from the true altar, or it can never rise up acceptable and pleasing to Him.

Oh, to be animated with absorbing desires for the glory of God. For this to live, and, if need be, die. For this to do the tiniest acts of self-sacrifice and service; and to forget hardship and difficulty in the all-absorbing passion! Let this be our life-motive. Not content to wait for distant ages, let us now ascribe to Him "Praise and Dominion." Let our lips be full of his praise, and our lives obey his dominion, and let there arise from each moment of our poor lives the glad, and heartfelt, and devout Amen.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—Last Thursday a goodly number of seamen were entertained to tea at this Society's rooms in the Ratcliff-highway, after which there was a praise and prayer-meeting, conducted by Rev. G. J. Hill, in the adjoining Seamen's Chapel, and this was followed by an evangelistic service, at which Mr. and Mrs. Maynard, of Wimbledon, gave stirring and faithful Gospel addresses. Thirteen sailors signed the pledge at the close, and nearly an hour was spent by the workers with seamen whose hearts the Lord had touched during the service.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION, KING'S CROSS.—Mr. John Dupee, superintendent of this excellent work, in the seventeenth annual report, tells of very cheering progress. Gospel temperance is a great power among the cabmen; there are above 5,000 pledged men in the ranks, many of them earnest and able advocates of the cause. The Sabbath services in the mission-hall are well attended, and the agencies for the young duly appreciated by many of the parents. The Home of Rest, Ventnor, opened last year, has been a great boon to many cabmen and their wives and children. It would have been impossible for these to have availed themselves of such advantages unassisted, and it is gratifying to read that with one exception, the invalids were restored to health, and enabled to continue work. Mr. Dupee's address is 165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.

Some Scottish Missions.—XVII.

THERE seems a healthy rivalry between Edinburgh and Glasgow mission workers, in which one cannot but rejoice. In the former, a worker assured me that there was "no mission work anywhere in Scotland to compare with that in Edinburgh, for activity and variety;" the work in Glasgow was "nothing to it!" On visiting the latter, I was told that the work done in that city was unequalled in any other city of the world! It reminded one of the respective claims of two journals, the one to have the "largest circulation in the world!" the other to have a "larger circulation than any other paper."

My object, however, is not to draw comparisons, but rather to applaud the two Scotch cities in their endeavour to outstrip each other.

My notes have been chiefly confined to work of an undenominational character. But one of its most pleasing features is that, although lying outside the churches, it is almost entirely supported by, and carried on in conjunction with, them. As a result, their membership is increased, and the converts receive the spiritual help that is so necessary for their growth in grace.

Not only has this been the case in regard to the United Evangelistic Association in Glasgow, which has recently occupied our attention, but also with the

which has for its object "the Religious, Educational, and Social elevation of the boys and girls of the city and suburbs."

This Society has been in existence for twenty-four years, and most beneficent have been the results of its work. Its work is divided into four chief departments—religious, educational, social reform, provident; and from Sabbath to Saturday all the year round suitable agencies are actively at work with a view to exercising one continuous influence for God and for society.

One feature is especially noticeable in the work of this Society and the Evangelistic Association—viz., the thoroughly systematic manner in which all arrangements are made and carried out. Sub-committees and officers are impressed into the service to such an extent that there is no room for the slightest hitch, or, if any does occur, it is speedily traced to its source and remedied.

There are no less than seventeen localities in Glasgow where this work is carried on, each managing its own affairs, subject to the supervision of a general council. It can readily be understood what a powerful influence for good is thus exercised upon the city. The principal agency is the which may be termed the heart and soul of the whole movement, aiming as it does at the definite conversion of the young, and their ingathering into the Church of God. There are about ninety such meetings held simultaneously in various parts of the city; and all, with perhaps half a dozen exceptions, in direct co-operation with the churches of the city, of which over sixty, representing various denominations, extend their fellowship and sympathy to this good work. This is sufficient evidence that the ministers do not regard it as an encroachment upon their sphere of labour, nor is any objection raised to these gatherings being held during ordinary hours of Divine service.

Statistics show that about 22,000 children are on the roll, of whom, on an average, some 15,000 attend each Sabbath morning. The meeting-places vary considerably in size, accommodating from 100 to 800 children.

When a district is decided upon, a systematic visitation takes place, every street and tenement being searched, and the number of resident families ascertained. These are then apportioned to the several workers that visit, and they invite the boys and girls who do not attend the house of God to come to the hall the following Sabbath. The names and addresses are taken of those who promise to come, and that will be a clever child who manages to break his promise more than once, or to eventually escape the visitor's watchful interest.

I was only able to attend one meeting—that held in the City Hall. This is a fine spacious building, with commodious platform and galleries. Immediately in front of the speaker are the juveniles—boys to the right, girls to the left. At the further end, the elder lads and youths are seated, while the elder girls occupy the gallery.

Each pew is under the charge of a monitor, who has from ten to twenty upon whom to exercise his or her unceasing vigilance. At first this is no mean task, but, as acquaintance ripens, the children become docile and attentive, and I am bound to say that, within the scope of my observation, the monitors might be justly proud of the results they had achieved.

The meeting lasts an hour and a half, and in this, as in every other department, the strictest adherence to system is maintained. As it is assembling, the "leader of praise" and his choir occupy a quarter of an hour with song. Sharp at eleven the chairman opens with prayer, and in the hour and a quarter that follows six hymns are sung, which occupy about twenty-five minutes in all, interspersed with other prayer, general intimations, missionary intelligence and collection, the Lord's prayer, repetition of memory text, Scripture reading and exposition, and speaker's address. The two last are each of fifteen minutes' duration. It will be seen that the time is well filled up and devoted to the best of use.

I have mentioned missionary intelligence—and these children, who were bidding fair to grow up "home heathen" before this Society got hold of them, are active supporters of foreign missions. Listen to the following, culled from a leaflet placed in every child's hand, which enumerates the

in which they have an interest:—

(1) ITALY, where we help the Bible School in Rome.

(2) ALGIERS, where we help Mr. Lamb, missionary, formerly a monitor in Rae-street Branch.

(3) OLD CALABAR, where we help Miss M'Phun, missionary, formerly connected with Matheson-street Branch.

(4) CONGO, where we help the Baptist Mission.

(5) MADAGASCAR, where we have six cottages for the students, and where we help several schools.

(6) ZULULAND, where we help Mr. Moodie, missionary, formerly a monitor in Gordon Hall Branch.

(7) BLANTYRE, where we pay a Christian African teacher.

(8) LIVINGSTONIA, where Dr. Black, formerly one of our chairmen, died at his missionary labours; and where we pay a Christian African teacher.

(9) CEYLON, where we help the training of native teachers for India.

(10) WARDHA, where Dr. Revie, formerly monitor in Blackfriars Branch, is medical missionary.

(11) RAJPUTANA, where Miss K. Miller is a zenana missionary, formerly monitor in Springbank Branch. Here we have two printing presses called "Young Glasgow No. 1," and "Young Glasgow No. 2."

(12) SWATOW, where we help to provide large type books for Mrs. Gibson, the missionary's wife, formerly monitor in Springbank Branch.

(13) HANGCHAW, where Dr. Main, formerly a monitor in Springbank Branch, is medical missionary. We support two beds in his hospital.

(14) MOCKDEN, where Dr. Christie, formerly a monitor in Springbank Branch, is medical missionary. We support two beds in his hospital.

(15) TANNA, farthest away from Scotland, a little island like Arran, the scene of Mr. and Mrs. Watt's missionary labours these twenty years past. Here we have a printing press, and here also we support several Christian native teachers. Mr. and Mrs. Watt held their farewell meeting in our Port Eglinton Hall twenty years ago, and we have ever since sent something every year to Tanna.

Thus the work among home and foreign heathen is reciprocally blessed to both.

I do not here touch upon the other branches of the Society's endeavours—the educational, the social reform (including temperance), and the provident departments; but all these are made to dovetail in to each other's advantage, and for the ultimate good of every child. For instance, the "religious department" stimulates generosity, and the "provident department" creates and fosters habits of carefulness and forethought. The "educational" improves the mind, and fits them for the stern realities of life; while the "social reform" work teaches them how to indulge in rational and healthful enjoyment.

Any desirous of a further knowledge of the work should obtain the report of the Society. So many great and noble names appear therein that it were invidious to select any from them, except, for practical purposes, that of the treasurer, Mr. Wm. Martin, 40, Sardinia-terrace, Hillhead.

Glasgow is indeed a happy city to have its spiritual wants so well provided for. Sad it is to know that so much yet remains to be done.

Sketches from Life.

THE PEARL-FINDER.

I WAS visiting a pretty little watering-place in Wales, and it was there I met the pearl-finder who is the subject of this little sketch. He was a tall, dark-complexioned man, not very "promising" in appearance. By way of beginning a conversation that might lead to an opening for a word for the Master, I referred to his foreign appearance, and found he was an American. He spoke with pardonable enthusiasm of his go-ahead nation, giving me instances of their superiority in this respect, and then began telling me something of his history.

As a boy he had a passion for roving, and, after serving in the Civil War, he set forth on his wanderings. From California he proceeded to Japan where he remained several years, and ultimately took passage for England. He married, and then settled down in a small inland town in Wales.

I had become so interested that for the moment the purpose of my speaking to him was forgotten.

"A great change for you," I remarked, "after such a roving, adventurous life."

"Yes, indeed," he replied, "my friends used to write and say they could not think how I could go and bury myself alive in that way. I told them I had found one thing in L—— that I had found nowhere else in the world besides.'

"What was that?" I wonderingly asked.

"JESUS."

He had found in truth the Pearl of Great Price. My surprise equalled my joy. As soon as I could speak I told him how glad I was to hear such welcome words, for Jesus was to me also "the chief among ten thousand," and the brotherhood of all who love his name is a bright reality.

He went on to give me some account of his conversion, through attending an open-air service. He had been constrained, he said, after holding out as long as he could, to yield himself a prisoner to the Prince of Peace, and "own Him conqueror." Since then God had answered his prayers, and saved many of his family. "On Sabbath evening when we all meet to pray together, it is like a little heaven below. I do thank God, He not only saved me, but opened my mouth, that I might boldly tell others of what He has done for me."

May we also, dear readers, so realise that we have been saved to witness for Jesus, that by the power of the Spirit of God our hearts may be kindled with a burning enthusiasm, leading us to exclaim with the Apostles of old, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

H.

Literal and Spiritual.

WE have no doubt that our readers were deeply interested in our report last week of the opening of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute at Chicago. His own introductory exposition of his aims and methods was most instructive, and so was a great deal that was said by all the speakers. With deference to Professor H. McDonald Scott, however, we must take exception to the following remarks :—

> There are a number of theories that we must avoid in our Bible Institute. One is the allegorical method. People attempting to find a hidden meaning running all through the Bible. Another is the spiritualistic method. I have heard good brethren who seemed to think the more they can get out of a passage the more they have done for the glory of God. Sometimes a man will take the Tabernacle, and preach a whole theory of religion out of the Tabernacle; they put these things into the Word of God in order to make it fit their theories. There is only one way to explain the Bible, and that is to explain it historically and grammatically. We must find out just what a word meant then and there; if we try to give it a particular turn this way or that, we dishonour the Spirit of God. The Lord could not give his meaning in any other way except through language, just as it was when those different men wrote. Therefore, we should emphasise that in our Bible Institute, and we should emphasise it by explaining the Bible reproductively, not glossatorically, if I might use a big word. In other words, we should explain the Bible by finding out the meaning of it, and then reproduce it, and not skim along, one verse after another, merely making a remark about it.

It is no doubt possible to allegorise and spiritualise in a way foreign to the true meaning of the inspired Word; and Scripture is thus distorted by false teachers both in America and here. But the Apostle assures us (Gal. iv. 23-31) that some of the incidents in Abraham's life were an allegory; and the doctrinal teaching of the Epistle to the Hebrews is based upon the fact that the whole theory of religion was foreshadowed in the Tabernacle and its worship.

When we have considered the story of David historically and grammatically, we find that in the Acts of the Apostles the Holy Spirit abundantly shows that David was a type of great David's Greater Son. Is it possible to suppose that Ps. xxii. can be exhausted historically and grammatically, while the evangelist records that its first verse was the cry of the Redeemer on the Cross?

It is not true that the exposition of Scripture must be confined to what its words meant then and there. The passover lamb of Exod. xii. is shown in 1 Cor. v. 7 to be a type of Christ our Passover, who was sacrificed for us. What meaning would there have been in John the Baptist's "Behold the Lamb of God!" if the records of the sacrificial lamb, from that of Abel to the last passover which Jesus and his disciples ate together on the night He was betrayed, signified no more than the words, historically and grammatically explained, meant then and there?

It is, indeed, essential to fix the historical and grammatical meaning of the words of Scripture, and to find out just what they meant then and there, because only thus can we understand the first and literal sense, and because the spiritual sense always has to the literal the same relation that water has to the vessel that contains it. The attempt to spiritualise, without the literal definitely ascertained, is like attempting to gather up water which has been spilt upon the sand. But to say that the Tabernacle meant nothing more than it was, is to mistake the whole method of education in the school of God.

If it had not been restricted by the previous sentences, we should endorse without qualification the last remark in the above quotation, that "we should explain the Bible by finding out the meaning of it, and then reproduce it; and not skim along one verse after another, merely making a remark about it." Students of Scripture who perceive that the Tabernacle with its worship was an object-lesson, teaching the whole theory of man's approach to God, are eminently those who fulfil the Professor's canon.

The Future of China.

IN a recent issue of the Boston Congregationalist, there is an interesting article on this subject by Rev. Henry Kingman, of Tientsin. It was written several months ago, when China seemed on the very eve of a great national departure, in the speedy and extensive introduction of the railway system. Since then various difficulties have arisen, and it is evident that much dead-weight of interested officialdom will have to be got out of the way before the modern facilities of travel are made available among the Chinese. The conclusions of the writer, however, are interesting as throwing light on the Chinese character. Mr. Kingman says :—

What is the outlook for the speedy development of China? How are her immense resources to be opened up and made to place her, as they should, in the rank of the most powerful and wealthy nations? The question is one whose answer becomes more difficult as the time approaches when an answer should be given. To many foreigners longest resident in China, and best informed in its affairs, the problem seems insoluble—at least for an indefinite period in the future. As far as foreign capital and foreign supervision can carry the nation, she will go; much further than this, progress is impossible.

It has been true till now that a blind conservatism, combined with a hatred of all things foreign, has held China stationary as in a vice; that time is fast passing. When this barrier is fairly down so that one may see beyond it, there still remains the second, as strong as ever in the nation's history—say, rather, rapacity, of the Chinese officials. Years ago it was evident that the entrance of foreign ideas must, sooner or later, break down the spirit of conservatism; but foreign ideas, and foreign science as well, leave the second obstacle untouched. And yet it operates to hinder effectually internal development of any kind by rendering all but impossible the use of native capital in the carrying out of extended private enterprise. No Chinaman, speaking generally, will trust his money in an enterprise that is to be under the management of his own countrymen—unless he is to be in the management—for he knows to a certainty that every official connected with the undertaking will regard it as a means of filling his own pocket at the expense of others. If foreigners will furnish the capital, very well; or if foreigners will be responsible for the management of its funds, well also; or if the Government will negotiate a foreign loan, as in the case of the Tientsin Railway. But from knowledge of himself, not less than from experience with his fellow-Chinamen, he is not so foolish as to trust his taels in Chinese hands. From the Viceroy down to the coolie who does your gardening, every Chinaman considers "squeezing" a legitimate and wholly justifiable means of increasing his revenue.

To any one unfamiliar with the state of Chinese society, this may seem a harsh judgment upon its character, especially in view of the comments that occasionally appear upon the scrupulous honesty of foreign-dealing Chinese firms as compared with "Christian" firms at home. For certain reasons it is true that of many large firms it may be said that their word is as good as their bond. Yet the harsher judgment is one in which candid Chinamen themselves are the first to concur, and the condition of society in this regard is one whose evils every enlightened man will heartily deplore. They speak of it freely as the curse of the country, and as the chief drawback to its prosperity; and yet, in most cases, while the said enlightened Chinamen talks with you, he knows, and he knows that you know, that, were he in a position of authority tomorrow, he would not hesitate to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor.

The entire civil service of the country is based upon that more often are extortions. From the governor of the province to the pettiest hanger-on upon his retinue, all alike are expected to live not upon their salary—which is a pittance, if anything—but upon perquisites. Men like the attachés of the criminal courts wring their money literally out of the blood and torture of their victims, a process which is notorious in every city, and which makes the local yamens what they are popularly called—hells. Others, gentlemen of high station, like the taotais of the ports, secure their fortunes by more amiable means, but in some cases to the extent of hundreds of thousands of gold dollars yearly.

One naturally asks, Are there no public-spirited and patriotic men who feel these evils keenly enough to make a stand against them for their country's sake, and so create a growing sentiment against them? The answer of those most competent to speak is a scarcely qualified No. The best example of such a man—the man of all China most public-spirited, most far-seeing and progressive, most active in every scheme for his country's development, who has done more for the real good of the empire than any other man of this century—is the Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, the governor of the province of Chihli. And how was his vast wealth acquired? It was made out of the ruin of tens of thousands of homes at the time when he was leading the government army against the Tai Ping rebellion. And out of these the imperial general made his millions. When such men are leaders, it is easy to judge of the character of their subordinates.

It needs little reflection to see that no country can be developed by its government without the co-operation of the thousand and one forms of private enterprise. At present no wealthy merchant will put even his own property into a single shop if he be a storekeeper, because any conspicuously large or prosperous business house is sure to be plundered by the officials under the pretence of a special tax. No merchant in the interior can send his goods to the coast, except under the protection of a foreign name, without having to suffer petty extortions at a dozen different stages of the journey. And thus even the growth of trade is effectually checked.

What hope there is for the welfare of a nation thus circumstanced it is difficult to see. All intelligent observers are agreed that dishonesty and avarice will be a bar to China's progress long after the old conservatism has been forgotten; but whence help may be expected is a question on which there is not agreement. Christianity? The day is yet distant when the official classes will be affected even faintly by its advances; to any but the eye of faith the distance is infinite. And yet in spite of this, although the hope be distant, the material prosperity of China is bound up in her hope of having for her people a better Light than any of the lights of Asia. And no power save the power of God can unlock the treasures that a gross selfishness has kept for centuries closely sealed.

TEACHERS' BRANCH, Y.W.C.A. — Although one of the last started, this Branch of the Y.W.C.A. is not the least in importance. It is hoped that, through its means, the Association will reach a large number of young girls leaving school. Young teachers themselves will be glad to make use of the practical benefits of the Association, such as town boarding-houses, seaside holiday homes, and evening classes. Miss J. Bewes, the honorary secretary of the Branch, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W., will be glad to give further information. Arrangements have been made for two lectures on "Coins," illustrative of Scripture and Church history, to be given at Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, on Thursdays, March 6 and 13.

THE interest in the mission being conducted in this city by Dr. Pentecost is unabated. While there has been no very great stir or excitement from the beginning, there is even less outward show of it as the mission draws to its close. But of deepening interest and intense earnestness there are many indications. A gentleman who knows Greenock well, and who sits nearly every evening in a seat which commands the whole congregation, told me that, from first to last, the greater part of Greenock were passing through the audience, with the exception of those called the "very highest" class and the "very lowest."

It is agreed on all hands that there has not been so general and thorough a stirring of the religious life in Greenock for many years. The large daily and nightly gatherings of people to hear the Gospel is refreshing to the saints, and surprising to the sceptics, who have been wont to say that Christianity "is a worn-out superstition," which has no place in the hearts and minds of people except on Sunday, and that only because of the social habits and lingering superstition of the people.

It is most delightful to stand at the doors of the Free Middle Church, either before or after the evening meeting, and see the happy faces of Christian workers as they greet each other, and tell of new cases that have come under their observation during the day or night.

The thanksgivings of many are most abundant for strengthened faith and hope built upon the only sure foundation. One minister said the other night that he had "never heard sin so awfully depicted, and the salvation of God so gloriously portrayed."

It is difficult to group the special lines of blessing along which grace has been running, there are so many; but I will endeavour by a few incidents, not in detail, but generally stated, to indicate what is going on. First, the mission has produced a striking effect upon our own ministers. One of them said to the Doctor the other night, standing in a group of ministers and laymen: "This mission has been a great blessing to me personally. My own soul has been refreshed and built up, and I feel that I can preach better than before. Certainly I have got a new conviction of the necessity of direct evangelistic address, and a demonstration that it is possible to win souls to Christ by such preaching."

Another minister, one of our most eminent and conservative men, said to his congregation on the Sabbath that he thanked God for what was going on, and that he felt he had been remiss himself in not being in his own ministry. He then invited any of his congregation who might desire to see and converse with him on the subject of personal religion to call upon him at the close of any service, or at his house at any time. Another minister somewhat startled his congregation by a very pointed appeal from the text, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Not a new truth, but put with such startlingly new and direct emphasis that it caused his congregation to prick up their ears.

One night a Christian lady got such a blessing during the sermon, that upon returning to her home, though it was after ten o'clock, she called her servants to her room, and there told them of the blessing she had received, beseeching them to accept the Saviour. She then kneeled down, and prayed with and for them. One of the servants, at least, confessed Christ on the spot. I heard of a similar incident, in which a father called his family together, and dealt with them about their souls; and one of his sons was led to accept and confess Jesus as his Saviour there and then.

There have been a number of remarkable conversions reported as having taken place on the street, during conversation between some Christian worker and an accompanying friend, on their way home from the meetings. Not a few cases have occurred—indeed, almost nightly occur—after the meeting is over, and while a few persons are still lingering about the vestibule, or in the lobbies of the church.

In more than one family all the unconverted members have been brought in. One, the last of four brothers, came forward, and surrendered to Jesus. For three nights in succession a father had the joy of welcoming a son into the kingdom. And so the good work goes on. Every night the front seat is filled, and sometimes crowded and overflowing, with those who come forward to make an open confession of faith. Once as many as twenty young men came forward—fine fellows, who will make their mark for God and Christ as the years go by.

At the suggestion of Dr. Pentecost, a visitation by Christian ladies and gentlemen has been inaugurated, by which all the converts have been or are being visited at their homes or places of business, to extend to them the hand of Christian fellowship and give them a word of encouragement. Many of the workers return as happy from their work as the seventy disciples did from their visitation. They report the work as being most blessed and as having received blessing to their own souls while thus watering others.

Dr. Pentecost's method of keeping record of converts and inquirers is very helpful. In addition to taking the names and addresses of all the converts, together with their church affiliation, a duplicate covenant is given to them; one of which they are requested to sign and fix in their Bibles, as a reminder to them of the solemn act of faith by which they become children of God, the covenant setting forth the terms of their salvation by the grace of God and their own voluntary choice of Christ and surrender to Him. The other copy they are requested to sign and hand to their own minister or post it to him. This puts them by their own act into direct communication with their minister and challenges his pastoral care at once. Of course, all cases are reported to the ministers by the secretary of the committee, besides. Thus the young convert is surrounded by lines of care which ought to insure to him the proper oversight and nurture to develop a healthy and vigorous Christian life.

THE CLOSING DAYS.

Unfortunately Dr. Pentecost was taken with a sharp illness, which laid him aside for three days and nights during this last week; but the Spirit of God did not cease working, and when he returned to the pulpit on Wednesday night, he was greeted with a larger audience than ever, and the Spirit of God was poured out upon the people during the closing nights, and many more souls pressed into the kingdom.

To use the language of one of the leading ministers of the city: "It has been the most satisfactory mission ever held among us; one in which the ministry and laity were equally interested." In fact, there never has been a mission in the city so well supported and so generally approved by the ministry as this one. It has tended strongly to draw together the more aggressive and the more conservative elements of the Church, which is a great thing.

Hundreds of souls have been converted to God, and apparently soundly converted. More hundreds of Christians have been helped into new life. The churches throughout the city have been revived and refreshed, and a general forward impulse given to all religious work. Christ has been lifted up so that in some way or other the whole town has been stirred either to more thoughtful interest, or to more bitter opposition to Jesus. For now as ever, even when He was on the earth, "there was (is) a division among the people because of Him."

Dr. Pentecost himself says this is one of the best missions he has held in Scotland, and is very happy over the results. Not a word or thing has been said or done by anyone connected with the work to mar the perfect harmony that has been maintained; or, rather, that has obtained throughout the whole work. The unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace has been conspicuous, and the "love of God has been poured out into all our hearts by the Holy Spirit." It is the Lord's work, and we magnify and praise his name.

It was most touching at the close of the last night's meeting to see the young converts, old men and women, young men and maidens, fathers and mothers, crowding about our brother to say "God bless you." Here a father would say, "Thank God for the conversion of my two boys." Here a mother, "I praise God for saving a son and daughter." Another, "Oh, I am so thankful for the conversion of my husband"; and so on, till the whole front part of the church was luminous with happy faces and vocal with the hardly suppressed notes of praise, and even now and again in this staid Scotch church there would burst out a "Hallelujah!"

To God be the glory,
Great things He hath done.

SILENT PREACHERS.

THE Society for Distributing Scripture Truth, at Eastbourne, which has now entered upon its fourth decade, sends us its last report, with some particulars of recent operations. Two places widely dissimilar—the Old Bailey and the South Metropolitan Gasworks—are, by permission of the City Lands Committee and Mr. George Livesey, respectively, to have their walls furnished with the well-known hanging rolls of texts, which are to be met with in almost every railway waiting-room throughout the land.

Large grants of the same in the Italian language, are being sent to Umbria, Bordighera, and other parts of Italy, so as to help on the noble reform which is already breathing new life into Christ's Church in that priest-ridden country.

We regret to learn, however, that, in the full maturity of its years, in the midst of increased demands, and ever-widening field of action, the income of this Society has fallen off so seriously as to cause anxiety to the Committee of Management. Year by year, it seems, since the death of Mr. William Woodhouse in 1884, the amount of subscriptions has been steadily diminishing. As already stated in these columns, Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, his son, was obliged to resign his post a few months ago by reason of failing eye-sight and bad health. Mr. P. B. Maxwell now acts as secretary.

REV. JOHN WILKINSON, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, is collecting hymns relating to the Jews and the second advent of our Lord, with a view to compiling a hymn book for use at Jewish meetings. Knowing that many of our readers may be able to help him, he writes: "I shall be grateful to receive good hymns suitable for such a collection, whether original or otherwise." Mr. Wilkinson's address is, 79, Mildmay-road, N.

A GERMAN HOME.—The third annual meeting of the Christian Home for German artisans was recently held at the rooms, 90, Leman-street, E. Many friends were present. Dr. Ziemann, Herr Werner, and other German and English gentlemen gave short addresses. The secretary of the Home reported that during the last three years there had been a steady and marked increase in the usefulness of the Home. There is a house of call, through which agency 779 vacancies were filled by men staying at the Home. The committee are anxious to enlarge the Home. Every night evangelistic services are also held in the house, and these have been the means of reclaiming many young men. Further particulars of the work may be obtained by applying to the manager of the Home, Mr. L. Triebel, 90, Leman-street, E.

YOUNG ENGLISHMEN IN S. AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—During the three years of my ministry in Africa it has been my lot to labour largely among men, and especially young men. This has been pre-eminently the case since I came to Kimberley. In this remote border town there is a great preponderance of young men, and it has been my pleasure to come in contact with them to a very large extent. Knowing that there are so many young people here who have really no home, I invite them from the pulpit to come to my house as often as they like, but every Friday evening especially. Our house is often quite full of young persons, many of whom are the sons and daughters of English parents. By this means I often learn much about the antecedents of these young friends, and the present character of their lives. I assure you it is very comforting to me to hear them revealing their inner life and their former training. I often think that were some of the mothers of England to hear what it is my pleasure to hear week after week, they would "thank God and take courage." Never have I had a greater exemplification of the influence of mothers than I have had since I came out here.

Living in the very fringe of the darkest and most cruel heathenism perhaps in the whole world, piety and character are put to a very severe test. There are not only the chilling influences of heathenism and semi-barbarism to contend against, but there are the allurements of a gay and rich community who indulge in a life of fascinating attractions of a Parisian character. Nevertheless, I often meet with young people who have had a good religious training—who have come out here from the sheltered home of a father's love, and the companionship of a mother's purity, who have proved invulnerable to all surrounding influences of a baneful character. One of these young people said to me last week, "I have often had an opportunity of getting very much money if I would come out as a public singer"—he has a very excellent voice and a superior knowledge of music—"but I could not consent to do that; for I think, what would my pious parents think of it?" He continued, "I had the offer of a very lucrative position as manager of what was called a respectable hotel, but I declined the offer, for I should feel as if my father were watching me." This young man was with me in church last Sunday night, and rendered valuable assistance.

Another man spent the afternoon with me a little while ago—a man in a good position in one of the stores in this town. It was to me of thrilling interest to hear him speak of his mother, and how the memory of his mother was often a deterrent to him from indulging in the fascinations of worldly pleasure, by which he is constantly surrounded. The precepts and example of that mother had, like meals of food long since eaten, gone into the blood and bone and muscle of his moral character and spiritual life, and given stamina and true manliness to his being. Big tears rolled down his manly face as he spoke in tender tones of the sweet, and gentle, and devout life of his mother, who is still living in Yorkshire.

A young man in business for himself, and doing very well, spent two hours with me after the service one Sunday evening, and delighted and refreshed my soul greatly by repeating to me sentences from the letters of his widowed mother. This young man is a hard-working, intelligent Christian, and is instrumental of much good. He generally has in his pocket a number of letters from his good mother, which he reads and re-reads, and seems to get inspiration therefrom. The influence of that mother, who can tell? This young man is a teacher of young men, and those young men will very probably go by and by further up into the country, and take with them the Saviour of mankind and the Gospel of his grace.

Who can estimate the influence of home life? I could give you many more instances of the good effects of the home training of religious families, and not a few instances in which the home training has resulted in conversion while these sons and daughters are more than seven thousand miles away from their parents.

May God richly bless the homes of England, and greatly encourage all Christian parents to pray for and plead with their children.

Very truly yours,
JAMES HUGHES, Baptist Minister.
Kimberley, South Africa.

NEARNESS TO GOD.

The writing of the following lines was suggested by an illustrated copy of stanzas 1-4 of the well-known hymn of five stanzas beginning "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and composed by Sarah Flower Adams, who was born in Cambridge in 1805, and died in 1848. It is the seventh of the hundred selected hymns recently published by the Religious Tract Society, "Rock of Ages" being the first, and "Abide with Me" the second. The three are mentioned together in the following lines by Julia Kirchhoffer, expressing a wish that, in her illness, Frances R. Havergal would come and sing to her—

"I want 'The Old, Old Story,'
How Jesus set us free;
Or the riven, 'Rock of Ages,'
Or else 'Abide with Me,'
Or what we used to sing at night,
'Nearer, my God, to Thee.'"

Psalm cxlviii. 14: "He exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints, even of the children of Israel, a people near unto Him."

Ephesians ii. 13: "Now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh in the blood of Christ.'

FAR off, O God, from Thee,
In sin I stood;
But near Thou madest me
In Jesus' Blood:
Still nearer would I be,
God of my life, to Thee,
In zeal, truth, purity,
And doing good.

Thy Holy Spirit free
Hath met my case,
And access given to me
Into thy grace.
Now thus in love brought nigh,
I "Abba, Father," cry,
Expecting by and by
To see thy face.

My Father! I am thine,
To live or die;
And Thou, O Christ, art mine,
To glorify—
My righteous Advocate,
For whom I longing wait,
Till, made immaculate,
I reign on high.

O Spirit of the Lord!
Within me dwell;
To me, armed with thy sword,
God's deep things tell:
My only Advocate!
Teach me, seal, stimulate,
That I, whate'er my state,
May please Thee well.

This nearness, Lord, how sweet,
I would declare—
That Thee thy child should meet
In praise and prayer;
Oft at the throne of grace,
The Christian's wrestling place,
And there, with open face,
Thy image bear.

Yet nearer I would be—
Would brighter shine:
I would be more like Thee,
In things divine—
In grace would daily grow,
And Christ more fully know,
Till me, more white than snow,
Thou take as thine.

Great Shepherd of the sheep!
Raised from the dead,
Me brave and humble keep,
Through thy blood shed:
Train me, while here I stay,
'Gainst sin to watch and pray;
And feed me day by day
With Living Bread.

Thus I in godliness
Would higher rise:
I to the mark would press—
Would, with faith's eyes
Directed heavenward, run;
Till, shining like the sun,
With glory's day begun,
I gain the prize.

BLESSING IN IRELAND.

MISS SMITH and Miss Bax have just concluded another mission in our neighbourhood, Blue Stone, near Portadown, co. Armagh. The services have been crowded, sometimes beyond the capacity of the house, the people standing in the hall, and even outside. Very much blessing has followed the services of these devoted and earnest evangelists. Last night about thirty persons of all ages came out to accept the great salvation. The praise-meeting towards the close was a most touching and cheering occasion; many fine young men and bright intelligent children gave testimony of the blessing received, as well as others of all ages who joined in the happy privilege of confessing Christ. In one family, numbering six persons, all are gathered in, except the father, for whom the children are now praying earnestly.

In the cases of Christian parents, great joy has come to their homes through the goodness of God in these services. To give an example, we quote from the letter of a praying father to Miss Bax and Miss Smith received to-day. He says:—"How thankful I am to the Lord for the blessing received by my family through your instrumentality. You may remember requests for prayer for two young men unable to attend the week-night services were given to you by one of my boys, who had been blessed himself; next his younger brother, quite a child, was saved; next another older boy; all three then began to pray for their big brothers; these attended on Sundays, and were convicted by the Holy Spirit; first one, then the other yielded. To-day I went to the places where these young men work, and had the comfort of hearing a testimony to their changed lives. They are now labouring among their companions, starting a Bible-class, with the promise of thirty to join."

Before ending, the statement of a Stewartstown minister may be added with regard to Miss Bax and Miss Smith's work there last year, that "only one out of the hundred professed conversions had proved unsatisfactory." Ireland is ready for the pure and simple Gospel.

HANTS VILLAGE COLPORTAGE MISSION.—In the report of last year's work, Mr. J. Hasell Charlton tells of much blessing having attended the progress of the "Herald of Mercy" Bible-carriage. More than fifty villages and hamlets were visited, many of them every month. Bibles and Testaments and books containing the Gospel in the plainest possible words were sold, amounting in value to £125. In addition to this, thousands of books and tracts were given away. It is not possible to make such a work self-supporting; but, as an effective form of home mission endeavour, it cannot but commend itself to such as desire the spread of pure literature, and the dissemination of Gospel truth. The work is capable of considerable development, and we trust Mr. Charlton (whose address is Camden-street, Gosport), will be encouraged by such as realise the true value of this Mission.

FRENCH MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

THE Paris Society of Evangelical Missions has long been doing excellent work in the great harvest field. Quietly and persistently, since 1822, it has testified for Christ in distant lands where the Gospel is unknown. Beginning in South Africa, it has done a work of unique interest among the Basutos. Other regions have also been entered in the true spirit of Gospel conquest, and an admirable readiness has ever been shown, on political emergencies arising, to occupy spheres which only Frenchmen could fill. We rejoice to state that the Society is about to send a missionary to take the place of Rev. John Jones, of the L.M.S., who, about two years ago, was expelled from Maré, one of the Loyalty Islands.

A peculiar interest attaches to the work of the Society in South Africa, inasmuch as subsequently to the Church of Christ being firmly planted in Basutoland, the people have been taken under British protection. Some years ago there was an English Committee in aid of the general work, and the assistance was gratefully received by the Society; to-day there is not only more acute need for such help, seeing the demands on the Society have greatly increased, but the fitness of things points the desirability of British Christians doing something on behalf of people who are under the same Imperial rule. An endeavour is at present being made to drive home this fact, with a view to the revival of the defunct Auxiliary Committee.

On Tuesday evening, last week, a meeting in aid was held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N. The chair was occupied by Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, of the London Missionary Society, who spoke of what he had seen and heard of the work of the Society in South Africa. The long-continued and successful labours of M. Geo. Casalis in Basutoland, and the brave pioneering work of M. and Mdme. Coillard on the Zambesi, were described in the terms of warm admiration they merit. M. A. BOEGNER, secretary of the Society, told in excellent English the story of the extension of the work, which was begun in great weakness, but with faith in God, and a desire to obey the command to preach the Gospel throughout the world. There are in Basutoland 17 stations and 111 out-stations; 5 superior schools, and about 111 primary schools; 190 native workers, 6543 church members, and 3332 candidates for membership. Special efforts have been made to render the work self-supporting, but through the increasing poverty of the people, since the late war, this is not yet possible. The Roman Catholics are very busy, and the field must not be neglected. M. Boegner pointed out, in conclusion, that the pressing need to-day is a special fund of about £500 or £600 a year to support native evangelisation.

Pastor G. APPIA followed with a vigorous address. He rejoiced to speak of the enthusiasm of the children of French Protestants in regard to missionary work. M. Coillard's mission is, he said, full of promise. Mdlle. KIENER, a Swiss lady, who is about to join the mission party on the Zambesi, was present at the meeting, and was, in earnest prayer, commended to the Lord for protection and blessing in her undertaking.

THE BRUSSELS CONFERENCE. — The National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations have sent a memorial to the president of the International Anti-Slavery Conference assembled at Brussels, requesting the Conference to take such action as shall lead to the growing commerce in alcoholic liquors, firearms, and other munitions of war, being placed under the restriction of International law; and legal prohibition and penalties secured against such articles being forced upon native races, in opposition to their expressed wishes and representations.

Tibet and Tibetans.

DEAR SIR,—The news has reached us of a missionary from London proceeding to Darjeeling, India, with the intention of entering Tibet through Sikkim if possible. This news has constrained me to state a few facts not generally known perhaps, in reference to the opening of Tibet and the salvation of Tibetans.

Tibet is a dependency of China, and it is to China's interest to give way to the desire of her Tibetan subjects to exclude foreigners. China also needs Tibet as a buffer against English aggression, and Tibetan lamas find their only hope of retaining their power and influence over the common people in this exclusion of foreigners. Only a few months ago we had an instance of this exclusive spirit in the experience of Mr. Rockhill, a late member of the American Legation at Peking, who penetrated Tibet from the north. Mr. Rockhill travelled with Tibetans, wearing the same dress as his companions, and speaking their language, but when still thirty days from Llassa, the capital, he lost all his baggage, being forced to re-enter China without having accomplished his object. Passing through this province to the coast, Mr. Rockhill told a friend who met him that inside Tibet he was told by a lama that the real cause of the exclusion of foreigners was the fear of Christianity; no wonder that such is the case when at least one son in every family becomes a lama—it is another case of vested interests.

Presuming that it is a desire for the salvation of Tibetans that has called forth in late years so much talk, prayer, writing for, and about Tibet, I am surprised that so very little has been done for the accomplishment of that desirable end. The work of the brave Moravians in Ladak, Kashmir, on the west border of Tibet is truly a most praiseworthy exception. Whilst others have been talking and writing, these humble faithful missionaries have gone to the work, translating the Scriptures and bringing some Tibetan sinners into the fold of Christ. Instead of wasting time waiting for Tibet to open, they have taken the Gospel to needy Tibetans outside Tibet proper. Here I am glad to add that Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner and his wife since some time last year, have been trying to do something for the many Tibetans living in Outer Kansuh, N.W. China.

At present these are the only instances of attempts being made to evangelise the tens of thousands of Tibetans who live, some under British, but mostly under Chinese, rule, outside of Tibet proper. In this province (Sz-ch'uan, W. China) alone there is a territory having an area of no less than 50,000 square miles inhabited by Tibetan tribes, for the last ten years open to the Gospel herald; but, alas! utterly neglected hitherto.

Let those who long for the salvation of Tibetans no longer wait for British sword and cannon to open a blood-stained way to Tibet. The way to thousands of Tibetans, dying utterly hopeless slaves to every sin, a prey to every lust, is now open in Sz-ch'uan and Kansuh, and has been open for more than ten years.

God willing, my wife and I hope to be doing something ere long towards the salvation of some of these border outcasts. Brethren and sisters, pray for them.

Yours faithfully, R. GRAY OWEN.

C.I.M., Ch'entu, W. China.

CURRAGH SOLDIERS' HOME.—The last annual report affords evidence of the high esteem in which this institution is held by soldiers. The letters from men on foreign service are, in many cases, very encouraging. One writes: "We know it is at times difficult to reach the soldier, chiefly on account of his ungodly associates. I think if there were more Christian men among the soldiers, in all parts of the world, a less number of missionaries would be required." The Home sadly wants more friends. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Perry, at the Home.

SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

THE Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission Rooms, has for thirty winters aimed at being the agent of all Evangelical sections of the Church of Christ in seeking the "lost sheep" in the Metropolis. Content to scatter the good seed of the Kingdom, and to leave to others the making-up of sheaves, the Committee and its workers have found the artisan and the poor man, the skilled mechanic and the "docker," ever ready to listen to the Gospel when they can do so on their own conditions.

During last season, in the larger buildings rented, alone, 397 meetings were held, attended by about 251,500 persons. The reports from various centres are full of interest. The City Missionary in charge of the afternoon service in Shoreditch Town Hall, writes that many young men and women engaged in public-houses, hotels, and refreshment bars, have accepted invitations to the services. One of the men said: "When we go out we like to have some place to go to, where we know we shall be welcome." Another remarked: "Eight barmen come from our house, and they all enjoy the services, though they have to come nearly a mile."

The Committee continues to make grants in aid of the opening of City Mission Rooms. The Committee never provides such rooms, its funds being devoted entirely to the support of the living agent; but where, as in many cases, local friends recognise the need, and erect a small mission-hall, or rent a convenient room, the Committee then does its part. A worker in Bethnal Green reports the conversion of a ballet girl. Calling upon her in compliance with a friend's request, he found the young woman to all appearances in very great trouble. With many tears she told her story. "Sir," she said, "I have heard you speak of the Lord Jesus Christ and how He came to save sinners. I am a great sinner, and want to be saved. My name is E—— F——, and I am a ballet girl at the —— Theatre." She then said she had left her place at service, with a good, kind mistress, over some trifling quarrel, and she felt she had acted very wrongly. She now wanted to leave the stage and serve the Lord Jesus Christ. The missionary pointed out the way of salvation, and read several of the precious promises of Christ, and prayed with her. He also advised her to write to her late mistress, who, she said, was a kind, Christian lady. A few days brought the answer—a very kind letter. The young woman is now in service in a clergyman's family, and rejoicing in the Lord Jesus. She visits the mission-room every month, and says she is very happy and grateful.

The Society's office is at 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.; Mr. Charles M. Sawell secretary.

MR. W. J. LEWIS.—We are glad to hear that this esteemed brother, resident at Ryde, is slowly recovering from his painful and serious illness, though he is yet in much bodily weakness. We again commend him to the prayers and sympathy of all who remember his long years of labour amongst the lapsed masses in Spitalfields.

WORCESTER Y.M.C.A. — The twenty-first anniversary was celebrated last week. Ever since the Institution was established, Mr. J. D. Allcroft has been president. In honour of the anniversary he gave a reception in the Guildhall, which was largely attended by ladies and gentlemen of the city. Beginning in three or four rooms, the Association has made very cheering progress, being now located in a building of its own and doing a more extended work than ever before. There are 97 members now on the books, and 162 associates. Besides these there are about 250 others who are not members, but who attend the religious meetings during the whole or part of the year. The Association workers regularly visit the lodging-houses of the city, and in a spirit of missionary enterprise have promoted many good endeavours.

TRUST, AND REST.

"Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest."

My precious child, I may not tell
The reason of My ways,
Nor why dark mystery enshrouds
Thy fleeting earthly days.

Thou know'st My love, but can'st not know
My wealth of love to thee;
Nor how I yearn to closer draw
My weary one to Me.

I want thee now to lay thine head,
And weep, upon My breast.
To me thou may'st tell all, My child,
And find, in Me, thy rest.

CHARLOTTE MURRAY.

AT WORK IN GALILEE.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—If you were to enter the village of Shefa Amr, on the hillside, overlooking the pretty Bay of Acca, and in sight of Carmel, you would see a small dwelling, perched on the roof of another house. This is, pro tem., the Mission-house of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, to which the Galilee Village Mission belongs.

It is early in the morning. A lady (Miss Gage-Brown) is talking, in broken Arabic, to a group of natives who have come for medicine. She has no interpreter, for all hands are full, but she can understand nearly all that goes on, and God is helping her with the language, so that she is able, in a child-like way, to tell something of his love. The average attendance on each medical morning is from twenty-five to thirty; besides, visits are paid to the really sick sometimes three or four times a day. In the houses especially she gets many opportunities of speaking to groups of people, as a case of sickness is a matter of common interest, and all the neighbours troop in to discuss the patient's chance of recovery, and to hear the last symptoms, &c.

But we must hurry down to the school, and there we find a nice little company of girls, learning with all their hearts; we note clean faces and hands, whatever the dress may be. All we see in the schoolroom (kindly lent at present by the Church Missionary Society) shows what a tidy, practical, clever teacher they have. She is a native Christian, who at other times is found in some of the houses, telling out "The old, old story," with love and earnestness. In these visits she is accompanied by Miss Townsend, recently arrived from England, who has come to share the Mission work, and who is bravely plunging into the difficulties of the Arabicl anguage.

On Wednesday evenings both ladies, with the teacher, hold a meeting in the Mission-house. The sitting-room is cleared of most of its furniture, cushions and carpets are spread on the floor, and a number of women assemble, sometimes with a few men as well. The room gets full to overflowing, and the ladies will be glad when the evenings are warm enough for all to sit on the house-top, under the louane (arch) in the open air. On Monday nights meetings are held in different houses by invitation; sometimes in one quarter of the village, sometimesi n another, so that many may have an opportunity of hearing.

The C.M.S. has long had a church and boys' school here, and it has cordially welcomed, and in every way promoted, the Female Education Society's work, which was begun here last year. The effort is a small one at present, but will, it is believed, become a centre for Gospel work among the women of the surrounding villages. Every step is up-hill, for there are many difficulties. Funds are needed to carry on the work. Prayer is specially asked for. Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, London, S.W., is the secretary of the Society.

SACRIFICE FOR CONSCIENCE' SAKE.

IN his latest sermon to young men, Dr. Thain Davidson of Islington took for his text 2 Chron. xxv. 9: "Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel? And the man of God answered, The Lord is able to give thee much more than this." In the course of his sermon, the preacher said:—

A man never suffers in the long run from obeying conscience, and listening to the call of duty. Believe me, fidelity to principle is an article of high commercial value. Let a youth be scrupulously truthful, straightforward, and honourable, he will not be without his reward, even in this world. Any loss he may at present encounter will be made up to him by and by.

King Amaziah was no poorer for the sacrifice of that big sum. In a sense the hundred talents literally came back to his family. For, in chapter xxvii. 5, we read that the children of Ammon gave to the king of Judah, "an hundred talents of silver"; ay, and compound interest into the bargain, "and ten thousand measures of wheat, and ten thousand of barley." As a rule, God sees to it that his faithful servants are no losers, even in the present life.

I met with a striking illustration of this some time ago. A man came to see me about a difficulty of conscience. Closeted with me in my study, he made a clean breast of his trouble. He was engaged in a trade—and in a particular branch of it—which his conscience could not approve of. He said, "I am making a capital living, but at the expense of all peace of mind. I feel I cannot ask God's blessing on my daily employ, and therefore I cannot pray at all." With tears, he told me his soul was wretched. "But what am I to do? If I give it up, what about my wife and children? I see only beggary staring me in the face." His difficulty was just Amaziah's, only far more serious.

"The Lord is able," I said, "to give you much more than this." Oh, what a struggle there was within his breast! He left my house in deepest distress of mind; and I prayed that the Lord would open up his way. A few days after, I met him in Cheapside, his face beaming with joy. He had sacrificed the hundred talents; had thrown up his situation; and already, in a remarkable manner, God had provided for him another opening, in which, with a clear conscience, he could earn a living.

But, even though compensation does not come in the form of worldly substance, the path of duty is no less plain; and the compensation will come in other forms.

The mere getting of gain is not happiness; there are rich men who are poor, and poor men who are very rich. You may have wealth in the bosom, even when you have none in the bank. To have a clear conscience singing within the breast is to have sweet music all the day long.

THE MOVABLE DWELLINGS' BILL, which has been promoted by Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, for many years, for the purpose of educating and protecting the gipsy and van children, will shortly be reintroduced, and will again receive the support of the Government, with whose assistance it passed the committee stage last session without opposition.

BARKING, ESSEX.—In addition to performing the many duties of hon. sec. of the North Africa Mission, Mr. Edward H. Glenny superintends an important evangelistic work in and around Barking. In a supplement to North Africa for March, he speaks of this as a sort of relaxation after having continuous application to letter-writing, accounts, and other work on behalf of the Dark Continent. The agencies are numerous, and the field serves well as a testing-ground for foreign labourers. Together with his fellow-workers, Mr. Glenny is very desirous that the Mission operations should be extended. Certainly the need is extremely pressing, the many surrounding towns having large populations; and we sincerely trust that the extension will soon be rendered possible. Mr. Glenny's address is 21, Linton-road, Barking.

JEWS IN BUDAPEST.

THE jubilee of our Scottish Mission to Israel was recently celebrated in this city. The festival took the form of a social meeting, with commemorative speeches. Reference was made to the remarkable chain of providential circumstances which led to the coming of the Scottish missionaries to the Hungarian capital, and the story of the intervention of the good Archduchess Maria Dorothea, which seems never to grow old, was retold. The beginning of our school work in the sick chamber of Philip Saphir, brother of Dr. Adolph Saphir, was also specially remembered.

Our school, the origin of which dates from these early days, has grown to be a great institution. This season we enrolled 500 pupils; and we have a Sabbath-school attended by 150. The Government Inspector thanked us in a graceful speech for the opening of our evening classes for apprentices, to which, he said, "no law compelled us," but that "we had been impelled by the noble desire to do a good work."

Our building no longer suffices. We require additional accommodation for our teachers, and for our Children's Home; and our desire is now to raise a jubilee fund of at least £1500. Who will help us? Let me beg kind friends to come to our aid. Our zealous teachers are engaged unweariedly sowing the good seed. Friends, help us in sowing, and you will doubtless join with us in reaping, when they who "sow in tears" shall "reap in joy."

PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE, Duchess of Teck, has consented to become the President of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, or Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.

FINSBURY PARK VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION is engaged in an endeavour, locally at any rate, to stop the tide of impurity, and assist in the reformation of young women committed to its care. The Home is Alpha House, 43, Hanley-road, N. The Association has vigorously put the law in motion, and secured the punishment of some notorious bad characters. It has also rescued a number of children from evil surroundings. The work is very important, and we trust that those who realise the importance of the rising generation being, as far as possible, protected from temptation, will support it. The report states that the Association is even ready to give advice or assistance in preventive and vigilance endeavour. The hon. secretary is Mr. Fish, 32, Lancaster-road, Finsbury-park, N.

THE ANTI-INFIDEL CRUSADE.—The energy with which Mr. H. L. Hastings, editor of the "Anti-Infidel Library," fights modern unbelief, has called forth wide-spread admiration. His son, Mr. J. K. Hastings, has for some months been in England for the benefit of his health, but he has nevertheless been hard at work endeavouring to supply the demand for copies of the well-known pamphlet on the "Inspiration of the Bible" for more wide-spread circulation than ever. He has just completed arrangements for the free distribution of a large number of copies—fifteen and a half tons in weight. All profits in connection with the work have been readily foregone, and Mr. J. K. Hastings, whose labour has been freely given, has by no means had a quiet time; by an omnibus accident he was for some weeks rendered a cripple, and by a fire at his printer's a large quantity of tracts and books were destroyed. We should rejoice to hear of a public endeavour to replace the loss which has thus been incurred. Miss Weston and Major Poole are making large distributions of Mr. Hastings's tracts among soldiers and sailors, and in many places where infidels congregate devoted Christians go with these tracts, which have already been so largely blessed in the conviction of sinners as to righteousness and judgment to come. Communications to Mr. J. K. Hastings may be addressed care of Messrs. Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Notes from Austria.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

A hasty run through this vast country with its thirty-seven millions of people, belonging to a dozen different races, is not sufficient to enable a tourist to speak with authority on anything. But one thing is abundantly clear, the dominance of the Church of Rome. The bulk of the people are nominal Romanists, and the laws which affect religion are all framed to favour the prevailing creed, and to repress all others. Consequently, those who come here as evangelists are beset with difficulties which in England we do not even dream of. Only heroic and wise men are able to hold on.

I have been staying in a town which shall be nameless, and with a friend who shall be nameless also. He has for years been evangelising in Austria in different places, from some of which he has had to flee, as his life was in danger. In the place where he now is, his tenure is uncertain. The civil or ecclesiastical power may prejudice the landlord of the house, and he may receive notice to quit. Or a neighbour may object to the singing with a like effect. All his meetings must be held in his own house, and must be of a private nature. There can be no public advertisements, either by bills or in the newspapers. No children are allowed by law to attend the meetings. The police are sent to hear what is taught, sometimes openly and sometimes in disguise. Two who came as spies, disguised, to my friend's meetings, have been converted; a number of Romanists also have been converted.

When a Romanist leaves his Church, he has to give notice to his priest, and to several of the civil authorities also. This necessarily requires great courage, but is more likely to prove the conversion to be real. If a father leaves the Romish Church, he may take with him any of his children who may be under six years of age, but those older must remain in, and be taught by, the Church of Rome till they are fourteen. Then, if they wish it, they may choose their father's religion, and thus become "confessionless," the term applied to those who do not belong to the State Church. A colporteur may not sell books. He can only take orders, and by the time the books are delivered the priests may have prejudiced the minds of the purchasers and they may be thrown on the colporteur's hands.

I had a practical illustration of State espionage in religious matters during the last meeting I held in the town, to which I have referred. The place was the little room used by the little Baptist congregation. In the midst of the address a smart police commissionaire entered, and the best chair was offered him. His entrance caused a little stir, and I paused till he was seated. In my simplicity I imagined he was an officer in the army, and had looked in to show his sympathy with the meeting. Happily I said nothing which could be construed into an offence against the Government or the Church, otherwise I might have involved my friends in serious trouble. Next morning this officer came to the pastor of this little flock, and requested my exact name and position, and what I was doing in the country; also the name of the gentleman who translated my address, and the names, ages, and addresses of all the members of the Baptist Church. Personally he seemed friendly, but he wanted to complete his report for his superior.

I have met with a missionary to the Jews, who has been fined twice for giving tracts to the Jews in the hotel where he has been staying, as the law does not permit it.

Rev. H. W. Hechler, chaplain to the British Embassy in Vienna, is a devoted student of things Assyrian and Egyptian. He occasionally lectures on Oriental subjects before the Emperor's Court, and also in other places, and has thus the opportunity of counteracting the neological teaching which abounds so extensively all over the empire. He is so well versed in Biblical matters that he would make a capital leader of an Egyptian or Palestine party where thoroughly reliable knowledge of sites and scenes in Bible lands is desired.

American Notes.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

The New York Presbytery has had serious work on hand during its recent deliberations. The question of revising the Westminster Confession has been under consideration, creating two great parties—the revisionists and anti-revisionists. The former class has urged vehemently the need of revision because of omissions and excesses in the Confession. The conservative element has also spoken with determined speech, and denounced with unmeasured terms those who would rob them of the heritage of their fathers. It has been a battle of the giants, and many anxiously await the final vote soon to be reached. The revisionists have already freely expressed their mind that in the case of non-revision the denomination will split apart. There are strong men on both sides, while a third class of persons are willing for retaining the doctrines with verbal changes. Modified phraseology, they plead, will not sound offensively on sensitive ears.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Milwaukee, Wis., received formal notice from the directors of the Y.M.C.A. that the Union could no longer occupy rooms in their building. The charge is made that the W.C.T.U. is allied with a political organisation, and cannot therefore be accommodated in a building erected for purely religious work. A number of ladies represented as non-partisan, have seceded from the national organisation of the W.C.T.U., and have formed a new Temperance party claiming freedom from politics. Their first convention assembled at Cleveland. The Hon. John Wanamaker, Postmaster General, telegraphed friendly sympathy to the new organisation. This movement is watched with hope and anxiety. Whether it may seriously retard the movement of the National W.C.T.U. cannot yet be determined.

The American negro is again the subject of general debate and attempted legislation. There is a bill now before Congress which proposes to give national aid to such coloured people as might desire to return to Africa or emigrate elsewhere. The movement is backed by strong men of both colours. Bishop Turner of the African M.E. Church, who wields a large influence over his race, thus expresses himself: "God grant that the Bill may pass. The white people brought us here against our will. Now they ought to provide for us to leave if we desire. Besides, we must work out our destiny, anyhow, and if a portion of us think we can do it better elsewhere, let the nation help us to try it. If the Bill meant compulsory expatriation, I would fight it to the death; but as it is voluntary upon the part of the negro, let it pass as soon as possible. The negro at best is but a scullion here, and he can be no less in Africa. I am tired of negro problems, lynch laws, mob rule, and a continual fuss, and a million of other negroes are tired of it. We want peace at some period in our existence, and if we cannot have it here where we were born and reared, let that portion of us who choose to try another section of the world have a little help. This nation owes the negro forty billions of dollars, anyway; so give us a little to emigrate upon."

This scheme, however, will surely fail. Many leading Afro-Americans oppose it. At a recent Afro-American Convention held in Chicago, the coloured men strongly asserted themselves, and claimed the right of living under the Stars and Stripes on equal terms with other citizens. They passed a resolution that Congress apply one million of dollars in the purchase of estates from the white people, that they (the whites) may have means for emigration from some of the Southern States, and leave the country to the blacks who are the preponderating race. Emigration has not done much for the negro. From recent returns the condition of the American negro colonists in Liberia is lamentable. They desire a return to these States, but are without means. They cannot stand the climate, and lack the industry and hardihood of the native Kroos.

* * * *

The problem of the coloured race forces itself upon the country. How it may be solved is unknown to the shrewdest statesman. The recent heated speeches in and out of Congress have excited all parties. The prejudice against the race is deep and universal. Even New England, with her history of battling for the right, disowns the negro in social life. She has no coloured bank or railroad presidents, and few coloured merchants or clerks of any kind. The Yankee never invites his black friend, no matter how intelligent, respectable, or wealthy, to his social board. Boston frowns upon social equality as severely as Richmond. Meantime the negro population increases, while the white man anathematises; the negro is fast developing intellectually, spite of impeding barriers, and somehow, somewhere, will carve a name for himself on some temple of fame.

The Belgian King has written to Shaw University for twelve book-keepers, one carpenter, two blacksmiths, three engineers, one shoemaker, and other tradesmen, for importation to the Congo Free State. Shaw is one of the large Southern universities devoted to the education of the negroes, and enjoys increasing prosperity.

PROGRESS IN JAPAN.

Tokushima is a large town in Shikoku, an island nearly as large as Ireland. It is the ninth largest town in Japan, and has 60,000 inhabitants. Its importance arises from its being the largest town in the province of Awa. Tokushima and three or four villages are the only places in the province where, as yet, the Gospel has been preached, and until a few months ago Rev. W. Buncombe and his wife (C.M.S.) were the only missionaries in the province. Now two Presbyterian brethren have arrived. The C.M.S. has been carrying on work in Tokushima through catechists for seven or eight years, but the work has been very uphill until last year, when it seemed as if God were giving the harvest from the seed sown during previous years.

At the beginning of this year there were only twenty-five Christians in Tokushima, and seventeen or eighteen in villages around it, but God privileged the labourers to baptize quite a number, while the Presbyterians also added many to the church. Many of the people hold back on account of persecution. Hitherto all the meetings of the little church have been held in hired preaching rooms, but now these have become too small. Not long ago, determined to erect a commodious church, the Christians started a building fund. A suitable piece of land was bought, with a house on it to serve for pastor's residence, and for Sunday-school and Bible-class purposes. In October last the house was destroyed by fire, a loss of 300 yen (about £46) being sustained. The poor people are hoping, in due time, to make up for the loss, and to do something towards raising the 2000 yen (£300) which the needed church building will cost. Towards the latter several generous friends in England have made contributions. Communications in England may be sent to Mrs. Hansell, Kingsdon Rectory, Taunton.

For the Young.

A SABBATH EVENING PRAYER.

Now the shadows lengthen, round thy throne we meet;
For thy richest blessing, Father, we entreat.
Lord, look down in pity; hear our broken prayer,
Pleading for thy mercy, and thy tender care.

Give us healthful slumber through the coming night;
Comfort under trouble, strength to bear the fight.
Lord, let each to-morrow find us nearer Thee;
Strong to meet temptation and from sin to flee.

Keep us, Lord, from slander, envy, hatred, pride;
All that makes us wander from thy blessed side;
So that we may gladly welcome coming death,
When Thou call'st us gently to resign our breath.

ETHEL PHILPOT CROWTHER.

LESSONS FROM MY LILIES.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

IN the centre of my crimson-draped table stands a great pot of lilies of the valley. Their tall leaves of vivid green shield the slender shafts on which hang the delicate, white lily-cups filled with indescribable fragrance. So sweet, and fair, and pure is their snowy beauty that I can only gaze at them and let my heart drink it in silently, feeling that such loveliness could only be God's handiwork.

"Consider the lilies," Jesus said (Matt. vi. 28), and in obeying his command to-day we shall be sure of a blessing.

I gaze at my lilies, wondering what my Lord is wishing to teach me through them; then presently the lessons stand out before me clearly, and as I learn I write them down for you!

(1) How they grow. I remember when my lily-roots arrived from a friend's garden that I untied a rough piece of matting and discovered some dark, ugly, unpromising roots with a little brown earth clinging to them. My gardener parted them carefully, and planted them in several pots, smiling at my exclamation, "Are these the lily-roots? There is nothing here pure, white, pretty, or fragrant! They look dead! Surely they are not worth planting!"

The gardener was wiser; he planted and covered the little brown roots, and let them have plenty of dew, rain, and sunshine. By and by, out of the swelling roots, shot up soft little sprouting stems. Oh, so green, so tender, so easily crushed!

Life having now appeared in my little lily-roots, they wanted light in order to grow; so light we gave them. Faster, higher, ever higher they grew. I could almost see them shooting upwards, for life never stands still. Where there is no growth there is no life, either in flowers or in souls. Day by day the green leaves drank in light and sunshine, until the pretty, tender bud-bells began to bead their slender stalks, and out burst the flower-cups, filled with delicious fragrance.

All souls born into this world of sin are like my lily-roots—dark with sin, unpromising, unlovely (Ps. li. 5). But if the hand of the great Gardener plants a soul, if the Holy Spirit falls upon it like dew, and if the love of Jesus, the "Sun of Righteousness" (Mal. iv. 2), lights upon it, there is a wonderful future for the dark, dead soul. A great change takes place in it, and the soul is "quickened," or gets life (Eph. ii. 1). Then God's lily begins to grow (Hos. xiv. 5). Then God's lily craves for light; it cannot live in the dark, it wants more knowledge, more grace. And God satisfies its yearning by shining down upon it gloriously (Ps. xxxvi. 9).

But the first beginning of life in a new-born soul is very delicate, very tender, and easily crushed.

If God has given you life, and his light is flooding your soul, remember your soul-life is easily injured. I have known a sudden outburst of temper, an untruth, uttered or implied by silence, a yielding to sins of thought, hinder the spiritual growth of a young soul for weeks and months. Be very careful, too, about your first desires and early longings after holiness. Let nothing crush or repress them, but pray them into stronger life at the feet of Jesus.

(2) My lilies taught me another lesson, and that the needed one of humility. They show their lowliness of heart in two ways; first by the position each little plant chooses, and next by the attitude it assumes. Lilies of the valley seem naturally to love a lonely and retired spot. They seek the shade, and the deeper it is, the larger and lovelier grow the lily-bells. You may search the wide streets or busy thoroughfares, you may look in the sunniest flower-beds, or on the exposed hillside, but the lily of the valley is not there. Even where it grows it hides its beauty, and your hand must push aside its sheltering leaves before you can find the sweet snowy flowers.

As the lilies grow up, they hang their heads down. Not like the tulip, the rose, or the great gay sunflower, looking out boldly for admiration from every passer by, but assuming an attitude of humility and grace, almost shrinking away from the admiration which they always must win.

We who are called Christ's lilies need this lesson, do we not? We are not fond of being in the shade or only occupying corners in our Master's garden. We all too often want to be seen and heard as much as possible. Little reader, if you belong to Jesus, you must be a true lily—loving to do his will quietly, and just content to be where He has placed you. Too many of the boys and girls of to-day are little grown-up men and women, forgetting the lily's lesson. We find they must be helped first at table, and get the best there; they must be dressed in the latest fashion, and cannot wear the same clothes two months together; they must ape their elders in everything, and be always seen and heard. Like the big, yellow sunflowers and great staring peonies, they try to attract as much notice as possible from all around. This proud spirit creeps even into the hearts of Christ's little ones, and, oh! it is hard, hard work in these days for a young Christian to cultivate the lily spirit, and in "lowliness of mind" to please and serve Jesus, "esteeming others better than himself" (Phil. ii. 3).

(3) I think the beauty of my lilies taught me a threefold lesson; for, when considering it, I found it consisted of three things, beauty of form, colour, and fragrance.

Their form was exquisite, their white bells beautifully rounded, there were no sharp angles or rough edges to be seen. Their colour was white, and they were satisfied with one colour, and that the colour of perfect purity. Their fragrance was wonderful and all-pervading. Long before you saw the flowers, you could not help exclaiming, "How delicious! there are lilies of the valley somewhere, I am sure."

True beauty of soul consists of the same three things. Its form or character must be lily-like, rounded by God's grace. The sharp angles of temper and tongue, the rough edges of selfishness, jealousy, and pride, must be softened by the gentle work of the Holy Spirit day by day, and by Him the Christian soul is gradually shaped into loveliness and perfect beauty of character.

How fair and spotless too is a blood-washed soul. There is surely nothing more lovely in the eyes of God or angels than a dark soul which has been made white in the blood of the Lamb. We find God saying of it "Thou art all fair, there is no spot in thee" (Cant. iv. 7). And by and by our Lord will "present him faultless before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 24). We are content with our beauty of colour, the glorious whiteness of our saved and sanctified souls.

How about our fragrance? Can everybody tell that we are Christ's? Are we known to be his lilies by our sweetness and goodness? Supposing some white flower said "I am a lily of the valley," and we found it lacked the sweet scent peculiar to the flower it pretended to be—we should very soon doubt its right to the name, should we not? Remember that it is not a bit of use talking about being Christians and Christlike—what people look for is living like Christians and Christ. The world believes in fragrant Christianity; if it does not find this, it doubts the reality of the profession we make.

The last thought left with me is that my lilies are flower pictures of Jesus Christ. He says of Himself, "I AM the Lily of the valleys" (Cant. ii. 1), and God's command is that we should consider Jesus (Heb. iii 1). Can we trace out the parable? Can we find out the likeness between the lily and our Lord Jesus? Yes, very quickly.

Long ago, when God sent Him to earth, there was "no beauty in Him that men should desire Him," and He grew up as a "tender plant," and as a "root out of the dry ground" (Isa. liii. 2, 3).

Satan tried to crush the tender plant in its earliest infancy (Matt. ii. 13, 16, iv. 1); but God guarded and nurtured it into life. "He grew up meek and lowly in heart" (Matt. xi. 29, 30). He chose a humble position in life, emptying Himself and taking upon Him the form of a servant (Phil. ii. 7). Day by day his sweet life showed Him to be the Son of God, and his fragrance could not be hid (Mark vii. 24), but betrayed his presence everywhere. Spotlessly pure in heart and life He was "God's Holy Child Jesus" (Acts iv. 30).

He was a "lily amongst thorns" (Cant. ii. 2). Thorns crowned Him, thorns pierced Him, but the lilies of the field kissed his weary feet and formed a fragrant pillow for his tired head.

Which are you, dear reader? A lily or a thorn? Are you grieving Jesus day by day, wounding Him by your coldness and indifference and want of love to Him? Or are you growing like Him, bloodwashed and pure and beautiful, ever pleasing and serving Him? Which would you rather be—a fair white lily, or a brown, cruel thorn? I think I can guess. I think your little heart answers,

Lord, I would be thy lily,
Thine own fair, fragrant one,
Thyself my golden centre,
Filling my heart alone.
Lord, I would be thy loved one,
White-robed in purity;
And live with thee for ever,
Throughout eternity.

MR. T. LEWES SAYER, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has been working at Brighton. The meetings were largely attended by children belonging to the various Sunday-schools, and it is confidently hoped that lasting good will result.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.*

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE VISITOR'S FINGER-POST.

THE wise visitor does not outrun Providence, but follows close behind. The messenger of Christ who walks in the footsteps of the Divine Visitor cannot fail. Affliction is the stern forerunner who prepares the way of the Christian visitor, the good angel of the evangel who rolls away the stone. It may be poverty, or sickness, or sorrow, or some crushing calamity; but it is the finger of Providence pointing the way. An invisible hand is chalking the door, and the voice of God is saying, "Now if ever! Now or never!" Opportunity is God near: it is God working: Jesus of Nazareth passing by.

Like other workers, Isabella was often sent for by the persons who had chased her from their doors, and was hailed as an angel by the sinners who had treated her as a fiend. A thorn in the pillow, she many a time found, turned cursing into prayer, and was the visitor's best help. When the wild lights of sin went out, she came in with the silver lamp of the Gospel, and received a welcome. The season of affliction was her choice opportunity and loud call to service. One day, in the course of her visiting, she heard that a little boy lay ill of fever, and was believed to be dying. By some workers fever would be deemed a sufficient reason for passing the door; Isabella was accustomed to regard it as a good excuse for introducing herself. She possessed no physical courage: to encounter a few harmless cows on a country road filled her with terror. But for the deadliest infectious disease she had no fear. For appalling combinations of evil she refused to turn back. To fight with men full of hatred to God and more fierce than wild beasts her courage never failed; and to suffer in her own tender nature for the good of others she always firmly braced herself. The home of this fevered child is poor; the bed is mean; death seems near; and nobody would dream that God has a great purpose here. Our visitor calls me in: a few words are spoken, a prayer is offered. The afflicted boy looks up through the mists of his fevered vision, and sees one like an angel standing by his bed-side. He recovers. The impression of the visitor's presence becomes an imperishable memory. For so small a service the affectionate lad is for ever grateful. In the Sabbath-school he proves to be an apt scholar, and soon passes on to the minister's class. By and by he enters into communion with the Church; becomes a Sabbath-school teacher; a leader among our Christian young men; a student; a minister; and is now the able and successful pastor of a Presbyterian church in Canada. The links in this chain, as happily in so many others, are the visitor, the teacher, and the pastor.

BUT THE VISITOR WAS PIONEER.

The pearl had never seen the light of the sun unless the brave diver had plunged into the dangerous and gloomy depths.

One day, in exploring some wretched dens, she came upon a poor woman, a widow, nursing her dying boy. The child's illness and the mother's distress furnished an opportunity which our visitor was quick to seize. The boy had learned something about the Saviour at the Sabbath-school, and was telling his ignorant mother all he knew. Thus the mother's heart was prepared for the truth. Our visitor's appearance on the scene was opportune. Dickie, the boy, became a bright Christian, and died in the faith. The mother sought and found the Lord, and became a member of the Mission Church.

Another day she was passing the house of a Roman Catholic from which she was sternly excluded. The door was standing ajar, and she could see a pale-faced lad, with a dying look, on a bed in a corner of the room. She prays in her heart for an opportunity to speak to the young man, and ventures in. They tell her that they are not of her way of religion, and broadly hint that she had better go. The dying lad casts a wistful glance towards her, in response to a kindly word. She begs permission to speak a little to him. This is granted. She finds him ignorant, anxious about his soul, and afraid to die. He drinks in the word of life, and is saved.

The house of a certain ungodly couple was completely closed against God and all good. Scarlatina entered. Several of the children were taken ill, and one of them died. The mother, hitherto reckless in matters of religion, was plunged into sorrow. The visitor, seeing her opportunity, made her way into the bereaved home, and throwing her arms round the neck of the weeping mother, sat down and wept with her. To soothe and teach the broken-hearted parent, she sang to her the meaning of the bereavement in the words of the hymn:—

"Behold Me standing at the door,
And hear Me pleading evermore
With gentle voice; oh, heart of sin,
May I come in? May I come in?"

The sad heart of the mother was impressed or soothed, but that was all. Another day the visitor found the children alone, and, sitting down amongst them, began to speak and sing of the Saviour. The mother, returning from her shopping, and, hearing the voice of singing, stood outside the half-opened door and listened. On her ear fell the words;—

"Oh, depth of mercy, can it be,
The door was left ajar for me?"

Suddenly the woman's heart was pierced with a sense of sin, such as she had never known. It was a new sorrow: she now began to "lament after the Lord." She rushed in, and, to the glad surprise of the visitor, raised the old cry, "What must I do to be saved?" A period of earnest seeking was followed by her conversion. The Lord had now entered the house; and the visitor became the mother's dearest friend. Before this wife's testimony, confirmed by her holy, cheerful, marvellously-changed life, the heart of the man, by and by, gave way, and he too was saved. Thus another family was lifted out of utter heathenism into blessed Christian life, and that through the visitor wisely reading on the finger-post of Providence: "This way, visitor; you are wanted here!"

BROKEN HEARTS ARE OPEN HEARTS.

A little barefooted waif whom she met in the slums, was trysted to her house by the promise of shoes. A friend calling, found Isabella on her knees on the kitchen floor brushing a boot, while Tommy, squatted by her side, was busy at work on the other. All the time she was speaking about One to whom she wished to introduce Tommy as his best friend. Now and again there was a pause in the brushing, when some truth was pressed home; but the preaching and the polishing went on with equal enthusiasm. Tommy's face was radiant under the Gospel of the boots; but the comfort for his suffering feet was the tinkling of a silver bell calling the little waif to the house of God and the service of Christ.

One day a young man in rags appeared at the house begging. His breast was open to the blast. He had no coat. He had been out in the heavy rain, and the water pouring down from his bare head to his shoeless feet, was dripping from the long strips and thready tatters that served for clothes; and he bore on his face the unmistakeable signs of starvation. She did not know him; but taking him on trust she relieved his more pressing wants, and promised that if he returned on a day named, she would "rig him out." The wretched waif broke down under this kindness, and listened with eager attention to the story of the Redeemer's love. He returned, and was duly "rigged out." He attended the church and became an earnest disciple. Afterwards he developed into a "character"; and has since emigrated to America, a Christian young man full of promise and hope.

Gathered Gold.

"NOT OF THE WORLD."

A CHRISTIAN in the world is like a man transacting business in the rain; he will not suddenly leave his client because it rains; but the moment the business is done he is gone; as it is said in the "Acts,"—"Being let go, they went to their own company."—John Newton.

DEAD IN SIN.

If a man is dead in sin, our attempting to correct his false notions is like laying a dead man straight who before was lying crooked. The man is dead, and will remain so; though, before, he was lying crooked, and is now lying straight. It matters little what right notions we may have, while we are dead in sin; for we shall never act up to them till God awakens our hearts.—Richard Cecil.

BANK NOTES.

Scripture promises are real bank notes of heaven, and the true riches of believers, who do not live on stock-in-hand, but traffic with this paper currency. Where Divine faith is found it takes the notes to Christ's bank, and receives the cash. But human faith cannot traffic with this paper; it reads the notes, and owns them good, but dares not take them to the skies for payment. No faith can truly act on God but that which comes from God.—John Berridge.

"AT THE POINT OF DEATH."

Jesus Christ has pledged his word to meet you when you come to the point of death. He has said: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." When human skill has exhausted its resources, when hope dies out from the eyes of your friends, when love is weeping in secret—He will come. And when the death darkness is gathering, and you can see no face, and hear no whisper, and feel no touch of mortal hand any more; and when you cannot speak, or look, or lift your hand to make on this side the veil one sign, or breathe one prayer more—He will come then. There is no need to pray. He will answer all your prayers in one vast donation, and, or ever you are aware, the "point of death" will become to you the gate of Life for evermore.—Dr. Raleigh.

"THE WATER OF LIFE."

It shall not serve for the moment only, but shall also preserve power to satisfy all future wants if it be appropriated by the receiver. The communication of the Divine energy, as a gift of life, necessarily manifests itself in life. The blessing welcomed proves a spring of blessing, which rises towards and issues in eternal life; for this is as the infinite ocean in which all Divine gifts find their end and consummation. The life comes from the Source of life and ascends to Him again.

The image is developed in three stages. Christ's gift is as a spring of water, of water leaping up in rich abundance, and that not perishing or lost but going forth to the noblest fulfilment. "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life" (John iv. 14).—Dr. Westcott.

PASTOR CHARLES SPURGEON,

Of South-street Baptist Chapel, Greenwich.

AS a preacher and lecturer, the subject of this sketch is known far and wide. In Greenwich, where he has laboured for ten years, he is deservedly held in high regard as a Christian pastor and teacher. The son of a great man, he has endeared himself to many as a worker, giving all diligence to serve God out of a pure heart.

CHARLES SPURGEON is a son of the celebrated Pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He was born in London in 1856, and, it is needless to say, brought up in an atmosphere of faith and good works. At the early age of nine years he was led to trust Jesus as his Saviour.

It was customary for his parents to go down to Oxfordshire in the summer time, and enjoy rural life for a brief period, and one year he accompanied them down, a stranger to Christ, but returned with them to town enlivened with a new-found faith, hope, and love. The great change came about in this way: Young Charles was enjoying a pony ride, when he saw an evangelist coming across the field in which he was. He dreaded meeting the pious man alone, for he was sure that the encounter would eventuate in his being "attacked" on the subject of religion.

However, there was simply no way out of the meeting; so, dismounting, he listened to what the earnest herald of the cross had to say. After offering a few words of prayer, the evangelist set forth the way of salvation, shewing that Christ came into the world for the express purpose of saving sinners, and therefore in order to save him.

Though he had often heard this before, he had failed to heartily believe it; but now the fact went home to him with much force. In a short prayer the good man proceeded to say, "O Lord, let thy young servant see Christ upon the cross as his Saviour! May he just look and live, and thine shall be the glory." There and then young Mr. Spurgeon did look, and he has ever since been living in the attitude of "looking unto Jesus." More than that, he has been devoting his energies to pointing others to the same Saviour.

He was educated principally at Brighton, with his twin brother Thomas, and made creditable progress in his studies. In athletics he was ever to the front, and made somewhat of a name in the cricket field. Leaving school at the age of seventeen he entered the office of a City firm, and publicly avowed himself on the Lord's side. Having the ordinance of believers' baptism administered to him by his father, he was admitted into church fellowship at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

At that time, as well as to-day, the subject of our sketch held that men are "saved to save"—caught in the Gospel net, in order that they may in turn be "fishers of men." Therefore he at once looked around for something to do for Christ. His attention was directed to a small mission in the neighbourhood of Chatham-road, Wandsworth Common, and there, along with his brother, he laboured with diligence and encouraging success. A larger building soon became necessary, and a new chapel was erected. Just then, however, Thomas, who had gained some proficiency as an engraver, had to leave for the Antipodes, on account of ill-health. Charles afterwards found the ministrations devolving upon him more than he could carry on single handed, along with business. Accordingly, in 1877, he withdrew from commercial pursuits, and entered the Pastors' College with a view to studying for the ministry. Although not persuaded to take this step by his parents, his decision was one which fell in thoroughly with their inmost desires.

For a time the work at Wandsworth was continued to the gratification of the people and the glory of God. In 1879, having preached once or twice in South-street Baptist Chapel, Greenwich, Mr. Spurgeon was invited to undertake the pastorate. After due consideration he accepted the call, and entered upon the responsible duties of the office at the age of twenty-three. The church was in a low condition at the time; but, by the Divine blessing on persevering effort, it soon rose in vigour and increased in strength. Instead of being, as then, nearly empty on ordinary occasions, the chapel is now filled with large audiences. Since 1879, when the church membership was about sixty, over 12,000 have been entered on the church roll, which now stands at 604. The Sunday-school has likewise gone forward rapidly, the number of senior scholars retained being considerably larger than is usual. The pastor conducts a men's Bible-class on Sunday afternoon, which numbers over 160 members, and has a preachers' training class during the week of sixteen students. About one thousand children have their names on the books, instructed by some sixty teachers. A good educational function is served by the Sunday-school Institute, and the young women's sewing and prayer meetings have been much blessed.

Mission and open-air work are actively carried on: there is a district colporteur; and by a tract society Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's sermons are circulated weekly. A Christian Band and Band of Hope receive special attention from the pastor, for Mr. Spurgeon is a life-long teetotaler. In addition to preaching and conducting missions in various parts of the country, he has delivered lectures on many topics before large audiences throughout Great Britain. In 1882 he visited America and addressed meetings in many of the principal cities of the United States. He was received with great cordiality for his father's sake, and returned home after gaining for himself a very good reputation in the churches of the West. During the past year, in consequence of overwork, Mr. Charles took a trip round the world, visiting his brother in New Zealand and returning through America.

Shortly after settling in Greenwich, Mr. Spurgeon took unto himself a wife, and in her he has found a true helpmeet in his varied labours, as well as a loving sharer of his joys and sorrows. The lady was Miss S. A. Jacob, only daughter of Mr. Philip Jacob, of South Norwood. It is worthy of mention that Mr. Spurgeon's twin brother Thomas was baptized at the same time as he was, and has for years been a successful pastor at Auckland, New Zealand. Mr. Charles Spurgeon has published several tracts and sermons. We trust he may do more in this direction, and also go on to abound in other kinds of work for the Lord. He is yet comparatively young, and we are sure not only those who honour his father, but all who wish well for the Church of Christ in our day, will be glad to hear of the increased usefulness of this promising member of a family whom God has greatly blessed.

In the February issue of The Sword and the Trowel, his father writes as follows:—

"Our ever-loving son, Charles Spurgeon, has now been for over ten years the pastor of the church in South-street, Greenwich, which numbers 604 members. By his earnest ministry, a large congregation has been maintained, and the church has been led forward in works of usefulness. It has a colporteur and missions doing useful service in needy neighbourhoods. Charles Spurgeon is one of the trustees of the Orphanage, and is ever our ready and efficient helper. Deepening experience is establishing him in that faith in which from youth up he has been rooted and grounded. We feel deeply thankful that one of our sons is able to remain in England. He has toiled so continuously, by preaching and lecturing for his brethren, that his health has suffered, and even now he is scarcely restored to his former vigour; but we hope that a long and useful ministry may yet be in store for him."

FINSBURY PARK Y.M.C.A.

This prosperous North London Association held its eleventh annual meeting on Friday last, Mr. J. L. Aukland occupying the chair. An epitome of the report, which is printed in full in the February number of the Association's magazine, Echoes of the Month, was presented by Mr. F. M. Black, general secretary. Fifty-one members and sixty associates joined during the year, and the work of the Association has been well sustained, its primary objects being ever kept in view. The attendance at the various meetings has been maintained, and the work of sowing the Gospel seed has been patiently prosecuted, and has not been without encouraging spiritual results. The statement of the treasurer showed that the debt of over £600, which has been a serious hindrance to the work, had been paid off by a friend, leaving the Association now nearly free from debt, and in a better financial position than at any previous period in its history.

An excellent and practical address was delivered by Rev. Alex. Ramsay, of Highgate Presbyterian Church, on "An Ideal Y.M.C.A." He held that the Y.M.C.A. should be a training school for all the departments of public life. The Association should be a young men's club, where the members could have social advantages, and be made to feel thoroughly at home; it should be a young men's university, where they might have the benefits of educational classes; a gymnasium should be provided to help them keep their bodies in sound form; but, above all, it should be a place where they might be established in true Christian principles and become useful workers for God.

An address followed by Mr. E. J. Kennedy on "A Young Man's Aim," in which much practical counsel was given.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Our dear friend and fellow-labourer, Mr. Hurditch, writes:—"Our hearts are glad and full of praise to God for 'times of blessing' during the past few weeks in various branches of this Mission. At Malden Hall, Kentish Town, Mr. Grove's special fortnight's mission has been very largely attended, both on Sundays and week evenings, from 250 to 300 men being present on Sunday afternoons, while in the evenings the large hall has been crowded throughout; and, better still, scores of inquirers have been personally directed to Christ, many of whom are now rejoicing believers in, and followers of, the Saviour. Pages might be filled with incidents of interest arising out of these.

"Mr. H. Veasey has witnessed similar blessing accompanying the missions he has conducted at Weymouth, Poole, Portland, and Shaftesbury. At Portland over thirty professed to have found the Lord during the few days' meetings, the evangelists being kept till a late hour dealing with inquirers. So also in Ryde and other towns and villages our helpers report gracious times, 'times of refreshing,' while we look for still greater things than these.

"A copy of The Christian Ambassador was given to a woman in Weymouth, who found peace with God while reading its pages. This led to her husband's conversion. This was followed by the leading of his brother and a young woman (his intended wife) to Christ. Another anxious soul had the same copy of the Gospel paper given her, which was blessed in her conversion also. We rejoice, therefore, that special blessing during the past few weeks calls for special thanksgiving to God, and trust for further bestowments.

"Heartily could we have wished that only such 'sunshine' had to be recorded; but, alas! there are also some shadows. A variety of unexpected calls upon the funds of the Mission, and the lengthened death roll of its most liberal helpers, involved us considerably in arrears for current expenses for the past year. Hence the necessity for curtailing the field of operations by closing two of its branches, and reducing our staff until we are again in funds for all parts of the work. While regretting the necessity for this, in view of the increasing need for such Gospel work in the large towns and villages, our path is plain, for we desire to work only on such lines and in such places as the Lord may indicate by, amongst other ways, the supply of necessary means."

Mr. Hurditch's address is 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

By permission of Louisa Lady Ashburton, a meeting of friends was recently held at Kent House, Knightsbridge, to consider the best means of bringing the dwellers in the common lodging-houses in London within the reach of Christian influence. Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, stated that there are 964 licensed common lodging-houses in London, with about 40,000 inmates. Only about one-tenth of these are affected in any degree by Christian influence. Some earnest workers have, under the name of the Common Lodging-House Mission, been holding services among the inmates of some of these lodging-houses, and they are desirous of extending the scope of their work.

Addresses were delivered by Mr. John Harvey, the honorary secretary of the Mission, Mr. F. E. Paynter, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Shepherd, and Rev. Mr. Firth. A lengthy conversation followed, when Sir Robert Phayre promised to prepare a draft scheme to be submitted to another meeting, and Lady Ashburton expressed her sympathy still further, by promising an annual subscription of £100 in support of the good work.

Mr. John Harvey, secretary, 15, Imperial-buildings, Ludgate-circus, writes to say that he will be glad to hear from workers in common lodging-houses with a view to arranging another meeting of workers at an early date.

MAJOR WHITTLE AT WANDSWORTH.

A fourteen days' mission was commenced in Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, on Sunday 16th inst., by Major Whittle. In opening the mission he referred to the circumstances under which Down Lodge Hall was erected in 1884. His personal knowledge of the eventful mission conducted by his honoured countrymen, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, in various parts of London in 1883-4—and his recollection that Down Lodge Hall, a memorial of that mission, stands on the site of one of the large temporary buildings then used by the American evangelists—appeared to deepen his interest in the solemn work now commenced. Only a few weeks previously, Major Whittle conducted a similar mission in Stratford Conference Hall—a building which also is a memorial of the same well-remembered mission.

During the first week of the Mission all the services were well attended. The afternoons were devoted to Bible-readings. Many Christians in and beyond the immediate neighbourhood took a lively interest in these meetings for Bible exposition and study, as was manifest by their daily attendance. Major Whittle, as "a good soldier of Jesus Christ," understands how to instruct and train for Christian usefulness those who are already enlisted in the service of God. But Major Whittle's chief aim and purpose were best seen in his evening Gospel addresses, in all of which he clearly set forth, in plain and simple language, God's message of mercy to man; never hesitating on these occasions faithfully and boldly to reason of righteousness and judgment to come.

On Thursday the evening meeting was of special interest, owing to the presence and co-operation of two well-known and esteemed officers, General Anderson and Captain Tottenham, each of whom spoke briefly at the close of Major Whittle's address. Already fruits of the mission are appearing, such as will, it is believed, be permanent and enduring.

Truly the Holy Spirit has directed the word; but greater results are expected during the closing week of the mission.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

OFTEN and often during the past twenty-six years of Gospel work on these Hills have we seen that "the race has not been to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." The power lies not in the sword, but in the hand that wields it; not in the instrument, however polished, but in the One who deigns to use it. We desire unfeignedly to praise God for hitherto keeping his servants, and enabling us to enter upon the twenty-seventh year of our mission work. We commenced the New Year with Emmanuel, "God with us." We have been proving it as truly in 1890 as in all the years gone by. The people of God are being built up and strengthened by Him, and souls are being saved. Thus have we constant cause for cheer, amidst very much to try our faith and call for patient endurance.

Many interesting cases of conversion might be mentioned, showing the irresistible power of the Word of God when applied by the Spirit of God to the heart and conscience. One striking case will suffice on this occasion. Calling at a country workshop with some Gospel books, I gave an invitation to some meetings to be held in the village. The invitation was as unwelcome as the books, for I was met with the surly reply: "Don't want none of yer trash!" The speaker was a man of striking appearance, strong individuality, and great force of character; a skilful workman at his trade, and a new comer into the parish. I asked if he was quite sure it was "trash," seeing he had not even looked at the book, suggesting the wiser and safer course to read it first and pass his opinion on its merits afterwards. This appeared not unreasonable, and had a little subduing effect at first; at length he said, "I 'count 'tis all a piece with the rest. All the Methody lot be alike—a pack of hypocrites. I don't believe in any of it." And between the strokes of his hammer he continued to deal out gratuitous and not very complimentary epithets on religion generally, aiming at me in particular. I left a book, which the man did not take; but in an off-hand way he said, "Perhaps Missus will read it," referring to his wife.

Leaving the workshop, I called at the adjoining dwelling-house, to see "the Missus," whom I found of much the same grit as her husband. She said, however, she liked reading; though of late she had not been able to read, as she had broken her spectacles. Sympathising with her in her misfortune, I asked if she had ever in all her reading found a correct account of herself. With a surprised air, she said, "Oh dear no, sir; nobody ever wrote about me. I don't reckon I'm worth writing about." "Oh, yes," I replied, "your description has been written and published in a book which I have with me. Shall I read some of it to you?" On permission being granted, I took my Bible and read God's description of the sinner in Ps. xiv., Isa. i. 5, 6, Rom. iii. 10-19, which very much interested her. I took her own Bible, and, at her request, turned down the leaves to the passages. Promising to call again in a few days with a new pair of spectacles as a present, which immensely pleased her, I left, praying God's blessing on her and her husband.

A week afterwards I called again, now to find husband and wife both softened. The gift of the spectacles had had a wonderful effect on both, and they began to look upon the "hypocrite" as not so bad a sort as some after all. By the aid of the "glasses" she could read the Book for herself, and again the words were applied to their souls' condition. We knelt and prayed, and on my leaving, the husband thanked me with a tremor in his voice, and wished me to come again. The arrow had gone home. Some further visits deepened the work begun; the Spirit of God had undertaken their case. A little time after this, the man had some business matter to transact with me, and called on me for the purpose. We were alone, and he having finished his business, it was for me to commence mine. Looking up to God for suitable words and wisdom, I remarked how glad I was to see him and his wife at the Gospel services. "I feel I can't stay away, sir," he replied, "and 'twas a meeting last night, sir, and no mistake. I was well pictured; and, to tell you the truth, sir, I've been uneasy ever since you called on us." How I inwardly thanked God! We thereupon took the Bible together, and, as the beautiful story of God's love to a sinful world in the gift of his Son and of his death for sin was read, and the way of life through faith was made plain, the lion was changed into a lamb, the scoffer to the seeker, the hardened sinner was weeping bitterly, the big tears dropping one by one on the table. Falling on his knees, he sobbed out, "Lord, save me, I perish. I do come, a vile wretch. I give myself to Thee. Take me as I am." On rising he truly appeared a new man. His face, so unhappy and wretched before, was now radiant with heavenly joy.

My wife, coming in at that moment, saw the change, and needed not to be told of the life just received. From that moment until he passed away a few weeks ago, this man's life was one bright testimony "known and read of all." I was called out of my bed to visit him a few hours before he died. His words as I entered the bedchamber were: "Oh, sir, I thought I should have spent Christmas Day (the day previous) with the Lord, but 'twill not be long now; the Lord Jesus is come for me, I've seen Him. I'll soon be with Him and like Him. I have perfect peace. Tell all my brethren and sisters in Christ to be faithful; faithful unto death. 'Tis all joy, beauty, glory; glory to God. I've been a vile sinner, but his blood has cleansed me from all sin. Jesus has done it all. 'Twas God that led me to your house that day. Hallelujah. Blessed Jesus. Jesus?" and so he passed away. "Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?"

Many other cases might be given, showing reality of the work of God. I would only add, "Brethren, pray for us." Our hands are full, and time more than filled up. Sickness is very abundant, and needs many and constant.

Yours in the blessed service of the King,

W. J. H. BREALEY.

DR. MARCUS DODS.

IN a letter to the College Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, Dr. Dods vehemently objects to the interpretation which has been put upon some of his published statements. Observing that it has given him much pain to find himself charged with defection on the doctrines of the Divinity and Atonement of Christ, he says:—

"As regards the Divinity of Christ, I can only say that without that I have no religion, and, indeed, no God...As regards the Atonement, I can only say that I have carefully and repeatedly gone over the Confessional statement of this doctrine, and I can detect in it nothing with which I do not agree, or with which any published statement of mine is inconsistent...It is to be remembered that the Atonement, being the central fact of this world's history, has a hundred different faces and aspects that I claim liberty to emphasise as I find occasion and according to my impression of existing needs, aspects, and bearings of the death of Christ, which are not specified in the Confession... As regards the inspiration of Scripture, I hold with the Confession that all the writings of the Old and New Testament are 'given by the inspiration of God to be the rule of faith and life'; but I do not hold that inspiration guarantees Scripture from inaccuracy in all its particular statements, neither do I find that the Confession either expresses or implies any such idea of inspiration."

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR leaves for China early in March. He is to take part in the general conference of delegates and representatives of the Evangelical Protestant Missionary Societies to be held in Shanghai in May.

Recipe for a Good Old Age.

IN a recent issue of The Watchword, Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, writes:—

While sitting on the platform of the Mildmay Conference in the summer of 1888, an aged man of very benign and attractive face sat just in front of me, and I had a strong desire to know who he could be. At dinner one day I was placed beside him, and he introduced himself to me as Archdeacon Philpot, telling me that he was ninety-eight years of age, and as well, and as able to preach as in his best days. Among other things he stated that he was converted under the ministry of Charles Simeon of Cambridge, the famous leader of the evangelical movement of the last century. He said that one of Simeon's injunctions to young ministers was to make great use of personal conversation, and endeavour, in every place and circumstance, to find an opportunity to urge home the claims of the Gospel.

"This method," said he, "I have endeavoured to follow all through my life. Coming down to London to attend the Conference," he added, "I found such an opportunity. Placed in the railway carriage with three gentlemen, I found that they were very worldly in their talk—playing cards, and otherwise amusing themselves. I was watching for my opportunity when they fell into a hot dispute over some question of history, each insisting that his way was the right one and the others wrong, when I interrupted, saying, 'Excuse me, gentlemen, the facts were so and so.'

"'How do you know?' asked one of the disputants.

"'Know, sir! the events happened seventy-five years ago and I am ninety-eight, and can remember what took place seventy-five years ago as well as you can remember what happened twenty-five years ago.'

"'You are ninety-eight years old!' exclaimed one of them. 'Well, I wish you would tell us how we may live to be ninety-eight years old, and be as hale and hearty as you are.'

"Now was my chance," said the Archdeacon "and I said, 'Gentlemen, I will give you three rules, which if you will faithfully follow, you may hope to live to be as old as I am.' Here I paused, having awakened their curiosity, when one of them said:

"'Well, please give us the rules.'

"'First,' I said, 'Be at peace with God; and true peace can be had with God on the ground of the atonement.' Then, I expounded at length from Scripture, the way of peace by the blood of the cross, and how 'being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.'

"Finding them becoming a little restless under my discourse, I held off awhile, quite sure that having excited their curiosity they would call for the rest; when one of the gentlemen said suddenly:

"'Well, please give us the second rule for attaining to a good old age.'

"'The second rule,' I replied, 'is to be at peace with your neighbour; and that is only possible as you have that charity which suffereth long and is kind.' Then I turned to 1 Cor. xiii., and expounded to them that beautiful lesson on charity. Again there was a lull in the conversation, when one of them asked for the third rule.

"'The third rule is to avoid drugs and medicines,' I said, to which my fellow traveller replied, 'That, at least, is practical and appeals to me, since I am a physician.'

"But," said the venerable preacher, "I had gained my opportunity of setting forth the Gospel. And I rejoice that I have pursued this method with great profit through my long life." Dear old man, his face was like the face of an angel; and last summer, at ninety-nine years of age, he departed to be with the angels, and with them to behold alway the face of our Father which is in heaven.

Letters to the Editor.

"APOSTOLIC WARFARE."

DEAR SIR,—Two issues were submitted in my critique on "Apostolic Warfare," namely, the accusative spirit of the report and the claim to Apostolic standing. I regret to find that in neither particular does "Commissioner" Railton directly meet me or stand to his guns. It is no reply to the first part of my indictment to quote from page 62 of the report to the effect that "we systematically abstain from attacking the opinions and practices of any of our comrades in the service of the Great Master," when the report where this sentiment is found bears the confutation of it in almost every chapter, if not every page. A sample of this accusative spirit I have given, and I find nothing in Mr. Railton's rejoinder of the nature of a reply.

It is asked, and in my judgment unwarrantably: "Where are the men who dare to say that the Bible and the whole Bible is really true; that the God who hates iniquity and pardons and renews the guilty soul really lives?" To that question I have already given a number of representative names of men who do believe that the whole Bible is true, &c., and to that number I could with little difficulty add hundreds more. I could do this without going outside my own Christian fellowship. It is no reply to bring up Mr. Spurgeon and his attitude through the Down-grade. I am one with Mr. Spurgeon in that, and have in the most public manner denounced and opposed that movement. "Commissioner" Railton's counsel to bold testimony in Church Assembly has been embodied in my ministerial career.

But the fact that some having itching ears have heaped to themselves teachers does not justify wholesale aspersion. We are not all infidels, though the writer of "Apostolic Warfare" as good as says it. In my letter I only mentioned the name of Mark Guy Pearse among the Wesleyans, but could I not extend it beyond him? I have known in the various places I have sought to serve the Lord Jesus not a few Wesleyan ministers. I have never known one who did not believe that the whole Bible was from God, or who did not believe in the atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Surely to ask in respect of these, "Where are the men who dare to say that the Bible, and the whole Bible, is really true?" is to make a charge fearfully wrong and injurious. Brother Railton expresses astonishment that every evangelical minister should not go with him in his strictures. Does he not see that if his accusation be true there can be no evangelical ministers at all? He first of all, in effect, denies our existence, and then wonders we do not follow him. In this officer's own spiritual interests I advise the withdrawal of a charge so sweeping, unseemly, and unjust.

Turning to the second issue raised—the claim to Apostolic distinction and authority—I find that "Commissioner" Railton is amazed that I should "proceed to argue as if we (i.e., the Salvation Army) had no claim whatever to Scriptural authority for our system of government." With his amazement one way or the other I have nothing to do. What I desiderated at his hands, and have searched his letter in vain to find, is any confutation of my Scriptural reasonings.

Either there is, in Apostolic times, in Apostolic practice and teachings, that which answers to the military rule of "General" Booth, or there is not. In my letter I showed that there were no field-marshal's vested rights in any Apostolic case, that there was no absolute military authority in the Apostolic times; and I read "Commissioner" Railton's reply with some interest to see what he had to say to this. Alas! nothing. It was a worse case than looking for a needle in a bundle of hay. It was looking for an answer where no answer was. Instead of meeting me on Apostolic ground, which was that chosen by himself (and hence the title of his report, "Apostolic Warfare"), the advocate of the Salvation Army system proceeds to find fault with me because I left "quite unmentioned the Old Testament." The unmeaning and illogical character of the charge baffles me. Had the report he drew up been headed "Abrahamic Warfare," or "Mosaic Warfare," or "Aaronic Warfare," he would have found me quite as ready to meet him on Old Testament ground as on the one he himself chose. "Commissioner" Railton's defeat is none the less decisive because I have chosen to keep to the text he has himself relied on in his report.

With respect to the assertion "The Scriptural Militarism was never the Papistical despotism," &c., allow me to say it will be time enough to discuss that when my friend establishes from the Inspired Word that there is a Scriptural Militarism such as his system embodies. I cannot have this question begged. In my letter I disproved by Apostolic references the Salvation Army system, both as to its military headship, character, and methods. The appeal in either case must be to the Word. That appeal has been made by me, and I pause for a reply.

One other matter, and I am done. Mr. Railton will hold me to this that "their discipline could not have become established all round the world, otherwise than by the power of the Holy Ghost." But I have nothing to do with that to which he would hold me. I believe, so far as Government is concerned, the Salvation Army is in serious error. I have shown this Scripturally. It would not be righteous in me to allow any other consideration to dislodge me from that fastness. There was a time when Mormonism spread like wildfire, and when the argument was used, "See, is not that the finger of God?" The same line of things now is used with effect in the interests of Popery. We dare not make action in providence the criterion of the Divine will considered in itself. I am persuaded that there are tens of thousands of warm-hearted, loving Christians among the Salvationists, and, all things considered—their intense love in many cases for souls, and fervour of testimony,—I do not so much wonder at their progress. But they have no Scriptural warrant in taking on themselves military vows to any man or men on earth, nor have those persons who exact these vows from them any Scriptural sanction for so doing.

Trusting that this fraternal remonstrance, which is dictated by love to Christ and his cause, will be taken in the spirit in which it is given, I remain, yours in Christ,

JAMES DOUGLAS.

THE HOME AND THE MISSION FIELD.

DEAR SIR,—We pray that the Lord may send forth more labourers into his harvest, and we wonder that there are not more volunteers for so honourable a service. But are the young people of this generation so trained as to fit them for this work, or make them desire it? Is it the first aim of each Christian parent that the children of the home should be sanctified wholly, and so imbued with the love of the Father as to exclude the love of the world? Are the opening years of childhood guarded, guided, and gladdened by the parents' watchful, patient, prayerful, loving care; or, does the apparently wider and more important sphere of mission work outside the household absorb all, or almost all, available time and thought?

In devising plans for the education of their own children (or those entrusted to their care), and the atmosphere of their surroundings, is the first desire of the Christian parent or guardian that they should be Christ-like—separate from sinners? Or do other and worldly motives mingle and predominate? The Lord alone knoweth the heart; but surely it behoves each individual to judge himself and herself fairly and fully.

Some Christians seem tempted to regard human ties (which the Lord has given as types of his love to us) as hindrances, not helps, and they carry out this view, both in their private and public capacity. First, in regarding as wasted the hours spent in ministering to the "little ones" at home; and, secondly, in forming such rules (for their agents on the foreign mission field) as are practically in accord with Archdeacon Farrar's recent suggestions. Is there not danger to the boys of the household in thus casting a reproach on and lessening their reverence for home ties? And may not both sons and daughters imbibe unconsciously a dread of any life-work which would involve a pledge to renounce them?

It is to be feared that we Christians of the nineteenth century are not exempt from its dangers. We do not always recollect how short a period is covered by our experience, and that we do not see the end from the beginning. In our zeal, we are often tempted to forget that we cannot improve on God's plans, nor hasten the fulfilment of his purposes by devising other, and, apparently, quicker methods.—Yours faithfully,

J. G. ROBERTSON.

CAN BELIEVERS BE LOST?

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. James Hunt, in your issue of the 7th inst., expresses the difficulty which seems to present itself when John xv. 1-6 is compared with certain others, which, in plain words, assert the eternal life of the believer. Is he, however, justified in instituting the comparison? I do not think so, and the following sentences will give you my reason:—

After some study, I came long since to the conclusion that this passage of St. John must be taken dispensationally. In Ps. lxxx. we find Israel described (8) as the vine which God brought out of Egypt; the culture of it, and the extension of its branches (9-11), and the sad breaking down and desolation (12, 13). Then comes the prayer in the anticipation of Israel's future (14 to end). The return of God is sought for earnestly; and the Man of God's right hand, "the Son of Man," is prayed for and looked for as the hope of Israel (17).

As this "Son of Man," as "the Man of the right hand," Christ presents Himself to Israel (I use the word in its general sense, not as expressing Israel proper as distinct from Judah), and He definitely and exclusively asserts that He is the Vine—"the Vine, the true one." He was, in fact, Israel, before God—"wholly a right seed"—seeing that the people had become, as Jer. ii. 21 expresses it, "turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto Me."

Thus, in the midst of an apostate nation, and with the foreknowledge of the treachery of Judas, the Lord appears to the little remnant, as personally the root and stock from which all nutriment must be derived, and from whom the sap would circulate, and that more especially after his resurrection and ascension. This is a blessed truth for all of us now; and, abiding in Him, we are fruitful branches of the tree of life. Far better for us to take care that we abide, practically and constantly, in that beloved and blessed One than to formulate doctrines about election and final perseverance, however valuable correct theology may be.

John xv. should be compared with Rom. xi. There the same figure is used. "The wild olive tree" is represented as grafted in amongst "the natural branches," many of which were "broken off because of unbelief." Then the national character of God's elect—that is, the Jew—is not at present represented as constituting the Church. However, the root and stock remain, and so all Israel shall be saved, all which is prophetically described in Rom. xi. 26-29. The broken off branches, in their condition since the rejecting of the true Vine, answer to the Lord's solemn denunciation: "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned" (John xv. 6). Well might the Lord weep over Jerusalem! Have we no tears for baptized, professing Christendom? There is surely an analogy.

Jesus, immutably the same,
Thou true and living Vine,
Around thy all-supporting stem
My feeble arms I twine.

Quickened by Thee, and kept alive,
I floweringly bear fruit;
My life I from thy life derive,
My vigour from thy root.

I can do nothing without Thee,
My strength is wholly thine;
Withered and barkless should I be
If severed from the Vine.—Toplady.

I am, dear Sir,
Your constant and grateful reader,
Cotleigh Rectory, Honiton. JOHN HAWKER.

THE TWO BIBLE SOCIETIES.

DEAR SIR,—As an old friend of now thirty years' standing, you will bear with me, I am sure, if I attempt to give the briefest expression to some of the feelings that are stirring my heart after reading your "Notes and Comments" on the two Bible Societies, in this week's CHRISTIAN. It is long since I read anything of the kind which has so surprised and saddened me.

I appeal to your sense of fairness and impartiality, whether, after having (by your insertion of the two advertisements and Mr. Sharp's letter) allowed so grave a question to be raised in your paper, you ought to dismiss the whole matter in so summary a manner. Were it a question of the "number, reputation, learning, integrity, Protestant convictions, or Christian zeal" of the friends and supporters of either Society it would be another matter. But it is not affected by any such considerations, it is NOT a question of the saintship or scholarship of certain persons, but a question touching the adoption of certain principles in the conduct of the divinest work ever placed in human hands.

Most solemnly do I believe there is no one member of the Committee of the Trinitarian Bible Society who would not rather die than lie against their brethren; yet in their advertisement of January 31 they give certain explicit examples of the text corruptions against which they feel under such a solemn, yet intensely painful necessity, to protest. Are these true, or are they not? When, sixteen years ago, they were brought to my notice by an honoured servant of Christ, now at rest, how devoutly did I wish they were not true. On finding, however, by the evidence of my own eyes, that they were undeniable, there remained but one course for me to take. Even now I wish it were all a dream, and that no such stumbling block really existed. But there they are; at least, they appear to be so to me, or, as one who must give an account, I would not be where I am.

Dear friend, I entreat you to consider whether this is not a golden opportunity for helping forward the settlement, once for all, of this most deplorable controversy, the longer continuance of which can only give everyone concerned in it the keenest pain, besides greatly hindering the Gospel of Christ. I may not now comment upon the only piece of advice which you have thought fit to give a band of men who at least desired to be found faithful, namely, "to use their energies in circulating the Scriptures and to cease their interference with the older Society." God forbid that I should say that we ought not to take shame to ourselves for not having done more in the distribution of his blessed Word; but at least we have sought, in the fear of God, and amid much reproach, to circulate only the purest versions we could find; and, if only the older, richer, and more influential Society will consent to do the same thing, there would be an end of this sad controversy, the pain and shame of which no one feels more keenly than—Yours faithfully and affectionately, FRANK H. WHITE.

1, Princes-square, W., Feb. 22.

[We very much regret that our Notes and Comments have surprised and saddened our long loved and valued friend. In reply—(1) We cannot fairly be said to have "allowed" the question to be raised; inasmuch as the inset of the Trinitarian Bible Society was, as we have explained, taken without the attention of the principals having been called to its contents, and of which they were unaware, until it appeared. (2) Our friend says that the controversy is not one of the "saintship or scholarship" [of the committee and supporters of the British and Foreign Bible Society], but of "the adoption of certain principles in the conduct" of the work placed in their hands. But he assumes that there is only one side to the "controversy," and it might be inferred that the men, whose saintship and scholarship are not in question, have deliberately resolved upon a course of action of the iniquity of which there cannot be two opinions. (3) Each Society stands or falls to its own Lord: the founders having relieved their consciences by withdrawing from the older Society, why should the T.B.S. occupy itself with bitter attacks? (4) We repeat that we decline to make our columns the vehicle of a controversy on these lines. It has become embittered by the methods pursued. If some members of either Society who have not experienced this bitterness towards each other would meet for consideration of those "certain principles" of action, which Mr. White truly says are the question to be solved, a result may be attained which would please God and settle this "deplorable controversy." (5) While we decline to be the vehicle of this controversy on its present lines, we hold ourselves at liberty to insert a calm and fair statement of the principles at issue, from men who can regard each other with mutual respect and courtesy and kindly feeling.—ED.]

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown, the Cornish evangelists, have been holding special services in the Temperance Hall, Sedgley. Much blessing has attended the word spoken.

Mr. John Maxted is holding a special evangelistic mission at Ingleton, Yorkshire. The meetings have been well attended, and there are encouraging evidences of spiritual blessing.

Mr. Rowland Sturt has concluded a fourteen days' mission at Bredgar, Sittingbourne, Kent. The services throughout have been well attended, the interest deepening as the mission advanced. Much blessing has resulted.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are evangelising at Craven Arms (Salop). Large congregations assemble each evening, and on Sundays fill the Market-hall. Drunkards have been reclaimed, and others decided to serve Christ.

Birchington-on-Sea.—Mr. G. Back, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a three weeks' mission in the Baptist Chapel (Pastor C. Bloy's). The attendance throughout was good. Believers have been quickened, and there are signs of real spiritual blessing.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has conducted a mission extending over several weeks, at Terra Haute, Indiana, U.S.A. The results have been encouraging in a high degree. In meetings at Hartford, Conn., Mr. Hammond's preaching has been greatly blessed alike to young and old.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' Gospel mission in the Congregational Church, Boscombe. Through the eight days of lovingly earnest labour (says a correspondent), Mr. Hallowes has drawn us closer together as a church, and many of us nearer to Christ individually.

Mr. John Wills, of the Southern Counties Evangelistic Crusade, has conducted successful evangelistic services at the Queen's-square Baptist Church, Brighton, and is now holding a mission at the Lewes-road Church. Some are deciding for Christ nightly. Mr. Wills will have ten days' missions at Newhaven, Littlehampon, Horsham, and Lewes. Prayer is earnestly desired for these missions.

Maldon.—Mrs. Legg, of Hampstead, has concluded a ten days' mission at the Y.W.C.A. here. The meetings grew in interest and numbers. There was a daily Bible-reading for ladies, and many testified to the blessing received. The thanksgiving service was crowded, and numbers opened their lips for the first time, thanking God for the great spiritual blessing they had received. There were many definite cases of conversion.

Greenwich.—A three weeks' mission, conducted by Mr. W. Packer, of the Evangelisation Society, has recently been held at Blissett-street Mission. It has been a time of much happiness and spiritual profit. The Christians who are regular workers at Blissett-street have been gladdened by evident blessing that the Master has given on the faithful and helpful words spoken by his servant. Souls have been led from darkness to light. Mr. Packer is conducting the two following Sunday meetings in continuation of the work.

West Brighton.—An effort made during the present month to get the working classes together to hear the Gospel at Clarendon Villas Mission Hall has been much blessed. The mission was conducted by Mr. John M. McAuliffe. Upwards of forty hopeful cases were dealt with in the inquiry-room. A thousand working people attended the closing Sunday evening services. A pleasing feature occurred when Mr. McAuliffe occasionally asked who had been brought to the Lord at the mission a year ago. Here and there men and women rose and testified to God's keeping grace.

Mr. Moody in Brooklyn.—In The New York Evangelist Rev. Dr. Cuyler writes: During the present week Mr. Moody is conducting daily services in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, of Brooklyn. They are crowded, and the inquiry-room is well filled after the preaching service. I never heard him preach with more unction and power than he did last evening. His broad, solid frame is broader than ever, and the wonderful voice has lost none of its old ring. Every student in our theological seminaries ought to hear Dwight L. Moody—at least once every year. They might learn from him that the secret of all effective preaching of the Gospel is to present evangelical doctrine made red hot by a Heaven-sent fervour for the salvation of souls, and so to present it that a child might understand it.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services have recently been held at Armoy, Magherafelt, Dungannon, Armagh, Pettigo, and Wexford.

Barrow-on-Soar. — Mr. Thomas Wales, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a month's mission in the Baptist Chapel. Some have been awakened and blessed, and believers quickened.

Brighton.—A united mission among the Nonconformist Churches was held here during the first three weeks of February, and was a source of spiritual reviving among the people generally, as well as of converting power to some. Next week we hope to give notes of an address at the close of the mission by Rev. W. Crosbie.

Rev. George Wainwright (of Bournemouth) conducted a week's evangelistic services at East-street Baptist Chapel, Southampton, which proved a blessing to the church. Many testified to the good received from his stirring and helpful addresses. There are some inquiring after salvation, and more fruit is confidently expected. Rev. Wm. Thomas, Grove-road, London, will continue the services.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith.—These evangelists have concluded a most successful ten days' mission in the Congregational Church, Cleckheaton, Yorks. Large congregations have come to hear the Gospel. A service for men only was held in the middle of the mission, and from 1200 to 1400 must have been present. A great and good work has been done, and over 200 have declared themselves on the Lord's side, as a result of the mission.

Mr. W. R. Lane has just concluded a very successful ten days' mission in connection with the Bath Y.M.C.A. The afternoon Bible lectures proved very helpful, and the evening services were crowned with much blessing. One very interesting feature of the work was the earnestness displayed by the new converts. The young men set to work immediately, and distributed invitations, and in many ways proved their desire for the blessing of others. About 250 men assembled on Sunday afternoon, when an address on Social Purity was given. The closing meeting will long be remembered. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity, and Mr. Lane gave the story of his life.

Major Whittle commences a three weeks' united mission at Greenwich on Sunday next. The following are the arrangements for the services:—Sunday, March 2, 11 a.m., and 3 and 8.15 p.m., South-street Baptist Church. Sunday, March 9, 11 a.m., Greenwich-road Congregational Church; 3 and 8.15, St. Mark's Presbyterian Church. Sunday, March 16, 11 a.m., Lewisham road Baptist Chapel; 3 and 8.15, London-street Wesleyan Church. The week-night meetings, at 8 o'clock, will be held from March 3 to 7 in South-street Baptist Chapel; March 10 to 14, St. Mark's Presbyterian Church; March 17 to 21, London-street Wesleyan Church. Bible-readings, at 3 p.m.: March 4 to 7, South-street Baptist Chapel; March 11 to 14, Lewisham-road Baptist Chapel; March 18 to 21, Greenwich-road Congregational Church.

Y.M.C.A., WHITTINGTON AVENUE. — Mr. Charles Inglis has been conducting Bible-readings for business men at St. Peter's, Cornhill, in connection with the daily prayer-meetings. These meetings have been largely attended and so greatly appreciated by the young men that it is arranged that Mr. Inglis will again visit us at the same place and give Bible-readings from March 10 to 14.

N. R. HUGHMAN.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE: For much blessing received at a mission at Hove, conducted by Mr. J. M. McAuliffe.——PRAYER: For blessing on a mission at Longton, Staffordshire, till March 1.——For blessing on special services at East-street Church, Southampton, till March 28.——For blessing on a mission by Mr. W. R. Lane, at South Shields, till Monday, March 3.——For blessing on a mission at Southampton, March 9 to 23, by Mr. E. J. Parker.——For blessing on mission services during March, at the Victoria Hall, New Brighton, by Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on a mission at the Congregational Church, Ibsley, Hants, March 16 to 23.——For blessing on a two weeks' mission as Dalkeith, N.B., to March 9, conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.——For mission services on board an emigrant ship to South Africa, by Rev. W. Bradbury as chaplain.——For blessing on temperance work at Ingrave.——For blessing on special mission services in Kinnaird Hall and Y.M.C.A., Dundee, to be conducted from March 1 to 17, by Mr. Henry Thorne.——For blessing on a mission by Mr. J. Burnham, at Sellindge, Hythe Kent.

Tidings from Alaska.

IN this remote corner of the earth, to the north-west of Canada, some C.M.S. missionaries are labouring in the Gospel, and prayerfully seeking to bring the natives under the power of the Divine message. Some letters recently received by an English lady from Rev. T. H. Canham and his wife contain many particulars of interest. The letters are dated July and August last. Some idea of the difficulties of transport and communication with these distant regions may be gathered from the fact that some bales of goods sent from this country in 1887 had only reached the missionaries a few days before they despatched their letters. No mails or supplies had reached them for nearly a year. Friends at home can therefore understand something of the isolation in which these workers go about their errands of mercy amongst the Indian tribes to whom they have been sent.

After some pioneering work at Tununa Station, on the Lower Youcon River, Mr. and Mrs. Canham moved to an Indian village, seven miles distant, where they had decided to establish a mission. Though they had been almost a year in that region, they had not, at the time of writing, got a house of their own, but had to be content with some poor accommodation in premises belonging to the Alaska Commercial Company. During the winter there was a great deal of sickness among the Indians, and the missionaries' stores of medicine were almost exhausted. Mrs. Canham, writing from Tununa, says:—

"The only deaths we have to report are those of two infants, and of a great 'medicine man.' The people were in great fear of this man, believing him to have certain magical powers. They still visit his grave, and go through some heathenish rite, the exact meaning of which I cannot find out. They are very ignorant and superstitious, and need a great deal of teaching. As the language promises to be difficult, and Mr. Canham has no interpreter, it will be some time before they know more than the rudiments of Christianity. But we must not despise the day of small things...Religion is not without its influence, and we see a change for the better in some of those around us. Our school has been well attended even during the winter. Those who attend regularly, are making fair progress. We have been wretchedly off for school materials; fancy having only two slates. We have also a very limited supply of books.

"The erecting of the premises is costing so much that we would be very thankful to receive some help. I am sure friends would subscribe towards the establishment of the mission if they only knew a few of our difficulties and the necessity for getting something done at once. A Jesuit priest spent the winter of 1887 here, and occupied the very rooms we are in. He seems to have done little or nothing for the people, and was not at all appreciated by the Indians. He retreated down the river to a place where there is a Roman Catholic Mission, and where we hear they are to be reinforced by lay helpers, sisters of mercy, &c. I have no doubt on the first opportunity they will try and get back here. The priest came up in the winter with sled and dogs, and stayed with some miners on an island near here, but no one knew for what purpose. Mr. Canham is very unwilling to give up this post altogether, and, in order to come over occasionally from the St. James Mission Station to hold services and school, he wishes to have a room of some kind. But this means additional expense, which he hardly likes to incur at present....Our people will be very badly off this coming winter. There has been a famine of fish, and, as that is their sole means of living, I dread to think what may be the consequences. But 'the Lord will provide.'"

In a brief letter Mr. Canham gives some additional details. He says: "Some friends in Canada have offered to support an Indian boy to be known as George Sherbrooke and to be placed under our care for five years at fifty dollars a year. We have accepted the offer, and are looking out for a boy who we trust may be helpful to the Mission, and in time prove a great blessing to his people. We ask for earnest prayer on his and our behalf...We are now but breaking up the ground as it were, and while doing so we long and pray for the time to come when the Gospel shall be proclaimed in all its fulness, freeness, and power."

Surely many Christians who are leading comfortable lives at home will do something to strengthen the hands and supply the needs of these devoted workers, who have left all to follow Jesus into these far North-Western wilds. We believe that parcels of useful goods and other help are sent to such workers through the Missionary Leaves Association, the secretary of which is Mrs. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, London, N.

NEW SCHOOLS IN SHOREDITCH.

ON Monday the memorial stones of the new school buildings, in course of erection in the rear of the Shoreditch Tabernacle, of which Rev. W. Cuff is the pastor, were laid under very favourable circumstances. There was a very large attendance of friends; and by order of the vicar and churchwardens the bells of the parish church, which is a near neighbour, were rung in celebration of the event. The new building, which has for long been very pressingly needed, will be opened in June, the cost being £4200. The large room will measure 50 feet by 35 feet, and round this there will be ten large class-rooms, shut off by revolving wood shutters, so that when needed the ground floor area will measure 65 feet square. There will be a gallery, which will accommodate twelve classes; there will also be an infants' class-room and other large apartments, besides lavatories, &c., and a cartaker's house.

At a noon meeting in the open air Mr. Cuff said that they all recognised the hand of God in the work. Let philosophers say what they would, they saw in it an answer to their prayers. Five stones were then laid successively by Mr. W. Fox, Mr. J. B. Mead, Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. B. A. Lyon, and the Rev. W. Cuff. Addresses were given by those who laid the stones, and others.

A luncheon in Shoreditch Town Hall followed, at which between two and three hundred friends sat down. The chair was occupied by Mr. Lyon. Mr. G. Howell, M.P., said he felt it to be his duty to show his sympathy, as an old Sunday-school teacher, with Mr. Cuff's work. There was work to be done in London which the elementary schools could not do; and thus they looked to the Sunday-school to supplement the week-day work, by teaching the rising generation to be honourable, God-fearing men and women. Indeed, the Sunday-school was more important now than at any other period of English history. It needed that efforts should be made to bring the children under a good influence until they arrive at maturity. In London to-day, children after school age seemed to be left without a guide; but the Sunday-school influence would become more apparent than any other. Hence, he rejoiced in the establishment of these schools, which he hoped would need to be extended even during the life of the pastor.

Mr. Cuff referred to a large number of letters he had received from a number of eminent persons, one being from Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., enclosing a cheque for £5. A notable gift was £200 from the Sunday-school teachers and children. After the chairman had emphasised the importance of opening the building free of debt, Professor Stuart, M.P., said he was particularly pleased to be present, because of the good which Mr. Cuff did in the neigbourhood. The funds for the new building had come not only from the monied classes, but also from the poor and from the mission centres. The enterprise could not but command their admiration. The main object was to extend Sunday-school work; but the rooms would be available for other purposes during the week in a thickly populated district. Such a work should have the support of public men; for there was nothing like such work to put salt into the lives of the people. Religion should expand its branches until it entered all phases of daily life. There were difficulties, one of which was represented by a shifting population. In some districts in London the people were renewed every seven years. This was different from the country; but it gave London pastors a peculiar influence, because people who came went elsewhere. They might well, therefore, look for support both from London and the country—from persons in remote districts as well as from residents.

A speech followed from Mr. Pickersgill, M.P., who thought that Sunday-schools had a great future before them, their work being stimulated by the Elementary Education Acts. He hoped that in their zeal for foreign missions people would not forget the masses at home, although the amount subscribed for home mission purposes seemed to be diminishing. Speeches followed by Mr. Ridley, of Bury-st-Edmunds, Revs. J. T. Wigner and W. Cuff.

A meeting in the Tabernacle was held in the evening, Mr. C. Ackland presiding. In addition to the chairman, several evangelistic addresses were given by various ministers and friends. The collections for the day amounted to nearly £800, making the total in hand and promised close upon £3900, leaving about £500 still to be raised to relieve the new building of debt.

MEDICAL MISSION IN TURKEY.

DEAR SIR,—At a drawing-room meeting held here Dr. Altounian, late Medical Professor at Aintab, made a very interesting statement on behalf of an effort to establish a hospital at Aleppo in connection with the native Protestant Church in that place. It requires no small mental effort to realise the fact that in a town of 120,000 inhabitants there is not a single hospital for the sick. Yet such is the case in Aleppo, and indeed through almost the whole interior of Turkey in Asia. There is a small hospital of twenty-five beds, and there are also hospitals at two or three seaports like Smyrna and Beyrout; but, with these exceptions and that of Palestine, the entire of that vast region, extending from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf, and from the Black Sea and the Caucasus to Arabia, is without a hospital.

Surely this is a fact for English Christians to reflect upon. And when it is duly considered that the hospital under Christian management directly opens the door into a field which is almost inaccessible from any other side, the question must suggest itself to many earnest spirits: Why should this field, so much nearer than India or China, be practically neglected by British effort? As Englishmen we have a peculiar interest in the Turkish Empire. We have also assumed special responsibility concerning certain portions of it, such as Armenia, and we have our consuls and consular agents in all the important towns; therefore we ought to feel a proportionate interest in the welfare of its population; yet of direct Christian missionary work we practically do almost nothing. It is true that there have been difficulties. But the problem is not insoluble. Why should we not face it at once?

Here at all events is a tangible proposal—viz., to establish a Christian hospital in a town of 120,000 inhabitants. Dr. Altounian is an Armenian Protestant, and is going out in a few weeks with his English wife (formerly a hospital sister) to commence this good work with whatever assistance he may be able to procure. He has already obtained a few donations and promises of yearly subscriptions. I trust many of your readers will be disposed to help in this way.—Yours faithfully,

WALTER RIDDALL, M.A., Incumbent of Belfast. Magdalene Church.

Fashionable Frivolities.

SELDOM has a more plainspoken sermon been delivered in a Royal chapel than that preached by the Dean of Norwich on Sunday morning at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall. Dr. Lefroy, who began life on the Irish press, is one of the most eloquent preachers of the day. He is new to London (says The Pall Mall Gazette), or there would have been a larger congregation. He chose for his text Ezek. xxii. 14: "Can thine heart endure or thine hands be strong in the days when I shall deal with thee?" He riveted the attention of the congregation while he drew a striking parallel between the state of Judah and of England. As in the prophet's time in Judah, so in England now—disobedience to parents, fraud in business, degradation of politics, and the corpse of a dead faith were to be encountered on every side. Men and women in society treated the violation of the seventh commandment as a mere bagatelle.

The lack of seriousness of mind was one of the saddest signs of the times. Men and women, reckless and penniless, who see the frivolous way in which those who have no care or anxiety, and who always walk on the sunny side of the street, waste their lives, curse and loathe the grandeur that mocks at poverty. Men on exchanges and marts, and who form "corners" for their own aggrandisement, so adroitly conduct their business as to keep within the law; but equally with the butterflies of fashion who flit from flower to flower, they resist the expostulation of God, and act with a selfish frivolity which must, if persisted in, bring down God's curse on the Church and realm of England.

Obituary.

MISS HAMILTON.

A VERY large circle of friends will be grieved to hear of the death, on Feb. 11, of Miss Hamilton, at Stonehenge, Blackgang, the residence of her sister, Mrs. Reade; the cause of death being bronchitis. She had only been back a week from Newchurch, where she and Miss Reade had been holding a most successful mission, during which she caught a heavy cold, so she really died in harness.

The deceased lady was the youngest daughter of the late Colonel Johnston Hamilton, of the Madras Army, and had been engaged for the last sixteen years in conjunction with Miss Edith Reade in mission work in nearly every town and village in the Isle of Wight; and their labours were probably crowned with greater success than any mission in the United Kingdom. I believe I should be well within the mark if I said that fifteen hundred souls have during that period been brought to a knowledge of the Lord through the instrumentality of these ladies.

The intelligence of Miss Hamilton's death was received with the most unfeigned sorrow by the cottagers of the island, who, at the funeral, testified in the most touching terms to her life of loving self-sacrifice on their behalf. She was laid to rest till the morning of the first resurrection on Sunday, Feb. 16, in Chale churchyard, a service at the Blackgang Mission Hall being previously held. It was one of the largest funerals that has taken place in this island, being attended by nearly four hundred labouring men and a large number of women; they had come from all parts of the island to pay the last tribute of affection to the one who had been so blessed to them. Twenty cottagers came from Newchurch, a distance of thirteen miles. Five came from Cowes, fifteen miles off; some of them walked, so they must have journeyed thirty miles on foot to be present at the funeral.

Great sympathy was expressed for the family in their bereavement, especially for Mrs. Reade, who was then lying dangerously ill, but is now, thank God, better. GEORGE D. MITCHELL.

Brinkcliffe, Sandown, Isle of Wight.

A relative writes:—"The loss and the blank to us are very great, but our fresh anxiety has been for Mrs. Reade, who did everything for her loved sister, and had been nursing a friend previously. At last, after not having been in bed for ten days, she gave way completely when her sister's precious life was taken."

A friend writes:—"The Lord had trained her by early suffering and sorrow for the path she trod, and she counted all things loss for the Lord. To proclaim the excellency of their Master was the meat and drink of Miss Hamilton and Miss Edith Reade. To stand out in market or wayside places, with rain or snow beating on them, was little to these refined and delicate women, who won very many souls to their Master, and He has said they shall have their reward."

We are glad to learn, from a later communication, that Mrs. Reade is slowly recovering.

MR. T. E. CLARKE.

At the ripe age of seventy-four there recently passed away Mr. T. E. Clarke, eldest son of Rev. J. Clarke, Baptist minister, well-known in his day as a devout philanthropist and faithful minister of Jesus Christ. Mr. Clarke early in his London life became associated with the Baptist Church at Regent's-park Chapel. He was a model Sunday-school teacher. His sympathy for philanthropic and evangelical missions was intense, while the Band of Hope and the Spezzia Mission for Italy and the Levant were objects of his special interest and co-operation.

MR. HARRISON BRANTHWAITE, HALESOWEN.

This highly esteemed medical practitioner died a few days ago at Halesowen, Worcestershire. Born in 1828 at Liverpool, he led an active life, in the course of which he rendered distinguished service to the temperance cause. After practising in Lincolnshire and Bedfordshire, he resided at Willesden, N.W., improving many opportunities to denounce, from a Christian standpoint, the drinking customs of the day, and to enforce total abstinence in principle and practice. He founded the now well-known establishment at Twickenham, the High Shot House Home for Male Inebriates, now conducted by his friend, Mr. C. J. Boorne. Also, in conjunction with his wife, who survives him, he opened and superintended Colman Hill House, Halesowen, as a similar institution for ladies. Death was from anæmia, supervening upon the influenza epidemic which has lately prevailed.

MR. ROBERT KNIGHT.

The death of Mr. Robert Knight, editor of The Statesman, Calcutta, is an event of both interest and moment to Anglo-Indian literature, in all its aspects—religious, political, and economic. No Indian newspaper has more consistently taken that view of most great moral questions which has commended itself to the Christian conscience of the world, than The Statesman under Mr. Knight; and no one who realises how hard it sometimes is to obtain a fair hearing in the secular press on moral questions can undervalue the service which Mr. Knight has rendered to the country, or the fair tradition which he has bequeathed to its periodical literature. As Christian journalists, we place this service above all others. No observant reader of Indian newspapers could doubt beforehand what kind of declaration Mr. Knight's paper would make on any matter that was dividing men. It would be on the side of the weak against the oppressions of the strong; on the side of enlightened self-government against official despotism; on the side of chivalry and purity against moral insanity under the garb of sanitation; and so on.—Indian Witness.

EXAMINATIONS IN CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.—The examinations have been postponed to May 16. There is, therefore, time for some candidates to read the assigned books. For the Elementary Grade, Dr. Monro Gibson's "Rock versus Sand," and for the Intermediate Grade, Dr. Row's "Manual of Christian Evidences." The titles of books for the Advanced Grade, and full particulars, may be obtained of Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, Christian Evidence Society, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Notes from Cambridge.

BY AN UNDERGRADUATE.

As might be expected, every agency is eagerly at work in Cambridge. An undergraduate, specially if in his first year, may gain much spiritual help by a judicious selection from a long list of meetings, but he may also run foul of unseen rocks. A Christian man needs to beware of too many meetings and too little private prayer, or of becoming a religious tramp, and learning and hearing much he had better not have heard or learnt, for it too often dilutes down the Gospel into the weakest and most watery stuff.

The Cambridge Missionary Union presents a peculiarly interesting programme. Its meetings are very short, lasting but half an hour, and so within the reach of the hardest readers. Mr. J. Roscoe, of Eastern Equatorial Africa, led the van on Monday, Jan. 27, and was followed on the following Monday by Rev. J. W. Tims from N.W. America. The results in this branch of the mission field are not very encouraging, and only after nine years' work does he see the fruit of patient labour. Canon McCormick, of Hull, spoke (Feb. 10) on "Work amongst the Jews," and Rev. G. H. Pole from Japan addressed us on Feb. 17. He is to be followed by Rev. F. E. Wigram, and Rev. H. C. G. Moule; the latter reads a letter from Bishop Young of Athabasca.

The Sunday evening evangelistic meetings in the Alexandra Hall have in no way lost their old interest. Souls have been won for Christ among my own friends. Large numbers of undergraduates have listened with breathless interest to Major Liebenrood and Captain Robertson, both of the Royal Horse Artillery, and to the Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice, of Woolwich.

Among smaller meetings may be mentioned that of the Cambridge Protestant Union, to hear a paper on "The Secret of a Successful Evangelical Ministry." Also of the British and Foreign Bible Society, held in the hall of Downing College, when Professor Westcott took the chair, and Dr. Baedeker gave an account of work in Siberia among the prisoners. Rev. T. Aston Binns also spoke.

Nor can the spiritual life of Cambridge be inferred alone from gatherings such as the above. A test of the state of evangelical Christianity in this University may be found in the rapid increase of numbers at Ridley Hall. Rumours speak of additional buildings, and the inadequacy of the present building to hold all the students points in that direction.

Much interesting work is being done among the gas stokers. These men work in "shifts," and, owing to the extreme heat, are only "on" for twenty minutes at a time. The time "off" hangs heavily on their hands, and affords a capital opportunity of telling the glad tidings. With an ever-changing congregation much good can be done in a short time.

The District Visiting Society, formed some forty years ago, and of which as an undergraduate, Rev. H. C. G. Moule was a member, does a good, if an unostentatious, work. Many a neighbouring village has been cheered by its undergraduate visitors; and many a Cambridge missionary, now far enough away, looks back to happy afternoons among the old folk of the surrounding hamlets.

I may be excused for taking Corpus first, in an account of Christian work in the Cambridge Colleges; being my own College, information is near at hand. Our Christian intercourse here is formed into a very complete system. Each of the three "Years" has a Christian union which meets once a week after "hall." The third year discusses this term 1 and 2 Thess.; the second year takes "The Epistles to the Seven Churches;" the first year "The Life of Abraham." Every Wednesday we hold a prayer-meeting for a quarter of an hour, and on Sundays the College Bible-reading, immediately after morning chapel, at which we are considering the four subjects, "The Judgment Seat of Christ," "The Cross of Christ," "The Throne of Christ," and "The Work of Christ in his Church." The meetings are well attended, about fifteen men at each.

Our morning and evening service is found of great help to many, particularly the early morning at 7.30. One gets strength then for the day's temptations.

Amongst other work carried on here is a missionary breakfast among a few friends; secretaries for the following societies—Church Pastoral Aid, Temperance Society, Church Missionary Society, Social Purity, District Visiting, Daily Prayer Meeting, and Universities Mission, are particularly energetic in our midst.

Among the names of past members of the College now living, and taking part in Christian work are Archdeacon T. T. Perowne, of Norwich; Canon Perowne, D.D.; Archdeacon Emery, of Ely; Canon Money, of Kilburn; Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., and Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Marylebone.

The following have been missionaries of the C.M.S.:—Revs. J. Ragland, Meadows, Greaves, Jennings, and Nicol; and there are now in or proceeding to the mission field: Revs. Tugwell (Yoruba, 1889); Carless (Persia, 1889); Ireland Jones (Bengal, late vice principal of Ridley, 1878); Williamson (Central Provinces, India, 1878); Tanner (Madras, 1889); Thompson (Travancore, 1888); Horsley (Ceylon, 1873); Clifford (Calcutta, 1874); Philips (S. China, 1888); Jani Ali (Calcutta, 1877); W. S. Moule (Mid China, 1888); Pole (Japan, 1881); Baskerville (E. Eq. Africa, 1890); Lewis (Niger, 1890); Dibben (Ceylon, 1890); and the Right Rev. G. E. Moule, Bishop of Mid-China, 1857. The dates are those of their going out.

In 1887 a mission was set on foot by members of Corpus Christi College, in the parish of Christ Church, Camberwell. The only place available for public worship has been an arch of the London and Brighton Railway, capable of holding 150 people, and this is now altogether inadequate for the work of the Mission, which has grown considerably. An effort is therefore being made, with the approval of the Bishop of Rochester, to provide a mission church, with rooms for meetings and a soup kitchen underneath.

SPECIAL SERVICES for the deepening of the spiritual life were held at Cross-street Chapel, Islington, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, last week. Both afternoon and evening meetings were well attended by Christians of all denominations, and afforded much spiritual enjoyment and stimulus.

COASTGUARD STATIONS.—We are glad to learn from Captain W. H. Phipps that the coastguard stations have for many years been regularly visited by the Missions to Seamen Society. This will not, we presume, stand in the way of any private or individual effort, such as seems at present to be laid up on the hearts of some Christian people.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.—A goodly number of friends and workers from all parts of London gathered at the usual workers' meeting on Wednesday last week, when a helpful address was given by Dr. McKilliam on "Life in Christ." During the tea hour the girls and boys from the Training Home sang some sweet pieces, and for most of the boys present it was their farewell meeting, as on March 13 they are to sail for Canada.

BELFAST PRISON-GATE MISSION.—At the second annual meeting of this Mission, held a few days ago in the Y.M.C.A. hall, it was reported that during the year 216 men and boys were breakfasted on the morning of their discharge from prison, and helped in other ways, while twenty-three were admitted to the Industrial Home connected with the Mission. Most of the lads were helped out into life again, and as far as it has been possible to watch their careers, the results have been very encouraging. During the year lady workers visited the prisoners' homes, and found that their thoughtful sympathy was highly appreciated. The year closed with a deficit of £35. Mr. W. H. Lyons is hon. sec. of the Mission.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop Smythies is compelled by ill-health to leave Zanzibar by the mail steamer for Suez, possibly for England.

The Bishop of Liverpool on Friday week was present at the distribution of prizes at the Sunday-school connected with St. Matthew's, Liverpool. Dr. Ryle gave an address, and congratulated those present on the fact that it was the study of the Bible that had brought them together. It was but right that they should receive every encouragement to pursue those studies, as a knowledge of the Holy Word was the greatest safeguard for their happiness here and hereafter. Throughout life the Bible was their best guide, and he appealed to them to stand fast to its truths.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Jefferis, late of Sydney, has arrived in England, and taken up his residence at Torquay.

The twenty-first anniversary of the Church at Victoria-park Tabernacle was celebrated last week. The pastor (Rev. George Snashall) stated that 38 members had been received into the church in the year. A Young People's Christian Band, with 45 members, was doing a good work, and during the year a Young Man's Guild had been commenced, which had 34 members.

The congregation which has hitherto worshipped in Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, removed to Whitefield Tabernacle, Leonard-street, Finsbury, on Sunday week, when Rev. M. Duffil, late of Neath, who has accepted the pastorate of the united churches, commenced his ministry. The tabernacle was built in 1869, near the spot where Rev. George Whitefield, in 1741, erected a temporary wooden structure, which twelve years later was replaced with a substantial place of worship.

At Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, a vigorous young men's Bible-class is held. At the meetings on Sunday afternoons a short ten minutes' paper of introduction to the subject is read by one of the members, and then, after some remarks by the president, there is a free discussion. The members provide the entire support of a native missionary in China. They also undertake Christian work locally, distributing invitations to Carr's-lane services to young men, also about the city before commencement time on Sunday afternoons.

BAPTIST.

Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, has been invited to the pastorate of Woodberry Down Chapel, Stamford-hill, N.

Rev. J. T. Wigner, president of the Baptist Union, and pastor of the Brockley-road Church, S.E., has recently completed fifty years of ministerial service.

A Scottish branch of the Baptist Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Union has been formed. A number of ministers have already joined. Rev. Duncan Macgregor, Mona House, Dunoon, is the secretary.

A "Christian Union" has been formed at Rotherhithe New-road Church, S.E. At the opening meeting the pastor, Rev. W. Walker, delivered an address, impressing the object of the Society, viz., that of stimulating spiritual growth and the development of Christian life and service.

Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road (Rev. W. Williams, pastor), has enjoyed a year of great prosperity. The number of new members who joined during the past twelve months was 102, eighty of these being previously baptized; the present membership is 636. Various and extensive agencies are carried on for reaching the masses in the neighbourhood. At the annual meeting a few days' ago nearly two hours were occupied in the reading of reports of the different branches of work—mission-halls and Sunday-schools, bands of hope, sick visiting society, ladies' benevolent society, cottage mission, tract society, &c. The ministry of Rev. W. Williams is fresh and vigorous, and continues to attract large congregations to the church.

METHODIST.

A district convention of the Methodist Free Churches has been held at Wakefield, and was well attended. Profitable addresses were given on "Reverence in Worship and Life," "Personal Responsibility," "The Work of the Holy Spirit in the Church," and "Religion in Daily Life."

Large meetings on behalf of the London Mission have recently been held at Middlesborough, Newcastle, Carlisle, and Dereham. The speakers have included Revs. Peter Thompson, W. D. Walters, J. E. Clapham, and Mr. Josiah Nix. Much interest has been aroused on behalf of the work.

Rev. A. Jones (Secretary of the Methodist Free Churches Evangelistic Scheme) is advocating the formation of an "Evangelistic League," into which the present "Ministerial Consecration League" might be merged, and which would include both ministers and laymen. He maintains that such an organisation would promote the aggressive spirit of the denomination, strengthen the sense of responsibility for Christian work amongst its members, and find an outlet for the energies of all classes, especially the young people.

About twelve months ago Rev. William Kelson took charge of the young Methodist cause which had just sprung into existence at Barrhead, Glasgow. There is now a membership of over sixty, and a Sunday-school of about a hundred, together with a flourishing Band of Hope. During the past three months there have been "pleasant evenings for the people," and recently Mr. Kelson has commenced a series of Sunday evening sermons to men. The congregations are good, and the healthy spiritual tone of the church augurs well for its future prosperity.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. William Anderson, of Old Calabar, who has attained his jubilee as a minister in the United Presbyterian Church, and is held in unusual honour in his denomination, is to be nominated as Moderator of the next Synod.

A Presbyterian Church is being formed at Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal. The congregation has called Rev. James Gray, of Harrismith, Orange Free State, and formerly of Wooler, Northumberland, and Mr. Gray has accepted the call. Pretoria has now about 10,000 inhabitants.

Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson's congregation at St. John's Wood have enjoyed a year of marked prosperity. The membership, both at the parent church, and at the Kilburn mission, is larger than ever, the former being 790, and the latter 245. The year's income amounted to £5274. The report describes fully the many Christian agencies vigorously carried on in connection with the congregation.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army workers have opened a Rescue Home for women and children at Colombo, Ceylon.

The Westminster Food and Shelter Depôt, in Horseferry-road, has been opened to the public. Its accommodation is not quite equal to that afforded by those of Clerkenwell, Whitechapel, and Limehouse.

A writer in The Bombay Guardian, during a visit to Colombo, Ceylon, inspected the work of the Army. He speaks of it in high terms and says: "What I saw convinced me that many of the criticisms that have been passed upon the Salvation Army do not apply here."

Three thousand poor children have recently been welcomed at the Bradford Temple; the Mayor (Alderman Smith Feather) contributed towards the expenses of the tea; and at the evening meeting Rev. J. F. Makepeace (Baptist pastor) expressed his warm sympathy with the Army's work.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Quarrier recently received from an unknown source a cheque for £1000. An additional £500 has now come to hand from the same anonymous donor, and will be devoted to the building of another cottage at Mr. Quarrier's interesting village.

The Scottish "Monthly Visitor" Tract Society submitted a most creditable report at the annual meeting in Edinburgh. Upwards of five and a half million tracts have been distributed during the past year, 62,798 of these being in Gaelic. Nearly 50,000 were circulated in Edinburgh alone every month.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Belfast Prisongate Mission for men is doing good work.

The new Presbyterian Mission to the Indian Jungle Tribes has been fully organised.

An interesting conference for the deepening of spiritual life was held at the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, last week.

The Belfast Female Mission has had a successful year. Drunkards have been reformed, wanderers reclaimed, and non-church-goers restored. The Mission employs eleven agents.

The year's record of Gospel work in University-road Church, Belfast, of which Rev. W. Guard is the pastor, is a cheering one. Best of all, many were quickened into a new life by the preaching of the word.

The president this year of the Kingstown Men's Christian Association, Mr. W. McComas, has placed at the disposal of the committee the sum of £5000 for building and reserve fund purposes. Mr. Carson, a member of the committee, has given a plot of valuable land. It is intended to commence the erection of a suitable building.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. James McNeill, Presbyterian minister, Drumbo.—Rev. P. Reynolds, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Birmingham.—Rev. D. Howell, Ross, late Baptist minister at Glasbury.—Rev. H. Heinig, of Allahabad, for forty-five years a missonary of the Baptist Missionary Society in India.—Rev. A. Johnson, Congregational minister at Upton, near Andover, Hants.—Rev. John Haigh, of Tunbridge Wells, formerly Vicar of Shirley.—Rev. Edwin Nicholson, Wesleyan missionary at Ruatan, British Honduras.—Rev. John Hughes, Talybont, Bwlch, Breconshire, for thirty-five years in the Congregational ministry.—Rev. William Wannop, Vicar of St. John's, Burscough Bridge, Lancashire.

EMIGRATION HOME FOR DESTITUTE LITTLE GIRLS.—Miss Rye informs us that she has vacancies for six girls (Protestant) of from nine to thirteen, whose friends are willing for them to emigrate to Canada under her care. Papers for filling up will be sent on application to Miss Lizzie Still, Avenue House, High-street, Peckham, S.E.

MR. W. F. WILKINSON, Baptist missionary, died at San Salvador, Congo, on December 29. He had arrived in Africa only one month, and had been ill with fever five days, when he was called up higher. Two and a half years were spent by him in the East London Institute, and when he left he was full of hope, and looking forward to many years of service for the Master. He was beloved by a large circle of friends, who now mourn his loss. He had not reached the age of 23.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 2.—Ezra VII.

AN interval of sixty years intervened between the events of chapters vi. and vii., and in that time the history recorded in the Book of Esther took place. This chapter is unusually full of helpful thoughts.

Ezra's character.—"A ready scribe" (6, 12). We should describe him as a deep student of Scripture (Matt. xiii. 52). But he not only knew the law, he set his heart to seek and do (10). The only way to understand Scripture is to be prepared to do it. And we must do, if we would teach others. What a contrast to Matt. xxiii. 3. Let us not resemble the finger-post, which directs the traveller, but stirs not a step along the road it points.

Ezra's dependence.—"The good hand of God." This is quite a characteristic phrase in this and the following book (6, 9, 28, &c.). That hand answers prayer (6), speeds our way, as much in railway trains as in caravans (9), and strengthens us for service (28). The strong and tender hand of God is laid on our hands, as a father's on those of the son learning to draw a bow (Gen. xlix. 24). And when God's hand is on us, it is also on others, preparing them to co-operate, and putting his thoughts into their hearts (7, 27). The only things we need be careful about are, to be sure we are on God's plan, and to feel as weak as possible in ourselves, as the condition of claiming the maximum of his help. When we have received special help, let us not be slow in praising God for it (27, 28).

Ezra's commission (11-26).—It was very ample. Those who officiated or assisted in Temple service were exonerated from taxation. Full permission was given to take all voluntary gifts of money. Orders were issued for the supply of food and other necessaries. And Ezra was appointed governor of all Jews west of the Euphrates.

MONDAY, MARCH 3.—Ezra VIII.

The number of men who accompanied Ezra amounted to 1754, but the women and children would bring up the gross total to about 7000. Some of the families mentioned here occur also in the former list (ii.). The attraction to Canaan was increased by the fact that they had relatives settled there. The lack of Levites was very serious. These should have been among the very first. A deputation was therefore sent to a neighbouring seminary or college, where Levites were being trained, and here again is the mention of the good hand of God. Sometimes hearts are ready and waiting for service, which need just a word or appeal to complete their plans.

The preliminary fast (21-23).—The district to be traversed was very perilous, infested by lawless tribes; the Jews were few and feeble, and were carrying great treasure. It would have been natural to ask for an armed escort, but Ezra dared not do it, lest it should have a prejudicial effect on the heathen. There are many things lawful, but not expedient, because of those who are around us.

The charge to the priests (24-30).—Into our hands is committed first the rich treasure and solemn trust of our own souls, and next the great deposit of the Gospel (1 Tim. i. 11, vi. 20). In order to fulfil this sacred charge, there must be purity, Ye are holy, and sleepless vigilance, Watch ye. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling."

The arrival at Jerusalem (31-33).—The hand of God was upon them. It appears that there were ambushes and designs on their safety: "they lay in wait by the way." But the foe was unable to break through the Divine environment. How safe are we who live in God! What joy, as the little band weighed the vessels and rendered up their charge! (Luke xix. 16). Is not this a picture of our entrance into heaven, when we also shall acknowledge the good hand of the Lord, and sacrifice our burnt offerings of thanksgiving? Let those who fast and pray for God's help be sure to return Him thanks when it has been given.

TUESDAY, MARCH 4.—Ezra IX.

Grievous sin (1-4).—Not only the people, but the rulers had joined in marriage with heathen wives, disobeying God's express command (Deut. vii. 3). "The holy seed" is a term which may be applied to all those who by faith in Jesus have become the children of God. Marriage with the worldly and ungodly can have but one outcome, misery to the child of God, and the impairing of the Church's testimony. Oh, that the sins of the Church and the world lay as heavily on us as they did on the good Ezra! There are special promises to those who lay these things to heart (Isa. lxvi. 2). Others gathered round him; thus does the zeal of one affect others (2 Cor. xi. 2).

Vicarious confession (5-15).—The evening sacrifice, at the time of which this confession was made, was significant of that propitiation by which alone sinners can be accepted. We should seek at all times to look at sin as God sees it; and to confess it, not only for ourselves, but for others. Daniel also did this (Dan. ix.). The sin of the Jews was aggravated by three considerations. They had lately been recipients of such great mercies (7-9). The nails of eastern houses are fixed very securely, being built into the walls. They were also sinning against God's clear commands (11, 12). And they had only just emerged from the severe chastisement which they had brought on themselves by these very sins in the past. We have nothing to urge in extenuation of our sins, but to throw ourselves wholly and helplessly on the mercy of God in Jesus Christ our Lord. God is righteous, and therefore sinners have hope from 1 John i. 9 and ii. 1. Why should we not now repeat these words of Ezra as our own?

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5.—Ezra X.

The people seem to have been more impressed by Ezra's intense grief of soul than they could have been by his severest condemnation. Is not this the secret of winning men from their evil ways? But we must not expend all our force in tears, we must act when we have opportunity. Shechaniah was not implicated, but his father and other near relatives were (26). His words may be appropriated by us all, "We have trespassed, yet now there is hope." There is always hope for the man who repents and puts away evil. It is a great encouragement when brave men will stand by the reformer (4); but, whether they do or not, there is One who neither leaves nor forsakes (Heb. xiii. 5,6).

A drastic remedy.—The wives and children must be put away. It seemed very hard and must have occasioned many heart-breaks. But probably if a wife had truly turned to the God of Israel she would have been retained. God demands the sacrifice of aught which comes between Him and us, however dear (Mark ix. 43; Matt. x. 37). There is no warrant for such action in our days. The process of the Gospel is given in 1 Cor. vii. 12,13.

A solemn convocation (9-16).—This would be in the month of December, the coldest and rainiest time of the year. It is a majestic and touching sight, when a whole nation stands before the judgment seat of God, fearing before Him on account of sin. When shall England think thus of the opium iniquity, the drink traffic, and other evils?

A court of inquiry was appointed (16-44) who continued their labours for about a quarter of a year. So the offence seemed to have been eradicated, though we meet with it again (Neh. xiii. 23; Mal. ii. 11). Alas, sin is deeply rooted in us all. Each generation repeats the sins of its predecessors.

NEHEMIAH.

Ezra continued his labours in Jerusalem for some twelve years after the events recorded in his narrative, and actively co-operated with Nehemiah, to whom we now turn. Indeed, though the present book was largely written by him whose name it bears, certain portions of it were probably written by "the ready scribe," who spent the closing years of his life in collecting the sacred books into one volume, and completing the canon of Scripture.

Nehemiah was born in exile. In early life he was exposed to great temptation, holding an honourable appointment in the Persian court. But he remained faithful, devout, simple-hearted, patriotic, and godly; and was evidently valued by the heathen monarch, as a good and faithful servant—"an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile."

He arrived at Jerusalem, thirteen years after Ezra, with the rank of governor of the province, and with full authority to rebuild the walls, which, notwithstanding the erection of the temple, still lay waste. His administration lasted some thirty-six years. The secret of his efficiency was in his constant reference of all to God, and of this we shall have abundant evidence as we proceed. The book abounds in ejaculations and expressions of his sincerity, and, though these latter are very plentiful, we must not forget how many imputations were heaped on him by the malice and envy of his foes.

THURSDAY, MARCH 6.—Nehemiah I.

The time was our December, in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and in the tenth year after Ezra's journey to Jerusalem. The place was Susa, on the Choaspes, in the hot plains of the Tigris, the winter palace of the Persian kings. Though living in luxury, Nehemiah's heart was keenly sensitive to all that affected his people. He eagerly inquired after their state, and took it deeply to his heart. Oh, that we could cry and sigh for the rents and breaches in the Church of God!

Nehemiah turns from tears to prayer, from man to God. We should deal much more successfully with men, if we dealt more largely with God. Gordon used to say that he had met and conquered his enemies before he saw them. Besides, we should not carry even our anxieties about God's cause, they are to be laid on Him, so that nothing may break in upon the inner Sabbath of the soul, which we must remember always to keep intact.

This prayer is very beautiful. Saturated with quotations from Scripture, and so getting power with God, because based on his own word. Steeped in the tears of contrition for sin. Offered without ceasing, "day and night." Appealing to the memories of past redemption, and "the strong hand." Nor was it solitary; there seems to have been a little band of others united with him (11). Lord, teach us to pray like this, till others are found feeling with us, and kneeling beside us.

Here is a good petition for us as we go forth to our daily calling, in which so much depends on the attitude of our fellow-men: "Prosper thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man."

FRIDAY, MARCH 7.—Nehemiah II.

The seventh month answers to our March or April, so that four months passed since Nehemiah had begun to pray specially. It may be that his time of office did not recur before this. At first the king was inclined to impute the dejection of his appearance to some disaffection or discontent. So the words might be rendered, and this occasioned Nehemiah great alarm. In a moment he might be led forth to suffer death as a traitor. What an example is afforded of ejaculatory prayer (4, 5). Between the question of the king and Nehemiah's answer, he lifted up his heart for guidance, and instantly the words were put into his mouth (Mark xiii. 11). However much hemmed in we are, there is always an outlet and inlet heavenwards, we may send up a cry for help, and instantly it will enter our beleaguered souls. But we must remember that ejaculations should be conjoined with longer prayers for the same blessings.

The royal answer (6-8).—The interview was very private, as the queen is mentioned. It is not likely that she was Esther, though many have thought so. The king did more than give him leave, commissioning his satraps to furnish him with the needful materials. Here, again, is mention of God's good hand (8).

Nehemiah's arrival at Jerusalem (9-20).—Sanballat was probably a Moabite, a native of Horonaim; Tobiah had been a slave. There are many descendants of these two men in all our Christian communities to-day, hindering God's work. This heroic soul met their scorn and the depression of the people by unwavering faith and calm confidence in the good hand of God (18). How small do our difficulties seem when brought into the sight of the God of heaven!

SATURDAY, MARCH 8.—Nehemiah III.

The rebuilding of the wall was immediately commenced. The priests led (1, 2).—Those who teach by precept should also teach by example; and it is undeniable that the latter is the most effectual. Through the sheep-gate sacrifices were brought for the house of God. Non-residents helped (6, &c.)—Men of Gibeon and Mizpah; also nobles; but, alas! for Tekoah (Judg. v. 23). Women lent a hand (12), reminding us of those of whom St. Paul speaks (Phil. iv. 3).

Some repaired over against their houses (28). One, at least, against his chamber (30). Of one it is said that he repaired earnestly that which fell to his share (20), as if there was much evident fervour and devotion in his work. It would seem that those who got through their work first helped the rest, or undertook some more (5, 27).

The work of rebuilding the ruins of Zion is typical of the demand of our times in making good the inroads of the enemies of truth and the Church of God. There is work for each of us, and unless we are specially summoned to foreign work, it becomes us to begin at home, and to work before our own doors (10, 23, 28, 30); and, just as we labour for the good of the whole in this way, we shall contribute to our own comfort and safety. If one member is strong, the rest are strengthened; or, if weak, the whole are weakened. Find your piece of the wall, don't meddle with others'. Do your own work earnestly, and your name will not be forgotten when the chronicles of heaven are recited (Rev. xxi. 14).

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 9.

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.—LUKE iv. 33-44.

GOLDEN TEXT: MATT. viii. 16.

IN these verses we see Jesus in the synagogue (33-37), in the home (38, 39), and in the street (40, 41), and equally powerful in all. His religion, like Himself, is not intended for the sanctuary alone. It is equally suited for the home, and the business of everyday life. Power for efficient service in every place is obtained only by communion with God. Even Jesus departed into a desert place (41) in order to pray (Mark i. 35). For the teacher this lesson is supremely important.

Verses 33-37.—Note again how Jesus sets us an example of going to the house of God on the Sabbath-day (Mark i. 21). In the synagogue was a demon-possessed man (33). The reading of the law and the outward form of synagogue worship produced no effect; but when Jesus entered, the presence of the evil spirit was soon declared (33). He who had been anointed with the Holy Spirit came into contact with the man possessed by an unclean spirit, and the unclean spirit was bound to cry out. In the same way does contact with Jesus discover our sin. To see Him is like letting in the light upon the sins of our heart and life (Job xlii. 5, 6; Isa. vi. 5). The demon's cry (35) is solemnly suggestive. He speaks in the plural number; not because he identifies himself with the man, but because he represents other spirits who have obtained similar possession of human beings. The presence of Jesus is painful to such beings.—They are confirmed in their sin against God; He is "the Holy One of God." What a terrible thought that sin can make contact with Jesus to be unbearable agony. This is the end towards which all sin tends. They fear judgment, hence their cry of pain. They dread being "destroyed"—cast into the abyss (viii. 31; Jude 6). Yet they are forced to pay Him homage. Men do not know Him, but they do. They recognise his holiness and his divinity. "Jesus rebuked him" (35)—not the man, but the demon. He foresaw how the homage of such beings might prejudice his work (xi. 15), so refused it. The spirit obeyed his command, but not without inflicting final torture upon the afflicted man. Yet see how Jesus controls the demon's power. He could throw the man down, but he could not hurt him (36). No wonder that the people were amazed (37). Of the greater victory over Satan in the wilderness they knew nothing, but such a display of power as this arrested their attention. They connected it with his "word," i.e., his teaching (Mark i. 27). We may share their wonder. To what terrible consequences sin leads! Judge what sin is, not by the attractiveness of its beginnings, but by what it is when it is finished (Jas. i. 14, 15). What a powerful Saviour is Jesus! Evils that completely overcome men are perfectly under his control (Heb. vii. 25).

Verses 38, 39.—The power of Jesus is next displayed in the home of Peter, where possibly Jesus took up his abode. Peter had become one of Jesus' followers (John i. 42). How soon his friendship with Jesus brought blessing to his household. Let every disciple seek to introduce Jesus into his home. Though Jesus honoured his home with his presence, sickness invaded it. Whatever blessing Christ brings He does not secure us immunity from affliction (John xv. 2; Heb. xii. 5-7). Though it was a fever-stricken home, Jesus entered it. Others might have shrunk from contact with such a patient: Jesus gladly enters where such are found. He is ever near in trouble. They besought Him (38).—Bodily affliction often leads us thus to Him in prayer. Be thankful for anything that makes you depend more fully on Christ. The healing is graphically described (39). "He stood over her," "touched her," "took her by the hand" (Matt. viii. 15; Mark i. 31). He thus came into direct contact with her. "He rebuked the fever" as he had rebuked the demon (35). Whether evil spirits, or bodily diseases, all are under his control. The healing was immediate and complete. Helpless and fever-stricken one moment; the next made whole, and ministering to others. Jesus is still doing the same work for our souls. We must be healed (Ps. ciii. 3) before we can minister; we must minister to Him and to his people when He has healed us.

Verses 40-44.—The fame of Jesus (37) had excited hopes among multitudes of sick ones who waited until "the sun was setting," when, without violating the Sabbath, they could be carried to Jesus (John v. 10). They came with "divers diseases," but none were beyond his power to heal. By laying on of hands He expressed his human sympathy and tenderness. The incident is typical of the power He now possesses to save all kinds of sinners. Upon the evil spirits He enjoined silence (41) as He had done in the synagogue (35). That after such a day of labour He should rise early (Mark i. 35) is a beautiful testimony to his very real dependence on God. His life (John vi. 57) and his power to speak to others (Isa. l. 4) were from God. How slow we are to learn the same lesson! His answer to the people's request (42-43) showed that He took his instructions not from them but from his Father. He recognised that He was sent, and that He must first fulfil the purpose for which God had sent Him. Neither the favour nor the frowns of the people could ever turn Him from his purpose.

How remarkable the contrast between the early enthusiasm of Capernaum and the after rejection over which Jesus lamented (Matt. xi. 23, 24)! Such privileges bring with them solemn responsibilities.

SUCCESSFUL VILLAGE WORK.

IT has been frequently pointed out that one of the neediest spheres for real, sustained evangelistic effort in our land is that presented by the country villages. It is altogether surprising the amount of sheer heathenism or dark indifference which is to be found in our own country places, and to which, too, much disregard is often paid by existing organisations. Where, however, thorough work is systematically and by consecrated workers carried on for the love of souls, revivals of a lasting nature are sure to be brought about.

Such has been the case in the village or district of Parbold, near Southport. Here, through the labours of several of God's children, sustained and systematised, but carried on in manifest dependence on God, there has been brought about, not only a revival, but a complete change in the aspect and character of the district. It is hardly too much to say that eighteen months ago a great number of people there were heathens, and not a few drunkards; now there is to be found amongst them such a band of bright, hopeful, humble Christians that to watch them is to have one's faith powerfully stimulated, and to know them, notwithstanding their lowly surroundings, is a real joy.

Moreover, they have amongst them provided no less a sum than £100 out of the £280 subscribed towards a commodious and comfortable undenominational hall, which has recently been opened. They are wanting £220 to pay off the contractor and free their building from debt. I have seen many efforts of the kind in various parts of England, but never a more real, deep, and soul-refreshing one than this, nor one on which the manifest seal of God's blessing more evidently rests.

C. STIDSTON-BROADBENT.

Home Lodge, Birkdale, Southport.

NOTTINGHAM TEMPERANCE MISSION.—Founded in 1877, this organisation has done a great work. The Mission-hall in Popham street, Narrow Marsh, is in the centre of a great number of common lodging-houses, largely frequented by tramps and the degraded in soul and body. Among these sadly needy people the Gospel is proclaimed by earnest workers connected with the Mission, and there are many visible signs of blessing having attended the efforts put forth. Every Sunday, Gospel services are held in thirty-four lodging-houses, and thus an average of 350 persons are reached. A strong Sunday-school and Band of Hope are prominent features of the work. The secretary is Mr. H. B. Armitage, Park Ravine, Nottingham.

The Book World.

BIBLE LIGHT FOR BIBLE READERS, edited by Rev. A. E. Brown, has some interesting features. In the March number there are some instructive meditations, also notes on prophecy. "God's Way of Peace," by Rev. H. A. Birks, and "The Purity of the Gospel History," by Rev. M. A. Dodds, are attractive contributions. (1d. Marshall Brothers.)

Consecration, edited by Rev. William Frith, is a monthly which deserves many readers. The March issue gives a portrait of Rev. H. R. Lovell, of Bromley, S.E. Rev. Thornley Smith continues his exposition of the Epistle to the Thessalonians. Among the other contents is a helpful article entited "Life Eternal," by Rev. C. Graham. (1d. Partridge & Co.)

THE APOCALYPSE, looked at as the final crisis of the age. By A Teacher amongst the Israel of God. Elliot Stock. An exposition on futurist lines, presenting some original features. The author has little patience with such as follow the historical method of interpretation. Bearing evidence of careful attention to the details, these suggestive pages will prove very interesting to students of prophecy.

Effingham Wilson & Co. have published a second edition of Mr. A. D. Lawrie's legal handbook, HOW TO APPEAL AGAINST YOUR RATES? Intended for residents in the Metropolis, the book gives forms and instructions in full.

The Church Missionary Society has published some useful pamphlets: NOTES ON CHINA AND ITS MISSIONS (3d.), and NOTES ON CEYLON (2d.), by Constance F. Gordon-Cumming; and THE STORY OF A MISSIONARY PENNY (1d.), by R. J. Irish. The last-named is a capital story for children.

THREE SERMONS ON APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION, THE CHRISTIAN PRIESTHOOD, AND THE REAL PRESENCE IN THE EUCHARIST. By Rev. Henry Batchelor. 3d. Weston-super-Mare: J. R. Walters & Co., High-street. These discourses are at once soundly Protestant and purely evangelical.

Some of the recent Protestant publications of Mr. John Kensit are: REVIVAL OF THE ROMAN MASS IN THE ENGLISH CHURCH (2d.), by J. Coley, M.A.; SACERDOTALISM: ITS REAL NATURE AND ESSENCE (1d.), by the late Rev. C. Shepheard-Walwyn; and ROMANISM SCRIPTURALLY ANALYSED (2d.), by John Gadsby.

A series of HUMANITY CARDS, issued by the Ladies' Midland Association for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals. They are published in four languages, are prettily illustrated, and are admirably suited for general distribution among young people. Copies may be had on application to Mrs. Barrow, Ampton-road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

SYNOPTIC TABLE AND EXPLANATION OF THREE OF THE MOST DIFFICULT CHAPTERS IN SCRIPTURE. Edited by Major-General Hoggan. (1s. Holness.) The chapters in question are Matt. xxiv., Mark xiii., and Luke xxi.; and the exposition will prove suggestive to students. The author is a pre-millennialist, with his heart and mind set upon understanding the Word of Truth.

CHRISTIAN GIVING. An address delivered before the Y.M.C.A., Newcastle-on-Tyne. By T. H. 7d. per dozen, post free. Bible and Tract Depot, Pilgrim-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne. An earnest plea for a periodical and systematic laying aside of money by the Lord's people for the Lord's work. Details are discussed in a very matter-of-fact manner, and the booklet is likely to prove practically useful.

Mr. J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, is making up bundles of pamphlets exposing Romish error. About two dozen in number, they constitute the "Protestant Truth Packet," which is sold for half-a-crown. Some of the pamphlets are deserving of wide-spread circulation, in view of the unremitting endeavours of the friends of Rome to uproot evangelical religion and undo the work of the Reformation.

Rev. C. Musgrave Brown has written two helpful booklets: THE SECRET OF DIVINE POWER, or Jehovah's Pentecostal Message to the Church of the XIX. Century; and THE TRUE TEACHING OF FASTING, or Jehovah's Lenten Call to the Churches of the XIX. Century. The teaching is essentially practical in bearing, and presented with cogency and force. (6d. per doz. Marshall Bros.)

SICK-DIET AND APPLICATIONS. By F. W. Cory, M.R.C.S. 1d. Bournemouth: Jarvis & Co. A pamphlet for every home, containing a selection of the most useful preparations required in cases of illness. To people of small means the information should be very welcome, as, by acting upon the instructions given, heavy doctors' bills will often be rendered needless. District visitors might well carry some of these little helps with them on their tract-distributing rounds.

A recent issue of the "New Biographical Series" (1d. Religious Tract Society) is devoted to CHARLES SIMEON, OF CAMBRIDGE. It is an admirable sketch of a man whose career is worthy of the close study of Christian workers. The author, Rev. Horace Noel, is to be congratulated upon compressing so much that is interesting and instructive into such a narrow compass. The latest issue of the series is devoted to Rear-Admiral Sir W. Edward Parry, of Arctic Exploration fame. It is from the facile pen of Dr. Macaulay.

WHATSOEVER THY HAND FINDETH TO DO, DO IT WITH THY MIGHT.—ECCLES. ix. 10.

MORLEY HOME,

FOR WORN-OUT GOVERNESSES, NEEDLEWOMEN & SERVANTS.

25, CHATHAM PLACE, HACKNEY, N.E.

BELOVED FRIENDS, February 20, 1890.

Again it is my privilege to appeal to you on behalf of the BUILDING FUND of the above Institution, to receive ONE HUNDRED Inmates.

After prayerfully watching the leadings of Divine Providence, I am thankful to report some progress has been made, which inspires continued "faith" in Him to whom all power belongs.

The Rev. C. H. SPURGEON at the commencement said, "You will want a Mint of Faith to bring in a Mint of Money." Since then, Faith has grown to these dimensions; and now I ask for £24,000 for the erection of such an Institution as sketched below.

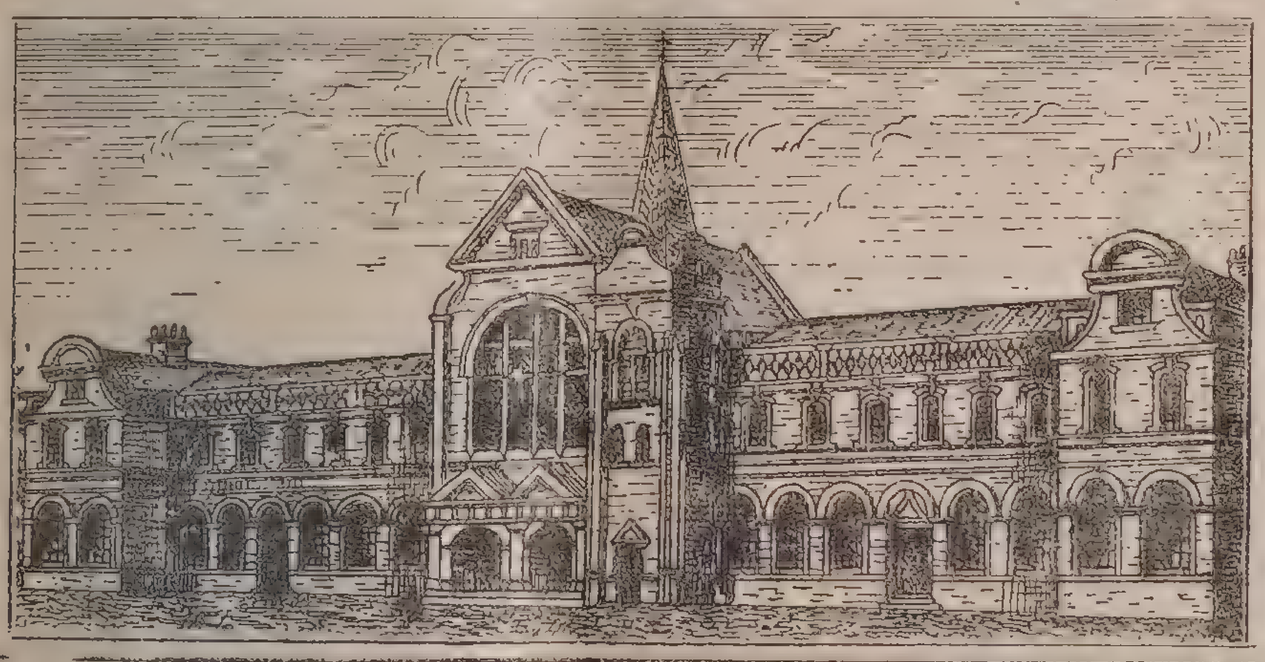
This amount the Lord Bishop of Bedford, then Rector of Spitalfields, suggested might be required. His Lordship also very kindly said he believed if I made the attempt I should succeed.

Beloved friends, it would be You, not I: the work to be done is not mine, but yours. I am powerless; but you can carry out. May I ask your kind aid?

As a grateful recognition to generous donors of £1,000, such contributors would be entitled to nominate three deserving cases free for life, when the building has been erected; such cases to be subject to approval by the Committee.

Contributions will be kindly received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; or may be sent to F. A. BEVAN, Esq., Treasurer, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Believe me, Dear Friends, ever gratefully yours,
ELIZABETH COALES (Psa. lxiii. 7).



HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,

LONDON, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent Appeal for IMMEDIATE HELP:

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have also a large number of young women to look after, who have passed through, and are doing well in situations, but who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five shillings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

Subscriptions received by MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

REV. DR. WRIGHT, editorial secretary of the British and foreign Bible Society, sailed on Wednesday, last week, for China, on a mission in connection with the Society. He is accompanied by Mrs. Wright, and expects to be absent about five or six months, returning viâ America.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—There was a large attendance of Jews, and sympathising friends, at the anniversary meeting held on Monday evening in Albion Hall, Albion-place, London-wall, E.C. Preb. Gordon Calthrop presided, and addresses in German and English were delivered by several Christian workers whose hearts yearn for the salvation of Israel. The attention with which the earnest and faithful words were received was encouraging in the extreme, and it was very pleasing to learn that the weekly meetings on Saturday afternoons, are numerously attended. As of old, Christ crucified is still a stumbling block to the Jews. Yet when God gives a hearing ear, it is not unreasonable to expect a heart softened to receive Divine truth. This is the present joy and confidence of the missionary, Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, and his devoted wife.

League of Kindness.—A branch has recently been started to help the poor in the large and densely populated parish of St. Paul's, Walworth, S.E., by supplying suitable clothing at a nominal sum, and also to try and bring a little sunshine into the lives of the children. Anyone wishing to know further particulars is requested to communicate with Miss E. J. Young, The Mansions, Bournemouth, enclosing a stamped envelope.

RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1890.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

MR. MOODY ON "DANCING CHRISTIANS."—Mr. Moody was lately asked by a Canadian interviewer, "What is your experience with professing Christians who dance? Are they among your best workers?" "That kind of Christian is not the most aggressive worker. The best way to deal with this question is to give the people something better, and then the whole world will go of itself. I would just as soon go out in the street and eat mud as dance. I have no taste for it. Anything that compromises our influences should be given up. If you can dance and go to the theatre for the glory of God—why, go!"

Mr. William Forbes closed an eight days' Gospel temperance mission on Sunday last at Fuller's Hall, Portsmouth. A considerable number of pledges were taken.

"This is the way we wash our hands, wash our hands, wash our hands,
This is the way we wash our hands, with PEARS' SOAP in the morning."

"Beautifully illustrated. This Almanack is one that can be placed on the wall of any living-room."—St. John's Wood Advertiser.

"The Christian"

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

By JOHN FOXE.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Cloth boards, 10s. 6d.
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book. . . . Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

"It is a most masterly exposure of what Popery really is; and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no favour wherever FOXE'S MARTYRS is studied."—Christian Progress.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED AND IMPROVED.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive Christianity; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of Romanism: Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the Early Christians at Rome.

WITH SEVENTY SMALL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations. The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. Scott has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. Scott has something to tell, and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."—Irish Congregational Magazine, March, 1889.

"Most people have heard of these famous CATACOMBS; but nowhere have we met with a more graphic or instructive account of their contents than in this book. The many wood engravings help to make the whole thing quite plain. We advise our young ministers, or more educated Sunday-school teachers, to study this volume."
General Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

GALVANIC BELTS

FOR the CURE of NERVOUS DISEASES

HAVE RECEIVED TESTIMONIALS from over

FIFTY MEMBERS of the ROYAL COLLEGE of PHYSICIANS of LONDON, including

THREE PHYSICIANS to HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. RHEUMATISM.

The Retreat, Wellington, Somerset, 13th February, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I am thankful to be able to state that I have received great benefit from your Galvanic Belt for Rheumatism. The pain I complained of has nearly passed away, and the weariness after walking has quite passed off. I can now walk seven or eight miles without fatigue, and my average walking is about five or six miles every day. I am also glad to report a considerable improvement in my spirits and general health.—Yours very truly, D. J. BLIN.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. PAIN in the BACK and INFLUENZA.

53, Beresford-road, Oxton, Birkenhead, February 5, 1890.

Dear Sirs,—Last Thursday I was bad all day with lumbago after an attack of Influenza. I put on your Galvanic Body Belt round the waist, and on Saturday night I was able to leave it off altogether, as the pain was entirely gone.

I lent my Belt to our minister, who was suffering in the same manner, and a friend of mine at Tranmere got so much benefit from it that he sent to you for one of your Belts for his own use.—Yours faithfully, H. HOPE.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUSNESS and DEBILITY.

349, Dumbarton-road, Partick, February 3, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I purchased your Galvanic Combined Band, according to your advice, and you will be pleased to hear of the great benefit I have derived from it. The nervousness I suffered from has entirely disappeared, and I have enjoyed better health this last few months than I have done for many years previously. I feel thankful to God for my recovery, and to you for the means which has restored me to health and strength again, and I shall always consider it my duty to recommend your treatment to those who suffer from nervous weakness.—Yours truly, A. MUNRO.

J. L. Pulvermacher, Esq., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION and SPASMS in the STOMACH.

Langley, near Macclesfield, 3rd February, 1890.

Gentlemen,—I have been a great sufferer for a considerable length of time from indigestion and spasms in the pit of the stomach and bowels, but since wearing your Electric Belt the result has been wonderful. I have now a good appetite and can eat anything without the least pain; also the spasms in the stomach and bowels have quite left me. I write these few lines trusting you will place them in your list of testimonials, that other sufferers may read and benefit by your treatment. —Yours truly, J. WARDLE.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptons of premature waste and decay.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF PHTHISIS at STOKE FERRY.

This is the case of a young woman named SARAH COKER—who was at the time in the service of Mrs. HEWITT, of HILL FARM, BARTON, BENDISH, STOKE FERRY. Her mistress corresponded with me on her behalf. Her lungs were described as in a terrible condition. Her cough was severe, with green expectoration. Her recovery was complete. Mrs. H. remarks that several doctors had attended her, and had expressed great astonishment at the healing of her lungs. Writing me in July last, Mrs. H. says: "You are quite at liberty to publish the case if you think fit. She has married and has a child, and is living at North Delph, near Downham, Norfolk. Her lungs are well now."

PULMONARY WEAKNESS with DYSPEPSIA.

Mr. G. E., a young farmer near HALESWORTH, Suffolk, came to Coombe Lodge, March 19 last. He had taken a severe cold five months before, which had been neglected, and was followed by constant cough and dyspnœa, and constant pain at the apex of the lungs. In addition to the extreme difficulty of breathing, he suffered much from the many symptoms of indigestion. For these he was advised. May 21, he writes:—"It gives me great pleasure to tell you what benefit I have received. I can now do a day's work without feeling weak at all." I had a letter from the brother of the patient, Oct. 7th, in which he says: "My brother is quite a different young man to what he was before commencing with your treatment."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

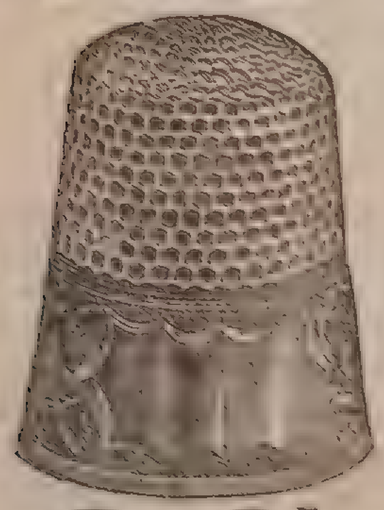
THE "DORCAS" THIMBLE.



2s. 6d.

(Horner's Patent.)

STERLING SILVER.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these almost indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer [illegible] silver, and the intermediate Steel; these three are all struck up together, forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

UNION HALL MISSION.

TWO HUNDRED POUNDS IS NEEDED IMMEDIATELY,

In order to meet present expenses and to close the financial year FREE FROM DEBT.

SOME OF THE AGENCIES EMPLOYED BY THE MISSION ARE :—

The plain and simple preaching of the Gospel of God's grace in several Mission Halls in some of the most destitute localities of this great city.

Visiting the poor, sick, and dying, by our missionaries and friends.

Tent services during the Summer, and open air preaching continually.

Bible-carriage work, and the free distribution of Gospel literature.

Sunday-school work and children's services.

In each branch of the work there have been very manifest tokens of the Lord's blessing during the past year.

Many generous contributors have lately been called to their rest, and I earnestly invite Christian friends to come forward and take their places, that this important work, which has been so abundantly blessed of God through the past Thirty Years, may not be hindered for lack of funds.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be received by Messrs. FULLER, BANBURY & Co. (Bankers), 77, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.; or, if sent direct to me, will be gratefully acknowledged immediately.

ROBERT BILKE,
Abergeldie, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, London, N.W.

N.B.—The 30th Annual Meeting will be held (D.V.) at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, March 20; ROBERT PATON, Esq., in the chair. Several well-known servants of Christ will address the gatherings, at 4 and 7.30. Tea at 6 o'clock. All friends invited.

WORK AMONGST MEN

THERE are large bodies of men among the myriads of toilers in our metropolis who entirely neglect public worship.

Left to themselves, these masses of men become unchristianised, infidel and depraved, adding largely to the dangerous classes.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

in addition to its 393 Missionaries on ordinary districts, by its staff of 105 special and well-qualified Missionaries, is bringing large numbers of these men under the upraising influence of the Gospel of Christ.

Last year 72,827 visits were paid to poor Foreigners in our City, and 1,049 religious services were held for them in their various languages.

In upwards of 10,000 public-houses, quite 200,000 persons were reasoned with upon religion and temperance. Upwards of 85,000 factory people were instructed in the Gospel, and many attended the 1,782 meetings held for their benefit.

The Sabbathless tram-car, omnibus, and railway-men received upwards of 200,000 visits in the public ways, at the stations, and in their homes.

The known results of this earnest seeking to save the lost is most satisfactory. Tens of thousands have been rightly influenced, and during the past year, 486 communicants have been won from amongst them, hundreds of drunkards have been reformed, and many thousands who have sunk back from the hard struggle of life have, in the time of sickness and approaching death, received consolation.

To support and extend this great work for the Lord Jesus, large funds are urgently needed. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.; or by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

For the Daughters of Friends and others. Conducted by L. M. and H. LAWRENCE. The school is periodically examined, both personally and by correspondence, by John Lawrence, M.A. London (Branches I. and IV.) A Parisian Governess resides in the house. Visiting Masters attend.

MANY CHRISTIAN PARENTS, who at the present time are seeking a School at which to place their Sons, are invited to write to the undermentioned, who is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMAN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, where the constant aim of the Principal is to train those committed to his care in the fear of the Lord; and by the power of Gospel teaching maintain a Christian tone among the boys, combining this with a thorough and first-class Education.

The Premises are advantageously situated upon HIGH GROUND, NEAR and WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA, on the South Coast, a short run from London, and afford especial facilities for outdoor recreation.

Prospectus and Papers of Examinations passed and honours gained will be forwarded on application. Several of the Vice-Chancellors have appointed their Wards as Pupils to the School. Terms moderate.
Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

OLD MARGARET: OR, A SAINT AT LAST.

BY

Rev. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

WITH STRIKING PORTRAIT.

In Tinted Covers, 6d.;
Cloth Boards, 1s.

"The significance of Dr. Cumming's narrative lies in the fact that, after sixty years in the midst of degradation, this poor woman became one of the most gentle and refined Christian ladies the Doctor has ever known; and after reading his sketch it is impossible to doubt his testimony. We do not know that we have ever read a more impressive story of its class, one so free from the slightest taint of the artificial, so genuine in every line of the picture. The sketch is accompanied by what we can well believe to be a strikingly faithful portrait.—Glasgow Daily Mail, February 3, 1890.

"A narrative taken from real life, and given to us in a very felicitous manner by the descriptive pen of Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow. Dr. Cumming is well known to the religious public as one of the most attractive speakers at the Keswick Convention; and he uses the incidents, here so thrillingly sketched, of the experiences in the heart and life of a very remarkable woman to set before his readers the nature of sanctification and complete consecration. The whole picture is drawn by the hand of a master, and cannot fail in many ways to give great interest to the reader."
Dublin Evening Mail, Jan. 15, 1890.

"Dr. Cumming has given a most interesting little sketch of a very remarkable life. To those who knew the dear old woman no recommendation is needed. They will laugh and cry by turns as they read the humorous and pathetic incidents which the story tells: and others cannot fail to be interested in it. . . . Dr. Cumming has given us a most delightful little memoir."—Life of Faith, February, 1890.

"Old Margaret's faith and living testimony are spoken of from the evidence of those who saw her constantly. Our readers will find her story a remarkably stimulating one, and they will have the advantage of learning from one who is well known as a spiritual teacher, what this higher life teaching really is. We need say nothing as to the author's power of description, but the literary grace of the narrative is such as one seldom meets with."—Perthshire Advertiser, February 3, 1890.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON: A DEVOTED LIFE.

WITH MEZZOTYPE PORTRAIT.

BY

Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON,

Author of "Henry Moorhouse"; "Duncan Matheson"; "The Christian Hero"; "Revival and Revival Work."

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A biography specially to be read by all Christian women. The record of Miss Macpherson's holy life and example will, we trust, prove a stimulus to many."
British Messenger, February, 1890.

"In its subject and in execution this biography is of no common order. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life, a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. . . . The sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."—Cambridge Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

"The story of this noble and earnest life is told in a way which carries the reader through the book without for a minute producing weariness. The great business of soul-saving was Miss Macpherson's life study. Think of conversing with twenty thousand persons one by one; and read the success which attended her efforts. And if you are desponding in your work it will nerve you: if you are engaged in bringing lost ones home, it will stimulate you."—Baptist Messenger, January, 1890.

"When we have the lives of Christian heroes written about with the same interest as other heroes, then we may hope that our young people will like to read the books delineating the trials, struggles, triumphs, and character of the heroes as readily as they now read the books of heroes in carnal strife. . . . This book sets forth the labours of one of the truest and noblest of women. It ought to be in every Sunday-school library and every family."—Christian Commonwealth, December 26, 1889.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of perusing. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting work."
Irish Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION
TO DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

CRITICAL STATE OF FINANCES.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

Dear Friends,

We have the pleasure to announce that some £800 has come to hand, mostly from readers of The Christian, towards clearing off the deficit of £1,500 which must be obtained at once in connection with the Discharged Prisoners' branch of the above Mission.

An anonymous lady has most kindly offered £50 on condition that the remaining £650 is subscribed before the end of March.

We would urgently plead with the Lord's stewards for this amount, that we may not be compelled to close any of our premises or curtail the work, which should be further extended rather than otherwise.

Donations will be most thankfully acknowledged if sent to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn; or to myself, at 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Yours sincerely,

GEORGE HATTON,

Superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

Owing to the rent difficulty in Ireland, and the depreciation in the value of land, a large number of Irish ladies who depend for their support on the proceeds of Irish property, have been rendered absolutely destitute.

To alleviate in some measure the sufferings of these ladies, the above Fund has been established, and assistance is given independently of any question of politics or religion.

The methods adopted are the following:—

(1) Employment is provided for those able to work.

(2) Pecuniary assistance is given to those who, through age or infirmity, are unable to help themselves.

(3) In some cases, the education of children is paid for.

(4) Medical attendance is provided for the sick.

Funds are most urgently needed to carry on the work already undertaken, and the Committee trust and believe that the patiently-borne sorrows and sufferings of their Irish sisters will touch the hearts of all, and that this will be proved by the generous response given to this appeal.

That many ladies had entered the Workhouse in assumed names testifies to the intensity of their sufferings.

A register of governesses, companions, nurses, &c., is kept.

A Depôt is opened at 66, South Audley-street, for the sale of the work of these ladies, many articles being suitable for presents and for bazaars, and orders are gratefully received for trousseaux, layettes, embroideries, smocking, marking, and for under-linen (ladies may supply their own materials), gentlemen's shirts, hand-knitted socks and stockings, clothing for the poor.

The Committee will be grateful for gifts of clothing, boots, and blankets.

The Charity does not employ collectors.

The following are on Sale at the Depôt for the benefit of the Fund:—"Sketches in Sunny Climes," by G. Gumbleton, D.C.L.; "The Elma Valse," by S. E. Vertue.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be gratefully received by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, at the Mansion House; by the Bank of England, either in London or at the Country Branches; by Messrs. Barclay, Ransom & Co., 1, Pall-mall East, S.W., or 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; by the National Provincial Bank of England, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., and all its Branches; by Messrs. SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White.

Note.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

 All friends are kindly asked to send in their Subscriptions, Donations, and Collections with as little delay as possible, as the Accounts for the year are about to be closed.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 21,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity, arising from the recent Dock Labourers' Strike and other causes; and from present appearances an unusually severe season is most certainly apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary; or Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the Editors of "The Christian."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of Mrs. Osborn, late of Cape Town.

We have received a number of communications relative to the two Bible Societies, including one by Dr. Wright on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society, just before his departure for China. It is impossible for us to devote space to a voluminous correspondence; nor is it necessary. The real points at issue lie in a small compass. If our suggestion that some friends of each society should, by meeting or by correspondence, endeavour to settle this "deplorable controversy," be not carried out, we will, in an early number, endeavour to state the case as presented by either side, that our readers may judge for themselves.

In a lecture recently delivered at the London Institution by Mr. Scott Keltie, the Librarian of the Royal Geographical Society, it was stated that the Empire of England now covers over ten million square miles, or nearly three times the size of Europe. The population of the Empire is estimated at 350,000,000. What a mighty responsibility does this great expansion of dominion put upon England in the direction of missionary effort.

Lord Archibald Douglas, having renounced the Protestant faith, has settled in his native county of Dumfries as a Roman Catholic priest. In a pamphlet which he has put into circulation, he answers the question, "Why am I a Roman Catholic?" One of his great arguments takes this form:—No Protestant denomination professes to be the sole and infallible guide in matters of religious faith; the Papacy claims this position, and its functions; therefore, the Pope is Christ's viceroy, ruling and teaching the nations by supreme authority! When gratuitous assumption shall have the full value of complete demonstration, the various "proofs" presented by Lord Archibald Douglas will be something worth, but not before. In the meantime it is well that he should know that enlightened Protestants are not so much exercised as to visible church association as they are to being vitally connected with the Lord Christ, who is the Head of "the Church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven."

In another pamphlet, entitled "A Voice of One crying in the Desert," Lord Archibald Douglas shows an ignorance of the evangelical faith which almost matches his singular statements regarding Romanism. In face of the facts of history, and despite the well-known teaching of many Popish writers, he tells us that the Roman Catholic Church "upholds the Bible in its entirety," and "hates" priestcraft and Mariolatry! Lord Archibald asks Protestants how they "can pin their belief to the decision of a Church which does not claim to be infallible." Now, Christ imposes no such task upon his disciples; if He had, we should all have been in bad case to-day! Rather, Christ demands that we "pin our belief" to Himself, our Lord and Master. We trust that the people of Annandale and Eskdale have been too well instructed in Holy Writ to be caught in the net which is now spread to enclose them in the Church of Rome.

In an interesting paper in The Missionary Review, Rev. James Johnston calls attention to the striking fact that during the century which ended in 1886 the members of the Protestant Churches of the world had increased from 37 millions to nearly 137 millions, while the heathen and Mohammedan population had increased only from 960 millions to 1,313 millions. "This in itself is remarkable. When Mr. Johnston points out that the gain has been not only in numbers, but also greater far in learning, and science, and wealth, and power," we begin to see how the obligation to Christianise these heathen millions presses upon us.

Mr. Joseph Thomson's article on "The Results of European Intercourse with the African" in the March Contemporary Review will strengthen the hands of the British representatives at the International Conference now sitting in Brussels. The importation of ardent spirits is producing results even more appalling than many philanthropists have pictured. Our own merchants, says Mr. Thomson, through the trade of gin and rum are spreading ravages of demoralisation that ought to clothe us in sackcloth and ashes. European intercourse along the West Coast, and over the whole of East Central Africa, spite of missionary efforts, has been an unmitigated curse. The warehouses along the coast are filled with gin; the air seems to reek with it, and every hut is redolent of its fumes. To walk through the squalor and vice of a village is like a horrible nightmare. Women and children even are calling out for gin, and all is besotment and fiendish debauch. This awful witness is from one who has seen it all, and ought profoundly to affect the Church of God.

The late Lady Kinnaird was one who found private prayer to be a channel of strength in enabling her to carry on her Christian work, and to be at the same time "a true mother to her household." The secret of her devotion and success is found when we learn from her biographer, Dr. Fraser, that she "spent one or two hours every day alone with God, and came to her public engagements from the footstool of his throne of grace."

The priceless parable of the Prodigal Son has been employed by preachers of the broad school of theology to support the theory that forgiveness of sins is by the free, spontaneous mercy of God, and not on the ground of an atonement made for them. Dr. Dale has recently preached a very powerful sermon, which confutes this notion. He rebukes the shallow theology which would find in a single parable all the essential truths relating to the remission of sin. If the parable does not directly teach atonement, it is because He spake it who made the atonement.

On the recent action of the English Government in the matter of Portuguese proceedings in Africa, The Free Church Monthly for March has the following:—

> In the Missions Catholiques of Lyons, we learn, no secret was made of the fact that Cardinal Lavigerie had made arrangements with the King of Portugal to occupy what were called "the Portuguese provinces of the Shiré and Nyassa." Under these arrangements Romish missionaries would have been armed with powers and privileges partly from Rome and partly from Lisbon, and the result would have been interference of the most intolerable kind with Protestant work in the whole region.

A communication in the same journal from Rev. A. Drummond Paterson, of Lisbon, says the archbishop of that city is the chairman of a committee to provide ironclads, &c., to make war upon Britain, and that Catholicism has all its evil tendencies overgrown in Lisbon, and the good reduced to a lower minimum than in any other European Catholic country. Not one man in twenty of the Portuguese can read, and of women not one in fifty. We can hardly wonder that a schoolmaster should suggest that "HATRED TO ENGLAND" should be the motto in every school. The Portuguese question, like many others of our times, very much resolves itself into an anti-Protestant question.

The threatened strikes in the coal and iron-fields of the North again bring to the front the necessity for the establishment of a Court of Conciliation with ample powers to arbitrate in disputes between labour and capital. In Dublin a conference of the kind has been sitting for some time, a large strike in the building trade will probably be averted and terms agreed on in regard to hours of labour, wages, and meal-hours. It has been decided to form a permanent Trade Committee of Conciliation of five employers and five workmen. This is a step in the right direction, and we trust the example will be followed elsewhere.

The programme of the Labour Conference, which the Emperor of Germany proposes to hold at Berlin, shows a due appreciation of the main questions which affect the working classes in many European countries. Among the subjects to be discussed are the regulation of the work of women and children, and the question of Sunday labour. Aiming high, the Emperor has incurred the hostile criticism of some who do not realise the enormity of the wrong and oppression which has so long been endured by workers in some lands. It may be that the political economist has reason for his dictum that classes, like individuals, must look after themselves; but, nevertheless, a higher law enjoins that the strong must bear the burdens of the weak. The Emperor's proposal, as a first measure to collect information on the great subject of labour, is a thousand times to be preferred before the policy which would look on while social distinctions head up to the inevitable explosion of exasperated discontent.

We regret to hear that the fund for sustaining Mr. Thorne's mission work is exhausted. The Secretary, Thorne Mission Fund, Exeter Hall, will be thankful for the co-operation of Christian friends. Testimonies to the usefulness of Mr. Thorne's work are continually received.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, in a recent sermon, made some severe strictures as to the music-halls of Manchester:—

> Many of these places are attached to public-houses, and there are also a large number not attached to public-houses that have drink sold in them. In many of these places songs are sung that are indecent openly and unmistakably, with all sorts of indecent suggestions and gestures...Not alone is drink supplied in them, but facilities are given and every opportunity to inflame the human passions.

Surely this matter is one for the attention of the entire Christian community, and the sooner it is dealt with the better.

Sheridan spoke of "that which always did and always must corrupt and degrade the human heart—despotic power." The pride which it engendered brought Nebuchadnezzar to the beasts. The Czar of Russia is the unhappy inheritor, in name at least, of this fateful form of rule. We are far from believing him capable of countenancing the inhuman atrocities committed under his Government; but the latest story of the fiendish cruelty committed in his name is enough to overwhelm him with grief, and shame, and anger.

The story told by The Times of the brutalities inflicted upon refined and cultured women, the suicides of prisoners of both sexes, preceded by that most terrible of all strikes, "a hunger-strike," by women, three times repeated, is one of the most revolting to humanity, and one of the most degrading to a Government, that history records. We have very briefly summarised the facts on p. 11.

The Romish apostasy claims despotic dominion over the bodies and souls of men. Our forefathers, having drunk deeply of the bitter cup of persecution, her devilish cruelties to her victims, the prison, the torture, and the stake, wisely forbade her votaries from holding high offices of State. For a Roman Catholic is virtually and necessarily in the position of an alien. His loyalty is due first to the Pope, and to all the interests of that heathen religion, and afterwards to the Queen.

It is now proposed, however, to legalise the tenure by Papists of the offices of Lord Chancellor of England and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. And a Christian paper, of ultra-"Liberal" views, says, "Instead of regretting the steps which have been taken to remove Roman Catholic disabilities, let us sweep away every vestige of religious bigotry and political intolerance which still pollutes our statute book." Do those laws pollute our statute book which protect ourselves and our children from the Inquisition, the torture chamber, and the stake? from the tender mercies of the murderess, and the harlot, who boasts that she is always the same? This travesty of liberty is pilloried by Tennyson in one of the finest lines in English poetry:—

> Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name.

Let us give freedom to the tyrant to enslave ourselves! Let out the girls held fast in English and Irish convent prisons—uninspected to our national disgrace—and hear whether they wish further liberty to Rome.

Gethsemane and Calvary.

A bad habit has grown up of late years—that of Christians applying to themselves terms which belong exclusively to their Lord. "Thou art my beloved Son, in Thee I am well pleased," is the Father's testimony to his Only-begotten Son, and cannot be quoted of any creature without depleting the words of God of their spirit and life.

"The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in Me" is a declaration of infinite value to us, when spoken by the Captain of our salvation, who fought the field alone, and of the people there was none with Him; but they are an inflated and untruthful boast in the lips of any pardoned sinner, however blameless his life may be.

When God said, "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the Man that is my Fellow," He spoke of the atoning death of Him who thought it not robbery to be equal with God. No man but He can be Jehovah's Fellow.

Some good men for whom we have great respect have spoken of Gethsemane and Calvary as though they themselves and those whom they addressed could participate in the experiences which those names commemorate. Those holy places are sacred to Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God, our Redeemer: Gethsemane no less than Calvary. It has been said that the martyr who suffers calmly at the stake has already suffered in spirit in lonely fellowship with God: Gethsemane was the anticipation of Calvary.

On the cross "He, his own self, bare our sins in his own body on the tree." There He "put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." There He cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?...I am a worm and no man, a reproach of men and despised of the people." There, God-forsaken, He thirsted, with a thirst no other being ever knew, for that lost fellowship with God which was his life. There the last human tie was severed, when He said, "Son, behold thy mother!" "Woman, behold thy son." There literally his heart was broken, and from his pierced side came there out blood and water. Calvary belongs to none but Him. For "He looked and there was no man: He wondered that there was no intercessor. Then his own arm brought salvation unto Him, and his righteousness, it sustained Him." No prophet ever claimed to have been wounded for our transgressions: no apostle claimed to have suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. Calvary is fenced off from all mankind as the battle-ground where "Jesus Only" "through death destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

And Gethsemane was the foretaste of Calvary. It was the dark shadow of that deepest cloud—the wrath of God. He feared as He entered into the cloud. He told his friends, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death." But they could not understand or sympathise, and while, withdrawn from them, his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground, they slept.

They had feared as they entered into the cloud on the holy mount, where they saw in vision the glory of his person and of his coming kingdom; but they were not called to enter into the cloud of his agonising sorrow in Gethsemane, when "He offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears, and was heard in that He feared. Though He was Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered: and, being perfected, He became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him; declared of God a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec"—"King of Righteousness and King of Peace."

Gethsemane belongs to Him alone. Let us reverently gaze—if we can gaze—on that great sight, in presence of whose foreshadowing Moses trembled and durst not behold. "Put off thy shoes from thy feet: for the place where thou standest is holy ground. I have seen, I have seen, the affliction of my people,...and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them." Just as the burning bush was God's domain—"the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob"—so that spot in Gethsemane, a stone's cast from the disciples sleeping for sorrow, is the possession solely of Jehovah Jesus. His "affliction" cannot be slept away; his "groaning" is heard in heaven if not on earth; for it is the affliction and the groaning of mankind transferred to Him who cried in Jeremiah's Lamentations, "Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto Me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted Me in the day of his fierce anger."

Nothing is gained, but very much is lost, when the words in which the Father or the Spirit speaks of the incarnate Son, or in which He speaks of Himself, are degraded to the comparatively low level of even the highest experience of his most devoted disciples.

Preaching the Kingdom of God.

By JAMES VAN SOMMER.*

II.

ET us next trace how the Kingdom of od was preached, or proclaimed, by the postles. I will refer to three discourses; ne to Jews, another to Latins, and the ird to Greeks.

Observe first, Peter's preaching in Acts ii. fter stating the facts, and connecting them ith the prophecy in Ps. xvi., he declared at God hath made that same Jesus, whom e have crucified, both "Lord" and "Christ" -words, which to the audience then assemled, would express far more than to Gentile earers. The word "Lord" would bring efore a Jew Ps. cx., with its wonderful ontents—

> The word of Jehovah—David's Lord—the dignity of Adonai's seat—enemies to be placed at his feet—his rod of power—out of Zion—ruler in the midst of enemies—the day of thy power—the people—their offering with worship—the oath—the "priest for ever" after the order of Melchizedek—a new order of priesthood, &c.†

This, though as yet imperfectly entered to by the Jew, was enough to pierce him his heart, when he heard that he had ucified "Him."

"Christ" would bring Ps. ii. before a ewish hearer. The state of things at erusalem had been exactly foretold in his vn Scriptures. The authorities, Roman d Jewish, had taken counsel together; d this counsel now proves to be against hovah and His Anointed.

> But He that dwelleth in Heaven had set Him on his holy hill of Zion—"My King"—"My Son" yet were they mercifully invited to the kiss of conciliation, warned if they resisted, promised essing if they submitted.

The Kingdom throughout. And they had ucified One who was not a blasphemer, but e Lord of the Kingdom, the Son of God, no had come to deliver, to rule, to reign, bless—the Lord of the Glory. No wonder ey cried, "What shall we do?" In these ys some would perhaps have replied, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; the ood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from sin." All true—yet not all the truth. e Apostles were not always saying, Believe" and "Believe," although they plied it. Used or not, it is not narrated this model sermon that the word "beve" was used at all. The stirring swer is, "Repent ye, and be baptized ery one of you in the name of Jesus rist." "Repent": Change your mind, ange your conduct, seek a change of art. Be sorry for the wrong condition of nd, be sorry for the sinful conduct, and hard heart. "Be baptized."

Nevertheless, whilst fully accepting the dinance of baptism in water, these words ould not be limited to the sign, but should brace the thing signified. They mean, in stance, "Become the disciples and adherents of Christ." Baptism, in its elementary signification, is the outward expression of discipleship.

They were to repent and become disciples of the Lord Jesus, and that with reference to their obtaining two particularised blessings—the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit.

These twofold promises are not blessings to be ever hoped for as unreceived, but they are blessings actually conferred upon, and imparted to, the believer. They become facts—truthful, existing facts—to be believed. Repenting sinners, who become disciples of Christ, should be so taught, and should so believe. Unless they are thus instructed and do so believe, there will be no stability, for their feet are not touching rock. A confused state of mind will exist—a common condition of many. They are instructed to be ever seeking that which they already possess. Lest we should presume, some present the forgiveness of sins as a future hope only. Others again earnestly exhort their hearers to seek the gift of the Holy Spirit, when, having, as believers, received Him, what we need is, his continuous operation—the fulfilment of his special functions. It is said (John vii. 39), "This spake He of the Spirit, which they that had believed on Him were to receive," after Jesus was glorified. And the Apostle Peter, after Christ had entered into his glory, assured his hearers that, on repentance and discipleship, they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost (Acts ii. 38).*

There is no uncertainty in such words, and they show, as already remarked, that the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit are, to the believer, present blessings, accomplished facts. Such truths, when believed, impart a certainty to the Christian, most needful for his soul's health, progress, rest, sanctification, and joy.

The promise of the Holy Spirit, as thus presented, corresponds, and in its order agrees with Acts xix. There were at Ephesus certain disciples, not yet disciples of Christ, but of John; persons, therefore, who desired to flee from the wrath to come, who were in a repentant state of mind, and were leading a corresponding life. But they had not received the Holy Spirit. They had, indeed, believed the doctrine of John, who preached repentance and pointed to a Saviour who was to come. But now the Saviour had come, had finished his work on earth for us, and had received the promise of the Father; and they were to trust in Him. He would baptize them in the Holy Spirit. Hearing this, they were baptized in water into the name of the "Lord Jesus." They were ready to become, and did now become, his disciples and followers. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them—although blessed before, through the Holy Spirit's convicting power, yet—being contrite sinners, and now also disciples of Christ, the Holy Spirit came on them; manifesting, in their case, the invisible reality, by signs of the same character as at the beginning of the Church.

Consider, also, Peter's preaching to Cornelius and his friends (Acts x.). They were residing in Cæsarea, and were acquainted to some extent with recent events. Peter then touches on the facts already known, and supplies further information. He speaks of God preaching peace by Jesus Chaist, adding, "He is Lord of all." Words which a Roman centurion, even if he had not yet seen the Old Testament Scriptures, yet, living in the days of Rome's despotic emperors, would enter into perhaps better than we ourselves, who are living in days when the principle of rule by the people, as well as for the people (the body resting on feet part of iron and part of clay, therefore partly strong and partly brittle), is rising on all sides.

Peter further opens his commission that the Apostles were charged—

> To preach, and to testify, that this is He which is ordained of God the Judge of quick and dead; and that to Him bear all the prophets witness that through his name every one that believeth on Him shall receive remission of sins.

While thus speaking, the Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the Word.

It will be seen that Peter's discourse was not limited to preaching peace, but that it embraced these truths—that Christ is "Lord of all," and will be "Judge" of all the inhabitants of the earth, whether they have died or whether they are alive.

The reader will observe how this Psalm harises with Luke xxiv. 26, Acts iii. 13, and l. ii. 6-11. Christ, the second Man, the self-ying and Obedient One, has been meritoriously ified. As having been obedient unto death, the death of the cross, He was exalted, and s the Lordship of the Universe. The Gospel y viewed is not simply a glorious Gospel, which ourse it is in all particulars, but it is specially Gospel OF THE GLORY OF CHRIST (2 Cor. iv. 6, ·).

* It seems that in order to the Spirit being given Jesus must not only be glorified by God in heaven, but by believing men on earth. Not at the end of forty days, when Jesus had ascended to the right hand of God, was the Spirit poured out, but when the day of Pentecost was fully come; when seven Sabbaths were complete, counted from the resurrection of Christ the first fruits: i.e., when there was a perfect, a sevenfold rest of expectant faith in the crucified, risen, and glorified Son of God.—ED.

HUNGRY SCHOOL CHILDREN.

MRS. PENNINGTON, 5, Alexandra-road, South Hampstead, hon. secretary of the Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund, writes:—

The need of the poorest children is very great just now, after a season of almost unparalled sickness; whole families, in certain localities, children and bread-winners, too, have been struck down by influenza and bronchitis. The children are returning to school in want, above everything, of good nourishing food, yet the parents have little or nothing to give them. Our Association advocates no wholesale free-feeding. We help above forty poor Board Schools, but in no case do we give dinners free to more than 200 children out of one school, containing 1300 or 1400 children on the register. These 200 are the children of widows with small earnings, of parents out of work or ill. It is for such cases of sickness and misfortune as the following that we are pleading:—

To a table already numbering 350 children, I was asked last week to add two more boys. Pressed for accommodation, the request was met with some hesitation. The school was visited, and the master gave us the following facts:—The School Board visitor had called on the father of the two boys in question to deliver a summons, in default of payment of fees, or explanation of non-payment. He found the mother was recently dead, the father was lying on his bed, ill, and spitting blood. "The School Board visitor," said the master, "put that summons in his pocket again, and reported the case to me." It need hardly be said that the two boys were immediately admitted to our already crowded dinner table.

We earnestly ask for help from all whose hearts have been touched by the thought of sickness and want in the homes of the poor around us. Copies of our seventh annual report will be gladly sent.

ROYAL ALBERT ORPHAN ASYLUM. — A strenuous effort is about to be made to extinguish the mortgage of £13,000, and to extricate this Institution from debt, as the only way in which the Asylum can be maintained in its present state of efficiency. Failing this, the Managing Committee see no other alternative than the very serious step of reducing the number of children to about one-half, and thus bring the annual expenditure within the average annual income. One liberal contributor has already offered £1000 towards the redemption of the mortgage. We sincerely trust that through the co-operation of friends this incubus of debt will speedily be removed. It would be disastrous if such a good work were compelled to limit its operations. The Secretary of the Asylum is Mr. R. Witherby, 62, King William-street, London, E.C.

RELIGIOUS DISABILITIES REMOVAL BILL.

A BILL

TO

Remove the Disabilities of Roman Catholics to hold the Offices of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

BE it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. So much of the twelfth section of the Act passed in the tenth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter seven, as applies—

(a) To the office of Lord High Chancellor or Lord Keeper or Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal of Great Britain; or

(b) To the office of Lord Lieutenant or Lord Deputy or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, is hereby repealed.

2. Every subject of Her Majesty shall, after the passing of this Act, be eligible to hold and enjoy the said offices or any of them without reference to his religious belief.

3. In case the office of Lord High Chancellor or Lord Keeper or Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal of Great Britain shall be held by any person not being a member of the Church of England, the following provisions shall have effect:—

(1) Any right of presentation to any ecclesiastical benefice belonging to such office shall, while the office shall be so held as aforesaid, devolve upon and be exercised by, if the benefice is in the province of Canterbury, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and if the benefice is in the province of York, the Archbishop of York.

(2) The duties of trustee of any institution or endowment, of which the holder of such office is, by virtue of his office, trustee, shall, if the institution or endowment has been established or is maintained exclusively for the benefit of members of the Church of England, be performed while the office shall be so held as aforesaid by such judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature, being a member of the Church of England, as Her Majesty may by Sign Manual for the time being appoint to perform the same.

4. This Act may be cited as the Religious Disabilities Removal Act, 1890.

This Bill is introduced by Mr. Campbell Bannerman, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Mr. John Morley, Sir Horace Davey, and Mr. Asquith, and is called the "Religious Disabilities Removal Bill." Its effect, if passed into law, would be—that the offices of Lord Chancellor of England and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland would be opened to Roman Catholics, and vast powers be placed in their hands, to be disposed of in the advancement of Romish interests and authority. Under a Popish Chancellor, the immense patronage of his office, exclusive of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, might be used for the promotion of Romish influence, both judicially and politically: and property under the control of the Court of Chancery, the guardianship of minors, and the appointment of the magistracy, be all made subservient to the same end.

The Bill, no doubt, provides that if a Roman Catholic be appointed to the office of Lord High Chancellor of England, the exercise of ecclesiastical patronage in the Church of England, belonging to the office of the Chancellorship, shall devolve upon, and be exercised by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York within their respective provinces; and that the duties of trustee, exercised by the Lord Chancellor, over funds maintained exclusively for the benefit of members of the Church of England, shall be performed by one of the Judges to be appointed by Her Majesty; but the main points having been gained, it is not difficult to foretell the fate of the proposed reservations, and that the exercise of patronage in ecclesiastical matters would not be long withheld, nor the control of trusts maintained exclusively for members of the Church of England.

Moreover, this transfer of duties serves to prove that a Roman Catholic is unfitted for the duties of the office of Chancellor. Are the duties of all the offices of State to be curtailed in order that these appointments may be filled by Papists, and how far is this process to extend? For instance, is the law to be altered, and are the duties of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to be modified to enable a Roman Catholic to represent Her Majesty in Ireland, in suitable submission to the dictation and influence of the Papacy? The principle of shaping the office to the character, the attainments, and the religion of the recipient, is a novel one, and if justifiable in the instances now recorded, may be still further extended. In commercial matters the absurdity would be immediately recognised, and it is difficult to discover any good reason for exception in political appointments.

The appointment of a Roman Catholic Lord Lieutenant in Ireland would be equally fraught with mischief. Her Majesty's title to the Throne is based upon the Act of Settlement which secures the Protestant Succession, and the Coronation Oath proclaims her fealty to the Constitution as professing the Protestant religion. The maintenance of the Protestant religion was guaranteed by the Acts of Union with Scotland and Ireland; and, by the Roman Catholic Relief Act, the "Protestant Government" of the United Kingdom is recognised and proclaimed. A Roman Catholic Lord Lieutenant of Ireland cannot represent and uphold in his person the Protestant title and dignity of the Crown, and the appointment of a Roman Catholic to the Vice-Royalty indirectly aims at the subversion of the Protestant Constitution of the Empire. In the light of recent events the passing of this measure would simply transfer the government of Ireland into the hands of the Romish hierarchy, whose commands the Popish representative of Her Majesty would be compelled to obey. The Church of Rome demands supremacy. Cardinal Manning, in his sermon on the Syllabus, describes the late Pope as saying to those who urge him "to be reconciled to Liberalism":—"In his (Christ's) right I am sovereign. I acknowledge no civil superior; and I claim more than this—I claim to be the supreme judge on earth, and director of the consciences of men—of the peasant that tills the field, and the prince that sits on the throne; of the household that lives in the shade of privacy, and the legislature that makes laws for kingdoms. I am the last supreme Judge on earth of what is right and wrong."—Sermons on Religious Subjects (Burns, Oates & Co.), 1873.

The Bull, "Unam Sanctam," is equally explicit. It proclaims as follows:—"It is necessary that one sword should be under another, and that the temporal authority should be subject to the spiritual power. And thus the prophecy of Jeremiah is fulfilled in the Church and the ecclesiastical power, 'Behold, I have set thee over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant!' Therefore, if the earthly power go astray, it must be judged by the spiritual power; but if the spiritual power go astray, it must be judged by God alone. Moreover, we declare, say, define, and pronounce it to be altogether necessary to salvation that every human creature should be subject to the Roman pontiff."—Corpus Juris Canonici, tom. ii. p. 994, Paris, 1687.—This Bull, Unam Sanctam, and the Syllabus, Cardinal Manning has declared contain the doctrines of "Ultramontanism and Christianity" (Times, December 24, 1873).

The late Pope in the Syllabus (Art. 15) denounces as a "false and monstrous error," that "every man is free to embrace and profess the religion which, guided by the light of reason, he shall believe true," or (Arts. 16 and 17, speaking of the Communion of the Church of Rome) that it is possible for "men who have embraced any other religion to find and obtain eternal salvation." And in the 18th Art. he pronounces equally false the opinion that "Protestantism is but another form of the same true religion, in which it is equally possible to be pleasing to God as in the Catholic Church." The late Pope has also in the Syllabus (as clearly shown by Mr. Gladstone in his pamphlet Vatican Decrees,) denounced and condemned "with fearfully energetic epithets, free speech, free writing, a free press, toleration of Nonconformity, liberty of conscience, the study of civil and philosophical matters in independence of the ecclesiastical authority, marriage unless sacramentally contracted, and the definition by the State of the civil rights of the Church; he has demanded for the Church the title to define its own civil rights, together with a divine right to civil immunities, and a right to use physical force." The present Pope, also, in his last Encyclical of January, 1890, affirms unmistakably the supremacy of the Roman Catholic Church. The Pope teaches that, "when conflicts arise between the calls of the State and the rights of the Church, it is better to obey God than man."

The assertion made by Lord Denbigh, that he and his co-religionists are "Catholics first and Englishmen afterwards," has been adopted by the leading Roman Catholics in this country (Speech of Cardinal Manning, Times, January 22, 1873), and is explained by Mr. Gladstone emphatically to mean "that the convert intends, in case of any conflict between the Queen and the Pope, to follow the Pope and let the Queen shift for herself." (Vatican Decrees, p. 61.) Mr. Gladstone further writes, "that Rome requires a convert, who now joins her, to forfeit his moral and mental freedom, and to place his loyalty and civil duty at the mercy of another."—Vatican Decrees, p. 4.

Leading Roman Catholics in this country, in reply to Mr. Gladstone, have made many professions of loyalty; but, though replies have been made to Mr. Gladstone, his arguments have not been refuted, and in his further pamphlet, Vaticanism, a rejoinder to these replies, Mr. Gladstone has conclusively re-affirmed and maintained his original proposition, and more clearly developed his opinions.

For instance, at p. 17 (Vaticanism), Mr. Gladstone states, "Nor must it be forgotten that the very best of all the declarations we have heard from those who have allowed themselves to be entangled in the meshes of the Vatican Decrees are, every one of them, uttered subject to the condition that, upon orders from Rome, if such orders should issue, they shall be qualified, or retracted, or reversed"; and, again, at p. 18, he adds, "I now hold myself bound further to sustain and prove the assertion that the Pope now claims with plenary authority, from every convert and member of his Church, that he shall place his loyalty and civil duty at the mercy of another, that other being himself." This proposition Mr. Gladstone proceeds to make good in the subsequent pages, and in his "Conclusion," p. 109, he finally affirms that "he has with ample proof justified the assertion that the claims asserted by the Pope are such as to place civil allegiance at his mercy."—How, then, we ask, can Mr. Gladstone reconcile these statements with his action in now introducing a Bill to place the chief rule in Ireland in the hands of one who, if a conscientious Roman Catholic, must maintain that the authority of the Pope is superior to and overrides the Supremacy of the Crown?

If we refer to the opinion expressed by Dr. Goss, the late Romish Bishop of Liverpool, "that Catholics could not be considered free till the Premier and the Queen were free to profess that religion," it is quite evident that this Bill is but a first step to ulterior aims, and that the proposal to appoint a Romanist as Chancellor and Keeper of the Queen's conscience, or Her Majesty's representative in Ireland, will eventually lead to the repeal of the Act of Settlement, by which is secured the Protestant Succession to the Throne.

The Romish Members of the House of Commons have, on several occasions openly attempted to obtain the repeal of these Statutes.

In 1868 Sir Colman O'Loghlen—in Committee on the Promissory Oaths Bill then before the House of Commons—gave notice to move a clause, that "After the passing of this Act, no Sovereign of Great Britain and Ireland shall be required to take, or make, or subscribe, at their coronation, or on the first day of their first Parliament, whichever shall first happen, or any other time, the declaration commonly called the Declaration against Transubstantiation and the Invocation of Saints, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, as practised in the Church of Rome, anything in the Bill of Rights or Act of Settlement to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

In 1880 Mr. O'Donnell, in the House of Commons, asked the First Lord of the Treasury "whether the Cabinet had any intention of bringing in a Bill to alter the religious character of the Oath of Allegiance taken in that House, and whether in that case any steps would be taken to relieve the Sovereign of the necessity of taking the Coronation Oath?"—Times, June 1, 1880.

And again, in 1881, Mr. Bellingham, the then Roman Catholic Member for Louth, asked Mr. Gladstone "whether, seeing that Her Majesty's Government use as their main argument for the admission of Mr. Bradlaugh into this House, their desire to introduce absolute religious toleration in the government of this country, he was prepared to advocate the abolition of all remaining religious checks at present existing, such as those which prevent a Lord Chancellor or Sovereign of Great Britain being a Catholic?"—Times, May 11, 1881.

Judging from the past, it is possible that the Romish Ecclesiastics may come forward to solemnly abjure all desire to repeal the Act of Settlement. But, that no trust can be placed in such protestations is forcibly illustrated by reference to the Pastoral Address and Sworn Declaration issued in 1826 by the Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of Ireland, in which "they swear and solemnly declare that they will not exercise any privilege to which they may be entitled, to disturb and weaken the Protestant religion and Protestant government in Ireland," and yet we have seen that their conduct has been in utter disregard of this pledge.

In view of such bold and daring propositions—the most bold and daring since the Act of Emancipation of 1829, involving as they do most dangerous consequences—the Committee of the Protestant Alliance urge most earnestly that immediate measures be taken to resist this undisguised attempt to subvert the Protestant Constitution, under which England has become for its freedom, religious and political, honoured among the nations of the earth.

This can be most effectually done by communicating promptly and directly with Members of Parliament, and urging them to reject this measure without amendment or compromise; by organising meetings to protest against the mischievous and menacing character of this Bill; and by securing that Petitions, not only from such meetings, but from every town and district, shall be at once prepared and sent up for presentation to the House.

A PLEASANT SOCIAL EVENING was spent on Friday by about sixty young women engaged in public bars and restaurants at Morley Rooms, John-street, Bedford-row. The invitations came from Lady Smith and Miss C. M. Gough, who had provided tea, coffee, and cake in abundance for their guests. Innocent amusements filled up the time until half-past eight, when Rev. C. R. Gibb arrived to tell the girls stories of his adventures as a chaplain in India, to assure them that total abstinence was the best course in England as well as in tropical climates, and to insist upon a knowledge of the Saviour as all-important to their happiness. These social meetings are much enjoyed by the girls, and prove a means of gathering them to hear the good tidings when other inducements fail.

Siberian Suicides & Hunger Strikes.

The Times of Friday last, in continuation and in proof of previous appalling narratives, says that the ghastly story of the flogging and subsequent suicides of ladies, who, as political prisoners, were incarcerated at Kara, in Eastern Siberia, is now fully confirmed. Madame Soluzeff-Kovalsky had been insulted and brutally ill-treated. Her fellow prisoners complained, but received no answer. Then the prisoners resolved to resort to that most terrible of protests which the extreme character of the suffering endured in Siberia alone can have suggested—a "hunger strike." A long and fearful experience has shown that, as a general rule, the Government pays no attention to the grievances of the exiles unless some scandal is produced by the cruel death of one or more of the victims. Hence the women of the Kara prison resolved to starve themselves to death unless the director, Masukoff, was removed. This, their first hunger strike, lasted eighteen days, and only ended when Masukoff informed the prisoners that he had tendered his resignation.

But it was not accepted, and a second hunger strike of eight days followed. Then Masukoff told them he was to be removed. This was a falsehood, and a third hunger strike followed. It lasted a full twenty-two days, and naturally many, in fact all, of the women would have died before the expiration of that time had they not been fed artificially. What this means can be left to the imagination of the reader. It was only done by the exercise of shocking violence. Soldiers and gaolers had to hold down the unfortunate women while the food was forced upon them in an unnatural and mechanical manner.

On the twenty-second day of voluntary starvation Madame Nahyda Sihida sent, by one of the guards, a request to see the director upon an urgent affair. Admitted to Masukoff's presence, she at once called him a villain, and smartly boxed his ears. She expected sentence of death by hanging; and that the sensation caused would render it impossible for Masukoff to remain at his post.

She was ordered to be flogged, and though the surgeon refused to be present because (1) she was ill, and (2) because she had not been sentenced by a legal tribunal, she was nevertheless mercilessly beaten with a hundred blows duly counted; and died two days after. Her three companions took poison and died. Thirty male prisoners poisoned themselves, but emetics were administered, and only two died.

RAINHAM, ESSEX. — Mr. J. C. Rainey's recent mission was fruitful of good results. Among the converts were a man and woman who had not attended Divine worship for eleven years. The husband had spent good wages on strong drink, but on realising that Christ was their Saviour they both signed the total abstinence pledge. They have since testified to the power and peace of the grace of God, and brought three of their kinsfolk, who had previously lived godless lives, to Him who "receiveth sinners."

THE ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL has 635 children beneath its sheltering care. Mr. Basil Woodd Smith, treasurer, in a recent circular, says: "Consider how great a sum of relief to human suffering, and of addition to human happiness, is represented by the fact of the support and education and training of 5000 children during the 132 years of the existence of the charity. That the training is successful may be gathered from the fact that during the past year more applications have been received for boys from commercial houses—in many cases those already having former boys in their employ—than could be responded to. The girls are trained in all branches of domestic work, and their needlework is both abundant and good. Mr. Smith, whose address is 73, Cheapside, London, E.C., adds that the funds of the Institution have shared in the recent depression.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXV.—NOT SO STRANGE.

1 PETER iv. 12, 13.

ONCE it seemed strange to the Apostle Peter that his Master should think of suffering. Now he thinks it strange that He could have imagined anything else, and he writes to the scattered Christians, bidding them not to count it strange if their path lies through fiery trial and bitter pain.

"Think it not strange!" But it does seem strange—strange that the waters of a full cup should be wrung out to the saints, whilst sinners walk on the sunny side of the hedge! Strange that the wicked should be permitted to plot so much and so successfully against the righteous! Strange that the profane sit on the judgment seats at which the godly and devoted are arraigned for no other fault than their endeavours for the good of men! Strange to find some of the sweetest and noblest of God's children racked with agony, dying of cancer, beset with poverty, misunderstanding, and hatred.

To the eye of natural reason it was strange that thousands of martyrs should die in the amphitheatres of Rome, and Elumine the public gardens, whilst Nero should revel in his splendid palace-halls! Strange that the saints of the Lord should suffer in dungeon and at stake, whilst a Bonner, a Jeffries, a Claverhouse gained place and pelf by their destruction! Strange that the progress of the Church has always been marked by the thin trail of blood! It is hard not to think it strange. And yet it would be stranger still if it were not so. Let us now look into THE CONSIDERATIONS WHICH ROB SUFFERING OF ITS STRANGENESS:—

(1) This world is in revolt.—Marvellous to relate, it has, like ancient Israel, rejected God from its throne, and has chosen another prince, who is repeatedly referred to by our Lord as "the god of this world." Saul rules the visible world, while David, the rightful king, is keeping himself hid amid the growing numbers of those who love him. Is it to be wondered at that the servants of the Divinely designated prince should experience rough treatment at the hands of the rebel forces who disown his sway? It could not be otherwise.

(2) Along this way the Master went.—From the moment of his birth, when Herod sought to slay Him, to the last moment of his life, He was a lily among thorns, a dumb dove among strangers. His brethren hated Him, and could not speak peaceably to Him. Those whom He came to gather, as a hen gathers her chicks beneath her wing, refused Him with contumely and reproach, and finally wounded Him to the death. There never was such a union in hatred as that which encircled Jesus as with a ring of forked flame, when He went to the cross. Ah, blessed One, Prince in the realm of misery, as in all other spheres, Thou hast endured the contradiction of sinners against Thyself, till reproach broke thy heart; and it is not for us to choose a happier pathway, or an easier lot, lest we should seem not to belong to Thee or to bear thy name.

(3) This is the way home.—When Samuel bade adieu to the young king-elect, on whose life the eyes of all Israel were about to turn, he told him of certain signs which should befall him on his way (1 Sam. x.). And the prophet probably did this to give him materials for forming a true estimate of the Divine authority of the communication which he had just received. He must have felt more and more convinced at every step that Samuel was a true prophet, and that he was on his predestined way. So when we see or experience the hate entertained towards Christianity and Christians, by those whom they mean to benefit, and realise that it exactly fulfils the repeated predictions of our blessed Lord, we, too, are persuaded that we are on "the way the prophets went, the way that leads from banishment." If we were universally beloved, and no voice were ever raised in hatred or calumny, we might truly question whether we were at all on the heavenward track. It is stated so repeatedly that if we are without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then must we be bastards and not sons. And, again it is said, that through much tribulation we must enter into the kingdom of God. As mountain-climbers after a snowstorm can tell the path by the line of posts placed at intervals along the mountain side, so may Christians tell that they are on the track of the Church by the antagonism manifested against their religion in Jesus Christ.

It must be so just in proportion to the sincerity and consistency of our religious life. If we are living as we should, we condemn the world around us. "There is in the life of the Christian a convincing light which shows the deformity of the works of darkness, and a piercing heat which scorches the ungodly and troubles their consciences. This they cannot endure, and hence rises in them a contrary fire of wicked hatred, and out of this the fiery trials of the godly."

(4) There is an object in such suffering.—Though it may seem to spring causeless from the ground, yet in point of fact it is carefully designed by the skill of the great Artificer. There may have been many a previous secret prayer for growth in grace and usefulness, and the answer has come in the use of fire, file, and hammer, wielded by God, though furnished by the hatred of the sons of men. The malignant deed of cruelty may proceed from the treachery of a Judas, but the cup must be taken as from the Father's hand. Though the missile may be hurled by malice and illwill, yet if it is permitted to pass through the environing presence of God, it has become his appointment for the refining and maturing of the sufferer's character. In this sense his permissions become his appointments. We cannot become new sharp thrashing instruments without fire, and therefore it is not strange when we are plied by it to the uttermost. But one sits beside who holds our pulse between his fingers, and will not let the heat be too searching, or the discipline too severe. There is no other way of eliminating much of the selfish dross of our natures.

(5) Herein we partake of Christ's sufferings.—Of course there is a sense in which Christ's sufferings are unapproachable. They stand as a solitary obelisk on the sands of time. He trod the winepress alone. There is no sorrow like unto his sorrow, in the day in which the Lord afflicted Him. And yet there is a sense in which we fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ. His life in us meets the same treatment as it did in Him. Granted that we cannot partake of his sacrificial and substitutionary sufferings, yet we may all know something of his other sufferings when He was tempted, when He foresaw the doom of men, and wept; when He endured the contradiction of sinners against Himself; when He surrendered Himself to do and suffer the holy will of God! Ah, it is good to share anything with Him. Sweet things are bitter when He is absent, and bitter things sweet if He is near. Would that we were closer drawn into his most intimate friendship, though the connecting links were clamps of iron, forged in the fiery furnace.

As St. Bernard said, He always fled when they wanted to make Him King, and presented Himself when they wanted to crucify Him; and let us not hesitate to adopt the noble words of Ittai the Gittite, when he said: "As the Lord liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be" (2 Sam. xv. 21). And He will surely answer, as that same David did to another fugitive who came to identify himself with his cause: "Abide thou with me, fear not; for he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life, but with me thou shalt be in safeguard." We partake of his sufferings, and He of ours. If anything is too small to tell Him about, it is too small to worry over; but if things worry and fret you, remember that in all your affliction He was afflicted, and that when the Sauls persecute the Church they in reality touch the apple of his eye.

Is it not fit that we should follow our Captain? Would it be right for Him to sink fainting beneath his cross, whilst we are carried to heaven on beds of down? Shall He go through seas of anguish, and we pass round them by a safer and easier path? Shall He be beset by enemies, whom we skilfully elude and avoid, leaving Him to his fate. It must not be. If in the days of his flesh each member of his natural body shared in the suffering of the whole, feet and hands and head contributing their quota, but none exempted, so each member of his mystical body may expect to share still in his sufferings, rejection, and crucifixion, throughout the course of the ages as they pass.

(6) Look on to the end.—His glory shall be revealed! His sufferings quicken our anticipations of that blessed day. Too much comfort might make us forget ourselves and think ourselves at home, so that we might not so ardently reach out our hands towards our coming glories. Hence it is good to have been afflicted, because we have been taught to consider more fixedly the certainty and glory of the revelation of our hidden Lord. That is the reality; all things else are the baubles and gewgaws of an hour. And when He appears, we shall appear with Him in glory. Those who have been nearest the cross shall be next the throne. The light of his glory shall also irradiate us. We shall be like Him and with Him and in Him for ever. In proportion to our sufferings shall be the rewards and honours of his kingdom. Ah, what bounding and leaping joy will be ours then, in the light of which the sufferings of the present will seem unfit to be compared.

(7) We are compensated for such suffering by the presence of the Spirit of glory.—When such suffering lies heavily on the soul, God sees to it that it is no loser. What is lost from without is replenished from within. As water is thrown on the fire from the one side of the wall, a bright angel on the other pours in oil through a tiny aperture, till the flame breaks out as coals of juniper. Ah, what compensations are ours! The Jews who walk the streets of Tangier and other Moorish towns, the hated of all the people, are said to have exquisitely furnished rooms within their ordinary-looking dwellings, where they surround themselves with every luxury, and comfort themselves. So, as the spiritual man turns from the hatred of man to the special bestowments of God, he is compensated a hundred-fold. When we have least human love, we have most of God's. When father and mother forsake, He gathers us. When the sun of earthly prosperity sets, we are sensible of the glowing fire in the heart of the pillar of cloud, which otherwise we had never beheld, and which bespeaks his presence and care. Men can never understand this. They only see the prickly shell, not the kernel. They only handle the rough exterior case; they know not the spices and balm hidden within. They can measure what we renounce, but they cannot gauge the wealth of the Divine compensations. You will never know so much of God's converse as when men "send you to Coventry." You will never have so much of the Spirit of glory and of God as when familiar faces are averted, and hands are raised in scorn. Methinks we are more than repaid for all our losses by this far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Let us brace ourselves then to suffer whatever may befall, only anxious that our sufferings are due, not to our want of Christianity, but to our possession of it; not because of temper, or evil-speaking, or misbehaviour, but because we are so like the Master, and so near Him. So like Him that we are mistaken for Him. So near Him that we are bespattered by mud flung at Him.

Not as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a bishop over another man's diocese, but as a Christian. It would be well indeed if we never suffered save as Christians; and whenever such suffering comes to us, let us count it all joy, and take it as the theme for a psalm, as the signal for a fresh outburst of "Glory to God in the Highest."

SOLDIERS AT WOOLWICH.

Five hundred soldiers at Woolwich have declared themselves in connection with the Wesleyan Church, a strong reason why that denomination should make some special provision for their spiritual and social well-being. Eleven years ago a beginning was made by opening a Soldiers' Home; but it was found much too small. A fine building, with abundance of accommodation, has now been erected and placed at the disposal of the men. It is not in any way to be exclusive; every soldier is considered a member, and due respect is paid to every man's religious preference.

There was a large gathering last Tuesday week, in honour of the opening ceremony, which was performed by Lord Wolseley. The president of the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. C. H. Kelly, conducted a service in the adjoining church, and in the evening there was a crowded meeting, at which a number of friends gave interesting addresses. The fine work being done by such agencies throughout the country was detailed by Rev. R. W. Allen and Rev. E. P. Lowry.

THE PLACE OF MUSIC IN WORSHIP.—In the current number of The Musical Herald Rev. Newman Hall replies to some queries on this subject proposed to him by the editor. Mr. Hall's main contention is that in using music we must distinguish between a church evangelising and a church worshipping. Religious art, he says, may be a vehicle for truth, but art alone is worth very little religiously. He prefers women to boys in choirs, though boys' voices have, he says, a more ringing and leading tone. He would not confine membership in choirs to communicants, but to persons religiously disposed.

The Church's Real Want is God.

By Rev. WILLIAM CROSBIE.

[The following address was delivered in Clifton-road Church, Brighton, at the close of the recent united mission.]

I am going to speak a little on the mission that has recently taken place in connection with the churches of this town. The question naturally occurs, and is being asked, What are the results? The complete answer to the question is known only to God. He can sum up, and He alone, all the results.

That there have been good results we know. Large congregations have assembled in the churches; many faithful and earnest and loving words have been spoken; much prayer has been offered; and believers have been quickened, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners have been won to Christ. For these results we are devoutly thankful. The mission has not been in vain. It could not be in vain.

Yet the results ought to have been much greater. The churches should have passed up to a higher spiritual plane; there should have been many more conversions to God; a mightier attack should have been made upon the forces of evil.

This mission and missions generally confirm me in an opinion I have long held, and to which I have given frequent expression, that the supreme want of the age is a new baptism of the Holy Ghost upon the Church, making the Church a better Church, holier, more Christ-like, a faithful witness to the truth, and a glorious missionary and soul-saving agency.

The mission of missions would be a mission to the Church. That is the first thing. Matters will not be very much different until there be such a mission. Out of it what missions to the world would come! And what an impression a purged, living, zealous, transformed, God-filled Church would make upon the world!

The doctors and reformers are many; and the prescriptions and methods are numerous and varied, and there is a great deal of discussing and conferring. The wise and the learned speak through the press and in other ways. But what the Church really wants is GOD; the fulness of spiritual life; the baptism of the Holy Ghost. There will be little success, the paces of progress will be slow, until the Church gets on her knees, acknowledging her sins and shortcomings and unfaithfulness, and pleading with God to make her holy, and to fill her full of Himself.

I appeal with confidence to those who have had specially to do with the Brighton mission; and I ask them if they are perfectly satisfied with the results. I know that there are souls rejoicing in Jesus, who, before the mission, were strangers to Him, and strangers to peace; and I thank God for these souls, and for all the good that has been done. But ought the mission not to have accomplished much more than it has? Has the town felt the mission as it ought and might? Has there been a new sense and awe of God? Have there been manifest overshadowings of his presence? Has sin fled away and hidden itself? Has the cry of awakenment and of soul-distress risen in the hushed assembly? Has the devil been disturbed and made very angry? Has his kingdom been shaken? Has the number of the saved been vastly augmented? Has the spiritual level of the churches been considerably and permanently raised? Has there been a great coming down of God upon the town? Will the mission mark, as the convention of some years ago did, the beginning of a new stage of spiritual advancement?

To all these questions there might have been affirmative answers. To all these questions there would have been affirmative answers, if there had been a better state of things within the churches, if there had been more preparation of the right sort—if there had been more waiting upon God in penitence, and faith, and utter self-renunciation—if the mission had been preceded and conditioned by spiritual revival among church members, and Christian people. We are all to blame, ministers and people alike, the ministers as much as the people. A great opportunity has come, and we have not made the best of it—not nearly the best of it.

But are we to relax our efforts, and discontinue our waiting upon God, and bid expectation descend from her watch-tower, and content ourselves with things as they are? Not at all. That is not to learn our lesson aright. That is not for us the duty. If there has been any failure, or coming short, or disappointment, we have got to find out the cause, and get it removed, going alone with Jesus, and consulting Him, and persevering, until the blessing in all its fulness comes.

They who act so never go unrewarded, unblessed. Perseverance like that always attains its object, triumphing at last. Be assured there are hindrances somewhere—hindrances for which we alone are responsible. To the sincere and earnest they are always discovered; and when put away, "the more abundant life" flows in, and there is the investiture of power.

Sometimes faith is tried—severely tested; but only that there may be preparation for all that God has to bestow. And sometimes God cannot bless because of sin, or because of some inward unfitness, or because of the absence of the requisite conditions. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse...And prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you that He will not hear." "Ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss." "Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, why could not we cast him out? And Jesus said unto them, because of your unbelief; for verily I say unto you, if ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

It is a happy thing when, instead of giving up or being discouraged, we learn by experience, finding out why the blessing in its larger measures is withheld, and standing yet more firmly on the promises, utter the resolve, "We will not let Thee go except Thou bless us." To those inspired with that holy determination nothing is denied. They ever conquer. And for none has the Divine Christ, who loves above all things to be conquered so, such words of commendation. "Behold, a woman of Canaan came...and cried unto Him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, Thou Son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil. But He answered her not a word. And his disciples came and besought Him, saying, Send her away, for she crieth after us. But He answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Then came she and worshipped Him, saying, Lord, help me. But He answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs. And she said, Truth, Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their Master's table. Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour."

Which, then, is it to be? Contentment with things as they are, or resolute going forward until the word upon which God has caused us to hope is fulfilled? Shall we resign ourselves to ease and indifference, or arouse ourselves to energy and endeavour, stirring ourselves up, and taking hold upon God? Speaking for myself personally, let me say that I mean to pursue the latter course—pursuing it with heart-searching and with hope, under what outward conditions and circumstances I know not; but God lives, and is immutable in faithfulness, as well as infinite in love, and his word of promise cannot fail. There must be fulfilment when the occasion is ripe, and when all the conditions are present. "In due season we shall reap if we faint not."

The day is coming, and there are some signs that it is not far off, when God's people, irrespective of their Church relationships and ecclesiastical badges and distinctions, will be drawn together by spiritual affinities and a common purpose; and they will give themselves to prayer for the Holy Ghost; and, receiving Him in his fulness, they will be baptized with purity and power, and into a holy confederacy, and will go forth a mighty, united army to achieve the last and grandest triumphs of the cross. Oh, shall we not do what we can to hasten that day, when the Church will be beautiful, attractive, victorious, divine—the "Imago Christi"—a new incarnation and revelation of Jesus—when all her divisions will be healed, and they shall see "eye to eye"; and she shall be "called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name"—when she will "look forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners"?..."For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory."

EURASIAN GIRLS IN JAPAN.

Mr. Francis Staniland (2, Bluff, Yohohama, Japan) who sent us that heartrending story of the little Japanese girl he wanted to rescue out of the demoralising hands of her relatives (see our issue of May 10, 1889, picture, "Doomed!") is anxious to establish a Christian Home for Eurasian children, towards which he has nearly £300 in hand. The total cost is estimated at £1000, exclusive of furnishing. Our readers contributed £3 18s. 6d. for the rescue of the child, and £48 13s. for the Home. But Mr. Staniland has not been able to obtain the child, and therefore the former amount has been added to that contributed towards the Home. In a recent letter Mr. Staniland says: We have before us abundant evidence of the need of such a Home for Eurasian Girls as we hope to establish here. The Roman Catholics recognise the need, and have received many of this class, whom they are bringing up for Rome. They have quite a long procession of children wherever their missions are established. It is in the rising generation that the Christianising influence must be sown. The Roman Catholics seek to implant their superstitions in the virgin soil of youth, and, by and by, will send out a powerful band of workers.

I wish I could present the claims of these children in such a way, that some would be constrained to help in establishing a Christian Home—where we might shield them from danger, and sow the seed of righteousness in their hearts. These children are growing up around us, and there is no place for them to go except the heathen schools.

MRS. GINEVER'S HOMES. — We hear with much regret that Mrs. Ginever is in very poor health, and that the Orphan Homes over which she exercises a motherly superintendence are suffering in consequence. A friend of the work, Mr. E. H. Watts, jun., F.R.G.S., will give a dioramic lecture at Exeter Hall next Tuesday evening in aid of the Homes. He will describe a recent journey through India, Burmah, and Persia, and the lecture will be illustrated by one hundred specially prepared dissolving views. Tickets of Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall.

The Opium Curse in India.

Mr. Frederick Sessions, who is travelling in India in order to study religious and social questions, has contributed some very interesting "Gleanings" to The Gloucester Journal. In a long letter published on February 15 he speaks of the opium traffic in Bombay. The manufacture is a Government monopoly; for the sale there are two kinds of licences—one outdoor, and another indoor. The outdoor licences in Bombay are all held by one contractor, who is said to have about a dozen shops. Mr. Sessions says:—

"The one in the Nul Market had three or four men selling as fast as they could lay hands to their work. The opium lay before them in balls about as big as a man's fist, and with the Government seal attached to each ball. This licence limits the amount to be sold to each customer, and the chief trade seemed to be done in small quantities, from the weight of a haricot bean (white beans of this size are actually used as weights in selling) upwards to about a quarter (I think) of the full-sized ball. These smaller portions were for smoking at home, but also, and indeed chiefly, for giving to children to keep them quiet.

"The 'dens' are apparently far worse institutions than those above spoken of, though no sane man can fail to see how the one plays into the other's hands. I mean that the drugging of infants must beget an appetite which, if the child lives, will tend to increase till the man becomes an opium sot. The first 'den' we entered was a large low-roofed room. The door from the street was so high up that two rough stones projected from the wall to serve as steps, and a rope swung from the lintel to pull oneself up by. At first the nearly entire absence of windows, and the smoky atmosphere, and dingy look of everything prevented our distinctly taking in the situation. But presently we discerned, and counted nearly one hundred men, besides a few all lying on charpais (a sort of light four-legged cane-bottomed bedstead) in various stages of intoxication, from those who had just commenced smoking to those who were in the last degree of opium-stupor. At the far end a woman was selling the drug to her customers, who, lying down as described, had the opium in small cups (about the size of English egg cups) melted, and mixed with water. One or two were using the large-bowled Chinese pipe, but the majority smoked the pipe with a small hole in the side, into which they put the liquid with a tiny spoon, held it a second over a small glass lamp, drew the smoke into their mouths, and so continued till the required effect was produced. There being a goodly company of us no one interfered with us as we talked with new comers, and stooped to feel the fluttering hearts and listen to the breathing of the stupefied sleepers. The second 'den' we examined was a repetition of the first, except that it was somewhat larger, and that here tobacco was also being smoked, and coffee was also being served.

"Some people tell me that opium is really not hurtful, and that we would do more good in crusading against the consumption of Ganja and Bhang than in running a-muck against opium. The truth seems to be that the latter drugs are at least as harmful, probably more so, but that all are bad, and that 'two blacks don't make one white.' There seem to be three stages in opium smoking:—One in which for some time exhilaration and enjoyment are produced by the daily use of only a few grains; the second, in which the daily dose has to be augmented to keep up the effects, during which stage the intervening periods are marked by a growing craving, and some pains which are only lulled by a return to the pipe; and the last, following possibly only after some years of habitual use, when the smoker is a slave to the habit, becomes haggard and dejected in appearance, impoverished if he belongs to the poorer castes, and dies prematurely whether Brahmin or Mehter."

ISLINGTON MEDICAL MISSION.

The London Medical Missionary Association have made another advance in their efforts to reach the masses, by opening premises for the "Islington Medical Mission," at 13, Windsor-street, Essex-road. In the immediate neighbourhood there is a dense population, a large proportion of the people being very poor. Many are unreached by the ordinary Gospel efforts which for years have been prayerfully and persistently carried on. But sickness and suffering always open the door to the doctor; as he enters with healing for the body and a message for the soul, the Holy Spirit opens hearts to receive Christ as Saviour and Lord.

Saturday last was a cold, cheerless day, with falling snow and slushy streets; nevertheless, in the afternoon between sixty and seventy friends met to inspect the premises, and to commend the work and workers to the Lord. The meeting was presided over by Dr. Burns Thomson, who spoke of the twofold object of the Mission, that of healing the sick and bringing to them the Gospel, and also that of training medical students who wished to devote themselves to medical missionary work abroad. The students will go through the full curriculum at one of the London hospitals, but will find in this place advantages for getting practical experience in dealing with both the bodies and the souls of the people. Missionaries at home on furlough or intending to go abroad, who were anxious to get a little practical medical knowledge, would also be welcomed, and would be given every facility for acquiring such knowledge as the place would afford. Dr. Thomson urged the important truth that it is by deeds and not words that men are won, and that the kindness shown by Christian doctors and nurses in their daily contact with the sick and dying commends the Gospel and opens men's hearts to receive Christ, and leads them to "taste and see that the Lord is good."

Dr. Maxwell, secretary of the Association, gave an interesting account of the remarkable manner in which they had been led to secure those premises, and how the Christian landlord had generously given them at a nominal rent.

Dr. Henry Soltau, who has been appointed director of this new Mission, briefly addressed the meeting, asking the prayers of Christian friends for the work, and for workers to be sent. A Christian nurse to visit in the homes is specially needed. The dispensary days would be Tuesdays and Fridays, at 10 a.m., and patients would be visited in their homes on other days of the week. Various meetings will also be held on Sundays and during the week, and agencies set on foot for reaching the young and old in the neighbourhood.

Rev. Mr. Horn, vicar of St. James's, in which parish the buildings are situated, having spoken a few words of welcome, Rev. Matthew Smith, Congregational minister, also gave a very cordial greeting to the new workers.

Any further information respecting this interesting effort may be obtained from Dr. H. Soltau, at the Medical Mission House, Windsor-street, Essex-road, or at his private residence, 64, Burma-road, Green-lanes, N.

"THE ORIENTAL EVANGELIST" is a modest little monthly, edited by Wallace J. Gladwin, and published from 104, Franklin-street, Chicago. The object is to promote Gospel work among the millions of the East, and to this end the opium evil is ruthlessly exposed. We trust Mr. Gladwin's earnest endeavours will be greatly owned of God, and that his offer to give advice to intending missionaries will be accepted by many devoted American Christians.

The Path of the Vineyard.

Sweet music through the long aisles softly sighed:
A monotone of grief the organ moaned,
Mournful as voices of the wind at night,
When from the surging sea the tempest sweeps
Across the melancholy marsh and moor;
And o'er mine eyes a mist of sadness crept.
All faded, and I gazed into the world,
Across the swelling downs golden with grain
Bronzing beneath the sultry autumn sun,
Far o'er the weald that stretched in Sabbath peace,
Each little hamlet hushed to rest and still.

Within the woods bird-music filled the air;
The lark sang sweetly o'er its careless nest,
The throstle carolled in the apple tree,
The blackbird quavered its melodious song;
So sweet it was, the seaborn wind grew faint,
Wafting the melody across the meads.
But, distant in the haze the city stood,
Its great heart throbbing in a sick unrest,
And high above it, shrouding all the sky,
The sulphur smoke of its keen martyrdom.

The faint, hushed sounds of nature died away,
Drowning all else. I heard the shouts of men
Battling with brothers for a bit of bread,
The child's choked sob at break of day,
The piteous mother's low responsive sigh,
The starving toilers' cry for ill-paid work.
And I could see beyond the sunlit fields,
Death, autocratic, stalking through the streets,
All pitiful; his weird thin hand outstretched
Bearing the poppy draught of peace; his eyes
Aglow with longings of a mighty love.

The mother blessed him, as he softly bent;
The babe smiled in his saddened face, and died;
And every house he tarried in was glad
Because of him, for in the paling eventide,
When o'er the fragrant meads the moon came forth
A great gold sickle in the darkening sky,
And, 'mid the yellow light, the sedge bird sang
The bliss from out its little throbbing heart,
The wan pinched face was angel-like in peace.

Then evening fell, and stars shone o'er the fold;
The anchor lights swung twinkling on the sea
That ebbed and flowed beneath the great chalk cliffs,
But in the city, with the dying day,
The glare of gin shops greeted coming night;
And troops of pallid women, sad and lost,
Glided like spectres through the streets, their hearts
Haunted by dreams of dimly distant days.

Through blinding mists of tears their longing eyes
Gazed sadly once again at grass-grown graves,
Till life seemed darker in its sin and woe,
And death seemed sweet as were the perfumed winds
That swept across the wealth of hawthorn bloom
And o'er the hayfields in the early morn
When all the lovely earth was young and glad.

. . . . .

My heart was sad; I bowed my head, and wept;
Methought I heard the watching angels cry,
"How long, O Lord, how long?" amid the choir
That sing seraphic round the great white throne.
And then came sullen silence, dread and deep,
As when all nature waits the quivering sword,
To flash sharp through the shrouded thunder gloom.
But there was no response, the sky of bronze
Stirred not to let God's mighty anger pass,
And all went on monotonous: the pain,
The bitterness, the seeming waste of life;
While overhead, prophetic of the end,
Strange mutterings sounded of the gathering storm
By lust unheeded and by wealth unheard.

. . . . .

I had but dreamed. The vision died away,
And then a low sad voice, melodious,
Sang tremblingly, "O Saviour of the world,
Who by thy cross and by thy precious blood
Hast us redeemed, save us and help us, Lord."

Major Whittle in London.

WANDSWORTH.

The special mission conducted by Major Whittle in Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, terminated on Friday last. The interest which was so manifest during the first week of the mission increased in a marked degree as the work advanced. After the general evening service, Major Whittle usually gave a short additional address, always full of sympathy and tenderness. At the close of these simple and helpful discourses, he brought himself and others into personal contact with those who still remained, as though their object and purpose were definitely to accept the blessing of salvation before the day—to some a real day of grace—should close.

During this hour of personal dealing with the anxious and spiritually distressed, a meeting of young women was usually held in the smaller hall, by Miss Whittle, aided by other ladies experienced in making the way of life plain to inquirers and the perplexed. In this way large numbers of factory girls and others were brought face to face with the question of personal salvation; and, happily, some among them declared their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour. Similar meetings were occasionally held by Major Whittle for men, which also led to fruitful and even remarkable results.

At one of these meetings a working man, fired with enthusiasm for the salvation of those of his own class who were still held back through fear and the cruel enticements of sin, gave testimony as to the safety and blessedness of a life redeemed from the wretchedness of a godless course, and made useful in influencing others in the lower social grade. His words, in substance and form were as follow:—One Sunday, some time since, I was passing Down Lodge Hall with three of my mates, when an off-duty policeman, who was near, suggested that we should go in. I asked, "Can we get anything to eat there?" He replied, "No, nothing for your bodies, but you will get something good for your souls." On hearing this, I went in with the other fellows. Until then, I didn't know that I had a soul. The text of the speaker was—"Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I listened, and that sermon turned the whole course of my life. Some of you fellows don't believe that Jesus lives up above. How do you account for the change in my life? For many years I neglected my wife and children on Sundays. I was at home with them hardly an hour on any Sunday during those years. I gave myself to drinking, and was altogether a bad fellow; but here I am, a saved man. I have given up the drink, and now have my Bible, and am always finding some new truth in it. And then, these beautiful Sankey hymns, some of them are in my head all day long. O men, I tell you, it just makes my heart ache to know that my old companions spend their time in the public-house, just as I used to do. Now you see what Christ does for a man when he comes to Him, and how He can keep him from his old habits and make him happy.

Major Whittle was astonished as he witnessed the effect that this poor man's words—directed by the Spirit of God—had upon his amazed and disturbed hearers. It is known that the testimony of this brave Christian workman was followed by the conversion of one of the men present, and by deep conviction in the case of others, whose speedy acceptance of the benefits of the Gospel is expected.

One of the more interesting occasions during the mission was the evening service preceding the closing day of the mission. Major Whittle had previously announced his intention to speak to women, and to mothers in particular; and had invited them to bring their babes with them, whose presence, he assured them, would be no interruption to him while conducting the service. Of the mothers who attended, nearly a hundred brought their infants with them. Major Whittle, always alive to passing opportunities for serving the Master, touched the hearts of these nursing mothers by comparing their love for their helpless ones with the greater love of God, and the deeper compassion of Christ, both for themselves and for their babes. To some of the mothers this statement may have seemed too wonderful. But the Holy Spirit applied the truth, and the hearts of some of the mothers have been filled with new gladness, and, it is believed, with saving peace.

Major Whittle did not confine his abundant labours to Down Lodge Hall. On one occasion he preached at the Wandsworth Baptist Chapel, and on another he conducted a service in the spacious Assembly-room of the Royal Hospital for Incurables, near Putney Heath. There was, perhaps, no other occasion during Major Whittle's mission at Wandsworth when he was so moved with compassion, or so stirred to sympathy, as when addressing and praying with these pain-stricken and weary ones; some of whom, though sufferers through many years, could patiently say, in regard to their affliction, it "is but for a moment." Major Whittle might have remembered such sufferers only; but, as no depth of feeling should ever deter the messenger of the cross from proclaiming salvation through Christ alone, he shunned not to declare to them "All the counsel of God."

In closing this notice of Major Whittle's work at Wandsworth, where he had the co-operation of many friends of the Mission, including Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Rev. J. W. Ewing, Mr. Robert Paton, Mr. M. H. Hodder, Mr. H. W. Maynard, General Anderson, and Captain Tottenham, it may confidently be said that the mission was highly successful. The attendance was satisfactory, and the spirit of union which pervaded the workers, was all that could be desired; and, above all, the spiritual fruitfulness of the mission, estimated by outward signs daily witnessed during the continuance of the work, and specially manifested at the close of the last service, is of the most promising character.

GREENWICH.

There are many who have good cause to remember Major Whittle's visit to Greenwich six years ago, who have been busy in making arrangements for the mission which he began there last Sunday. No doubt he was gratified by meeting the same ministers with whom he formerly worked — Pastor Charles Spurgeon and Rev. A. C. Gray representing the Baptists, Rev. George Elder the Presbyterians, and Rev. G. Norton the Independents. The only new face was that of Rev. J. Bolton, the Wesleyan minister. During the present week the meetings are held in the Baptist Church. A week is to be spent thereafter in the Presbyterian and Wesleyan churches respectively.

The opening meetings were largely attended, though not, perhaps, by many outside the usual congregations. The Bible-readings, however, in the afternoons, will give an opportunity to many to renew their friendship to Major Whittle, and so the evening meetings will be left for those not in the habit of attending church. On Sabbath evening every available space was filled. In a quiet, pathetic address the good news of eternal life were faithfully proclaimed. There has been much prayer that these meetings may be accompanied by definite and manifest blessing.

Bearing in mind that there are about ninety "Sabbath Forenoon Meetings" held simultaneously in different parts of Glasgow by this Society, I may justly extend my notes to embrace a typical gathering in the outskirts, in addition to that described last week in the heart of the city. Perhaps we cannot make a better selection than Springbank, a district lying to the north-west. Here large and admirable mission premises have been erected lately by the co-operating church (Lansdowne U.P.), of which Rev. Mr. Dobbie is the present minister. Indeed, it was Rev. Prof. Eadie, its late pastor, who himself opened this branch some twenty years ago, when it bore a much less imposing aspect than it does to-day.

With commendable promptness, the chairman is among the first to arrive, to inspect or prepare the blackboard helps for the service, to give instructions to the staff officers, &c. It is to this careful interest and oversight that the success of the branch is so largely due. Experience teaches that a large attendance may be expected, and accordingly on the upper floor five little meetings for the juniors are arranged, which vary in membership from 50 to 150 children, graded, according to the school standards, from Standard IV. downwards. While we are taking stock of these, as with bright faces and eager steps they hasten to their seats, the lower Hall, seated for 500, has been filling with senior lads and girls (from twelve to twenty years of age or so), and when we enter, they are singing a hymn as the time for opening the meeting approaches.

The devotional exercises are varied and short, specially adapted to young anxious ones and to young Christians.

The Bible portion is John iii. 1-17, which is read simultaneously by all, a fine volume of sound rolling out these grand old Gospel sentences.

The comment by the chairman is short and memorable. Sight and sound are both pressed into service as a movable blackboard is raised to view from behind its screen; and every eye sees and every ear hears the solemn words which, in the dead of night, startled Nicodemus of old—

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN!"

To make the truth more apparent, the following words appear beneath—

BORN ONCE—DIE TWICE;

BORN TWICE—DIE ONCE—*

the whole being printed in the form of a tablet in beautifully coloured large type. No one can forget or ignore the lesson, which is driven home with conciseness, clearness, and force. The speaker for the day happens to be one of the "Old Boys" of the Society, who had been "caught" in its earliest days. He had a story worth telling, and he told it well. As a result, his audience listened well, as in plain simple words, he told of his young days—the meetings he attended, and the strivings of the Spirit with his rebellious nature; then of his running away from home, touchingly describing that morning when he put on two suits of clothes, and walked out of the house without saying good-bye to his mother; then of his wanderings in sadness, distress, and sin, till the Lord laid hold on him. Then of his later life, and of his position as Yeoman of the Signals on board Her Majesty's yacht, Victoria and Albert.

Use is here made of another of the blackboards, on which is displayed the British navy signal a flag of two red and two white squares, flying at the masthead. This gives point to the address, and calls off the thoughts from the details of the speaker's career to the great fight with sin and Satan, in which all should prepare to engage.

"PREPARE TO ENGAGE THE ENEMY!"—

But not only were the scholars of the audience appealed to, for a word in due season, though of a different nature, was found for the monitors, as the speaker recounted his thankful remembrance of that monitor, who first, putting his hand on his shoulder, talked faithfully to him about his soul, and brought him to his knees in the hall one Sabbath morning, twenty years ago. For five years this "Old Foundry Boy" has been superintendent of a large Band of Hope, and often has to address congregations numbering a thousand and more.

Such an illustration of fruit found "after many days" should stimulate the present generation of monitors and teachers, not in Glasgow only, but everywhere, in their arduous, but loving labour for the Lord; and who can tell how many more wayward lads who have been brought under the influence of such God-given agencies shall yet rise up and call them blessed?

There is another mission in Glasgow, of which perhaps the outside world hears but little, but which is none the less doing an admirable soul-saving work; and that is conducted by the brothers Alexander and Charles Anderson, whose name is a household word in the city, from their association with that palace of merchandise—the Polytechnic, and for many good works with which they are connected.

At their own expense they maintain the mission, with all its tributary agencies. This comprises a large and handsome hall, furnished with an organ, and seating 700 persons.

The Sabbath mornings are devoted to the little ones, and they are! In the afternoon and evening adults are gathered in; and these, with three other evening meetings a week, form the ordinary curriculum of the work. Periodically, missions are held for a week or more, conducted by members of the Evangelisation Society, or other evangelists.

But the work done within these four walls is by no means the most arduous part of the whole, as Mr. Hogg, the missionary in charge, knows to his cost—or say, rather, to his joy, for it is a real joy to him to do his share. This is to get the names and addresses of those who are attracted by the hearty singing, or from whatever cause, into the meetings, and visit them in their homes. And the latter is no light task, for they come literally "from the east and from the west; from the north and from the south"; so that this missionary-pastor finds his energies fairly taxed to keep pace with the spiritual needs of his scattered flock.

As may be supposed, he not infrequently has pretty rough material to work upon. Poverty, sin, and often an utter ignorance of the things of God challenge his progress at every step; but the power of the Gospel message, accompanied by sympathy and love, has achieved many a victory, and not a few are now walking in newness of life. His experiences would make an interesting narrative, and I hope any of my readers who find themselves in the locality will take advantage of the opportunity to have a chat with him.

THIS ENDS MY SERIES of articles on Scottish Missions. Next week, however, will be given a descriptive sketch, from another pen, of Rev. William Ross's work in Cowcaddens—an agency of no less importance than any of which I have written. Sketches of a similar nature, in continuation of the series, will be welcomed, from ministers and Christian workers in any part of Scotland, concerning the spheres of labour in which they or their friends are respectively engaged.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, in addition to his many other engagements is about to become editor of the American edition of The Christian Herald.

Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost has arranged to proceed to India in the autumn to conduct an evangelistic mission there. Particulars will be given in a later issue.

Professor Drummond, in response to a numerously signed requisition from students at the University of Melbourne, is to leave for Australia in the middle of March.

Rev. James Stalker, of Free St. Matthew's Church, Glasgow, has accepted an invitation from the Theological Faculty of Yale University to deliver a course of lectures on "Preaching" there next year.

Mr. F. N. Charrington has been recommended by his medical adviser to take a rest, and has gone to the Canary Islands for the month of March Mr. W. R. Lane will be the preacher at the Great Assembly Hall during the month.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, the general secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, left Bombay last week for Colombo, having finished his visitation of the Society's stations in North-West India. It is probable he will arrive in London about April 20.

Mr. Gladstone has all but finished his articles on the Old Testament for Good Words. The first, on "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture," will appear in the April number, and this will be followed by others on "The Creation Story," "The Mosaic Legislation," "The Psalms," "The Method of the Old Testament," &c.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has left England for Canada, hoping to recover health by a prolonged sojourn there. His recent visit to the American continent was very beneficial, but he has since suffered a slight relapse. Mr. Weaver purposes living at Grimsby, Ontario. The prayers of our readers will accompany him, and invoke blessing on his future Gospel labours.

Mr. James Rennie, the colporteur, so well known to our readers as "The Converted Shepherd Boy," had the misfortune some time since to fall into a pit, by which his ankle was twisted out of joint, and he has not been able to get it replaced. Having to walk so much this weakness is no small trial to him, and he says in a recent letter, "I shall always be a lame man until I get to heaven."

THE BIBLE AND PRAYER UNION conducted by Rev. T. Richardson, of Stepney, had enrolled, up to February 1, 294,400 members. New members have recently been added from Brazil, Burmah, Ceylon, Cyprus, Hong Kong, Jamaica, Natal, Naples, New Zealand, Palestine, Persia, Prince Edward Island, Sweden, Smyrna, and the Argentine Republic. The Post Office branch of the Bible and Prayer Union has extended to the United States of America.

DAKOTA.—The Christian is a very welcome visitor at our home, and has a little circle of friends outside. At the beginning of this year a few Christian workers residing here, organised a Soul Winners' League, which is a non-sectarian society for united Christian work. Prayer meetings and Bible-readings have been held weekly, with a view of preparing the way for a work of grace, and, through the blessing of God, we hope much good may result from this effort. Constitutional Prohibition, which was adopted by North and South Dakota last fall, when they entered statehood, will prove a blessing in proportion as the liquor law is enforced. A strong League for this purpose has been organised, which is likely to do good service. Those who have the cause of Christ at heart need to be uncompromising in the stand they take for the truth.—Yours cordially, Herbert Gregory.

For the Young.

MISS TYSON IN GREENOCK.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

A good deal has been written about Dr. Pentecost's mission in Scotland for the last two years, and occasional reference has been made to the wonderful work among the young carried on by Miss Tyson. Dr. Pentecost has often said, however, that it is a question whether this lady's work is not really the more important and fruitful of the two.

For years the sisters, Misses Tyson, were connected with the large mission fields superintended by the evangelist's church in Brooklyn. When he resigned his charge there, to give himself wholly to gospel work, he detached Miss Bessie Tyson from her work in Brooklyn, and organised a department for the young in connection with his evangelistic meetings. From the beginning the plan was owned of God. When Dr. Pentecost came to this country, he arranged for Miss Tyson's coming too. At first her efforts were not favourably considered by the committees. Nevertheless she came. By her skill and evident power with children, and especially by her wise and tactful methods, she speedily won the confidence of the Glasgow Committee; she also won the hearts of hundreds of boys and girls to the Lord during her first mission in that city.

So greatly was the S.S. Committee of the Free Church impressed with Miss Tyson's work that they sought to obtain her to work exclusively under their auspices. But she declined to leave Dr. Pentecost's mission. The Free Church thereupon, through Dr. Pentecost's influence, secured the services of her elder sister, who resigned a position in the Brooklyn church, and came to Scotland last autumn. She has been at work ever since, in the Free Church, with marked success.

Miss Bessie Tyson, who works with Dr. Pentecost, is a lady of pleasing appearance, quiet though quick in manner, with a decided "American accent," which, however, we are learning to like. Her methods of work are almost entirely new to us, and certainly the results are as wonderful and blessed as the methods are new. Let me try and describe one of her meetings.

Just under the pulpit, on a platform raised about four feet from the floor of the church, stands Miss Tyson, dressed in a plain black gown, with a modest little hat on her head, such as she would wear in the street. Behind her is a blackboard some five by six feet in size placed on an easel. On this blackboard are some wonderfully clever drawings in coloured chalks. They are not fully developed, but sufficiently, in connection with the Scriptural text, to be suggestive. They have already caught the eager attention of the children, as well as the parents. In front of the platform is a sight calculated to make one glad. There is a closely packed audience of young people, from ten to seventeen and eighteen years of age. Every seat is filled. The boys are on one side and the girls on the other, with the younger children in the forward seats. The galleries are filled with parents and adult friends.

Miss Tyson exercises a wonderful control over her audience. Her first lesson is on order. She tells the children that she never raps for order, or rings a bell, or says "s-s-s-h"; she expects perfect quiet, and will have nothing else. She impresses upon them in a pleasant yet earnest way that they are in God's presence and under his eye. She takes a little watch out of her belt and holds it up. After having asked what it is and what it is for, and having received the answer, she proceeds to say that she uses it, not only for a "time keeper," but as her "order keeper." Holding the watch about twelve inches from her ear, she says:—"Whenever there is so much noise in this meeting that I can't hear this watch tick I will have to stop. So whenever you see this watch coming out and going up here toward my ear, you will know what it means." It is simply marvellous what that little watch has done. It has only to appear to insure an instantaneous hush, even in a quiet house. Sometimes it only peeps out of the belt, and having produced the desired effect it goes back. This gift of securing order, together with her unvarying quietness and pleasantness of manner is the element of her power. Her teaching, as intimated, is jointly through the ear and the eye. Her drawings are very cleverly and deftly done; in part before the children come in, and in part before their eyes. Sometimes she makes the text develop the pictures, and sometimes the picture suggests the text. She writes or draws them in as occasion requires. She handles her chalk with almost incredible quickness. A few bold outlines, or the rapid "printing in" of a text, and a great truth is before the eye. Her speech is simple, and unaffected. She simply talks to the children; asks questions and makes them utter what the Spirit and the Word have suggested to their own hearts. She rarely speaks more than half an hour, but the interest is sustained throughout. I have never known her to make the children laugh by anything she says, though sometimes they create a ripple of laughter by their own remarks or answers. Yet Miss Tyson's face is that of a happy Christian whose heart is full of laughter. Sometimes she relates an incident out of her own experience with children, which will clinch her subject and perhaps bring tears to the eyes of old and young. She is not profuse in stories, though, when she does tell one, it tells in turn upon the audience. Adults are as profoundly moved by her lessons as are the children.

Her teaching is eminently Scriptural; the Gospel is clearly but simply and practically put. She seems constantly to be conscious of the presence of the Spirit, and has much to say of His work. She deals in a remarkable way with sin, and one striking feature of her work among the children is the deep conviction which these young people manifest in the after-meetings.

At the close of her address, she asks those to remain who are not Christians and who desire to be. These she gathers together and she speaks to them a few minutes in the mass; then she apportions them off personally to Christian workers to be dealt with. This is most delicate work. But Miss Tyson has had her workers together and has closely catechised them as to their experience or fitness for dealing with children; and she is very careful in selecting her workers. She keeps the parents closely informed and in sympathy with the children by a well-arranged system of communication.

The enthusiasm among the young people, especially among lads from twelve to sixteen, is unbounded. The following remark by a young lad who is a clerk in a bank will illustrate: "Man," said he to a companion, "yon is just splendid, it's won'erfu'; it's gran'. She would mak' a proper agent for ony Bank in Scotland." This gives some indication of the interest she awakens among the young. Greenock is full of young disciples, who are "going everywhere preaching Jesus and the resurrection."

Miss Tyson spends her third and last week of a mission entirely with the young converts; instructing them in the way of life more perfectly, and in the way of service for the Lord. It is impossible not to be profoundly gratified at this movement among our young people. A gentleman, who has assisted Miss Tyson in this work, says that probably there will be not far from three hundred young people definitely out on the Lord's side as a result of the mission.

SOLDIERS AT SHORNCLIFFE.

By An Officer.

Being ordered for duty at Shorncliffe, and not desiring to swell the ranks of the "great unemployed," I was on the look-out for Christian work, and soon came across that spot in Sandgate dear to the hearts of so many of our soldiers: "Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute." There I found a real spiritual work going on. During my two years' duty in the Camp, many of my happiest evenings have been spent at the Home, where we have realised from time to time the "good hand of our God upon us." I subjoin a few incidents which may be more interesting to your readers than abstract generalisations:—

Sergt. L——, converted while at Shorncliffe, is now actively engaged in the Lord's vineyard; once a week in barracks he holds a meeting for his comrades, and in his spare time assists in the general mission work where he is quartered.

Private B——, whose bright face and hearty singing I well remember, left us for the north west of Ireland, and we hear that he has obtained a large room, which he calls a "little Soldiers' Home," and is working busily there among his fellow soldiers, seeking to lead them into the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Our missionary some time ago met a lad, evidently a raw recruit, wandering along the beach, lost in admiration of the expanse of water. Accosting him with the cheery, "Well, chum! how are you?" he was told that he had never been at the seaside before. "Out sight-seeing are you? Come along and see a sight worth looking at!" so saying, he escorted Private B——, to the Institute, much amused when he rolled out in good Irish "Shure, this is too good for we soldiers!" The young fellow thus introduced to our work became one of our regular attendants, and the other day we had the joy of hearing him confess Christ.

The Home, "too good for we soldiers," is eminently suitable and convenient. On the ground floor we have a tract depôt, comfortable reading-room, refreshment-bar, and mission-hall seating about 120. Upstairs there is a library and class-room used for the smaller meetings. The walls are brightened by illuminated texts, which as silent messengers have been blessed to many of our men.

Private A——, for instance, who had a praying mother, was pulled up short one day in front of John iii. 3: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," and "could not get past it anyhow," thus proving the truth of "My word shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please."

Every night a meeting of some sort is held, and on Sunday afternoon the Christian men are urged to go round the quarters of their respective corps with invitations to the Gospel meeting in the evening. I earnestly commend this work to the prayerful and practical sympathy of your readers. It is entirely maintained by voluntary contributions, and the trustees are desirous to open an endowment fund, for which there is great need. Mr Hull, the missionary (late Gunner R.H.A.), is deservedly popular among the men, and has their best interests well at heart.

AT MARSEILLES a Lord's Day Rest Union has been founded, after a public meeting attended by seven hundred people of various shades of political and religious belief.

The Story of a Devoted Life.*

Besides many such minor occasions, two very striking events which powerfully impressed the public mind, furnished the Christian worker with special opportunities of telling out the message of the Gospel. These were the fall of the Tay bridge and the "Dark Day."

The falling of the great bridge, on the evening of Sabbath, December 28, 1879, involving the total destruction of a passing train with its precious freight of seventy or eighty passengers, not one of whom escaped, struck the community as with a bolt from the unseen. In the thick gloom of the tragic event, God seemed to come very near. Hearts were opened to the truth that had never been opened before; chords vibrated to the message of Divine mercy in souls long silent and dead. Many resolved never again to travel on the Lord's Day—and they never did. Not a few were awakened to a sense of things eternal, and some found the gate of heaven hard by

THE WRECK OF THE TAY BRIDGE.

Our worker, ever on the watch for opportunities, found innumerable chinks and rents suddenly riven in the hard soil of human hearts, into which she was not slow to drop the precious seed of God's Word.

A widowed mother told me the following story. She had formerly resided on the south bank of the Tay, in the county of Fife. One Sabbath evening her son, a mason, at that time employed on the north side of the river, said to his mother: "I am going to cross the Tay to-night, and be ready to start work in time to-morrow; it is so disagreeable going so far in these dark winter mornings." It was the first time he had proposed to use the sacred day for a secular purpose; his mother did not like it, but she held her peace. As he was getting ready for the journey the young man suddenly stopped and said:

"Mother, do you hear the water rushing?"

"No," was her reply: she heard no such sound.

Again he stopped and said, "Hush! don't you hear that rush of water?"

He went to the window and to the door, but found no sign of water. In that little cottage there were no water pipes, and there could be no rush of water. In vain his mother affirmed that the sound was in his own ears: the young man declared he had never heard such a "mighty rushing of water." His preparations finished, he set out; and that night he went down with the bridge into the "mighty rushing waters" of the Tay, and perished. Whether there be anything or nothing in presentiments or impressions without a known cause, we cannot tell: man has no line long enough to fathom the mysteries of the universe. But this we do know: Mortal man is crossing a bridge that is sure one day to go down—the bridge of life; and it is wisdom to see that we are crossing on lines safe for soul and conscience as well as for life and limb. It needs no great quickness of ear to hear the sound of rushing waters—the mighty rushing waters of death and judgment; and he is the chief fool of time who does not prepare for eternity.

Some may call that broken-hearted mother superstitious; but her son's mysterious impression and her own great sorrow had laid her at the feet of the Lord as with chastened spirit she reviewed life, and listened to the counsels of heavenly wisdom and grace. She now hears the sound of "mighty rushing waters" every day.

A mail guard whose duty it was to carry the letter-bags to Edinburgh and back, not only on ordinary days of the week, but also on every alternate Sabbath, was one morning preparing for church when he was summoned, though not in his turn, to cross the Tay in charge of the mails.

"Are you never to get to church with me?" asks his wife.

"I will give this up altogether," was the guard's reply.

He went, but never returned: he perished with the train. It was touching to see his little dog, day after day, all the hours of the day and at night also, watching for the return of his master. There he sat, outside the door, as we saw him, peering into the distance; so absorbed as to take no notice of anything or anyone passing. Those two little eyes, so full of longing and wonder and pathos, seemed to say, "Oh, my dear master, why are you so long in coming?" Long and lovingly the poor doggie watched and waited; but his master never came. Did Christians only show the same loyalty to their great Master, and in like manner wait for his coming, how dead to earth and how mighty for service should the Church be! So it is in clouds of deepest shadow that the Lord many a time enters the house, as that sorrowful widow and her fatherless boys can tell. Where a majestic providence goes first, it is easy for the humblest servant to follow and serve.

One day* in the summer of 1884, Dundee was shrouded in midnight darkness. At noon one could not recognise another at the distance of two paces: the gloom of the darkened heavens was more awful than the deepest night. The appearance of the sky betokened a tempest of portentous fury. The lightnings descending in perpendicular shafts lighted up the darkness with appalling vividness; and appearing at so many points in masses of flame, seemed about to lay the entire city in ashes. No one had ever witnessed darkness so phenomenal, and the boldest could not escape the dread of dire calamities. Many thought the last day, "the great day of the Lord," had come. In factories and other public works all hands were staid. Many of the women were paralysed with terror. Some were struck dumb with panic. Others were crying aloud to heaven for mercy or begging their neighbours to pray for them. In striking contrast the Christian girls played a noble part. Comporting themselves calmly, they comforted one another and sang the songs of Zion in joyful anticipation of the coming of the King.

"God is our refuge and our strength,
In straits a present aid,
Therefore although the earth remove,
We will not be afraid."

Their serenity, their holy songs, their words of counsel to the distracted unbelievers, their lofty courage—proved to be a testimony to the reality, power, and blessedness of true religion, which yielded good fruits at the time, and has ever since put to silence and shame the scorn of the ungodly. The impression, wide-spread and deep, furnished the Christian worker with a fine opportunity; and a goodly number of souls, it is believed, were saved.

At the hour of deepest gloom many were the incidents illustrative of human nature in its varied phases. One man, a scavenger, after surveying the heavens from the opening of a court where with others he had taken shelter, threw down his great broom with a happy, farewell dash, saying: "I am done with it!" and hastened away.

An old woman cried to her neighbours: "Oh, run and tak' my man oot o' the public-house; I would na' like the Lord to find him there."

A man was seen leaving a tavern, and as he hurried along the street, was noticed now and again to drop something in a furtive manner from his pockets. It proved to be a pack of cards, which he felt would be poor evidence in his favour at the judgment-seat. Doubtless when that dread hour arrives, there is much else in men's pockets that will need to be dropped: though such preparations will be rather hurried and late.

In one district of the town, largely inhabited by Irish Roman Catholics, many in their alarm sought a refuge in their beds, under beds, and in all manner of holes. In the public works, also, when the storm was past, not a few were found in strange hiding-places. So true to nature is the Bible, which tells of Adam hiding from the presence of the Lord among the trees of the garden; and prophetically describes the wicked, now so bold in sin, as seeking a refuge in the last day in the bowels of the earth, calling upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the presence of God and the Lamb.

In the midst of the storm, Isabella called into the room where she was sitting with her husband, her servant maid, who, in the dread of coming judgment, was trembling from head to foot. Some time previously the girl had been awakened to a sense of sin, but the convictions halted. The terrible darkness was now preaching to her of sin and doom: every thunder peal and lightning flash increased her alarm, and the Judge seemed to be at the door. Her mistress spoke to her of the more awful tempest that burst on the head of the Redeemer, and pointed her to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." It proved to be the hour of decision. The Lord Jesus came to her in the storm. Above the roar of the elements and the voices of her own terrors, she heard Him saying, "It is I: be not afraid!" She believed and rejoiced. The storm in her soul was changed into calm; and a consistent life has subsequently attested the reality of the change. So, often have dark days led to bright lives. And on that memorable day in Dundee, when thousands of Christians, themselves enjoying "the peace of God that passeth all understanding," raised their voices to heaven in fervent supplication for their terror-stricken fellow citizens, and also earnestly entreated them to come with them to the place of refuge, it surely was not all in vain. To not a few the "Dark Day" was an epoch of the soul, and it will be a memory for ever; for the Lord, they knew, was passing by.

THE BIBLE IN JAPAN.

Mrs. Prinsep sends an interesting letter to Echoes of Service, giving details of her experiences in Japan, whither she went from Marseilles last autumn. She says:—

Regarding Bible distribution, I find the field so immense and comparatively so little touched that I feel overwhelmed. The doors are wide open. The Scottish Bible Society has a depôt at Yokohama in charge of Mr. Annand, a young Scotchman, where I can get well-bound Japanese New Testaments. Thus, with funds supplied by Mrs. A. E. Robertson, of Chesils, Hampstead, I have already been able to distribute more than 2000 New Testaments; besides beautiful Bibles in five volumes, my own gift to all the lighthouses on the coast, fifty-one in number. I am sincerely grateful to the Master for sending me here, and for giving me sympathetic helpers.

Pray that the Lord may by his Holy Spirit open the hearts of these young Japanese to understand the Scriptures. In spite of all the drawbacks from rationalism and other evils we are not discouraged. We believe that the Lord is working, and our ardent hope is that we shall soon see a band of Japanese gathered to the name of the Lord. More earnestly than ever, we commend Japan to your prayers and your faith. Instances of conversion by the reading of the Word of God alone, are not wanting.

The Late BISHOP SARGENT, D.D.,

Of Tinnevelly, South India.

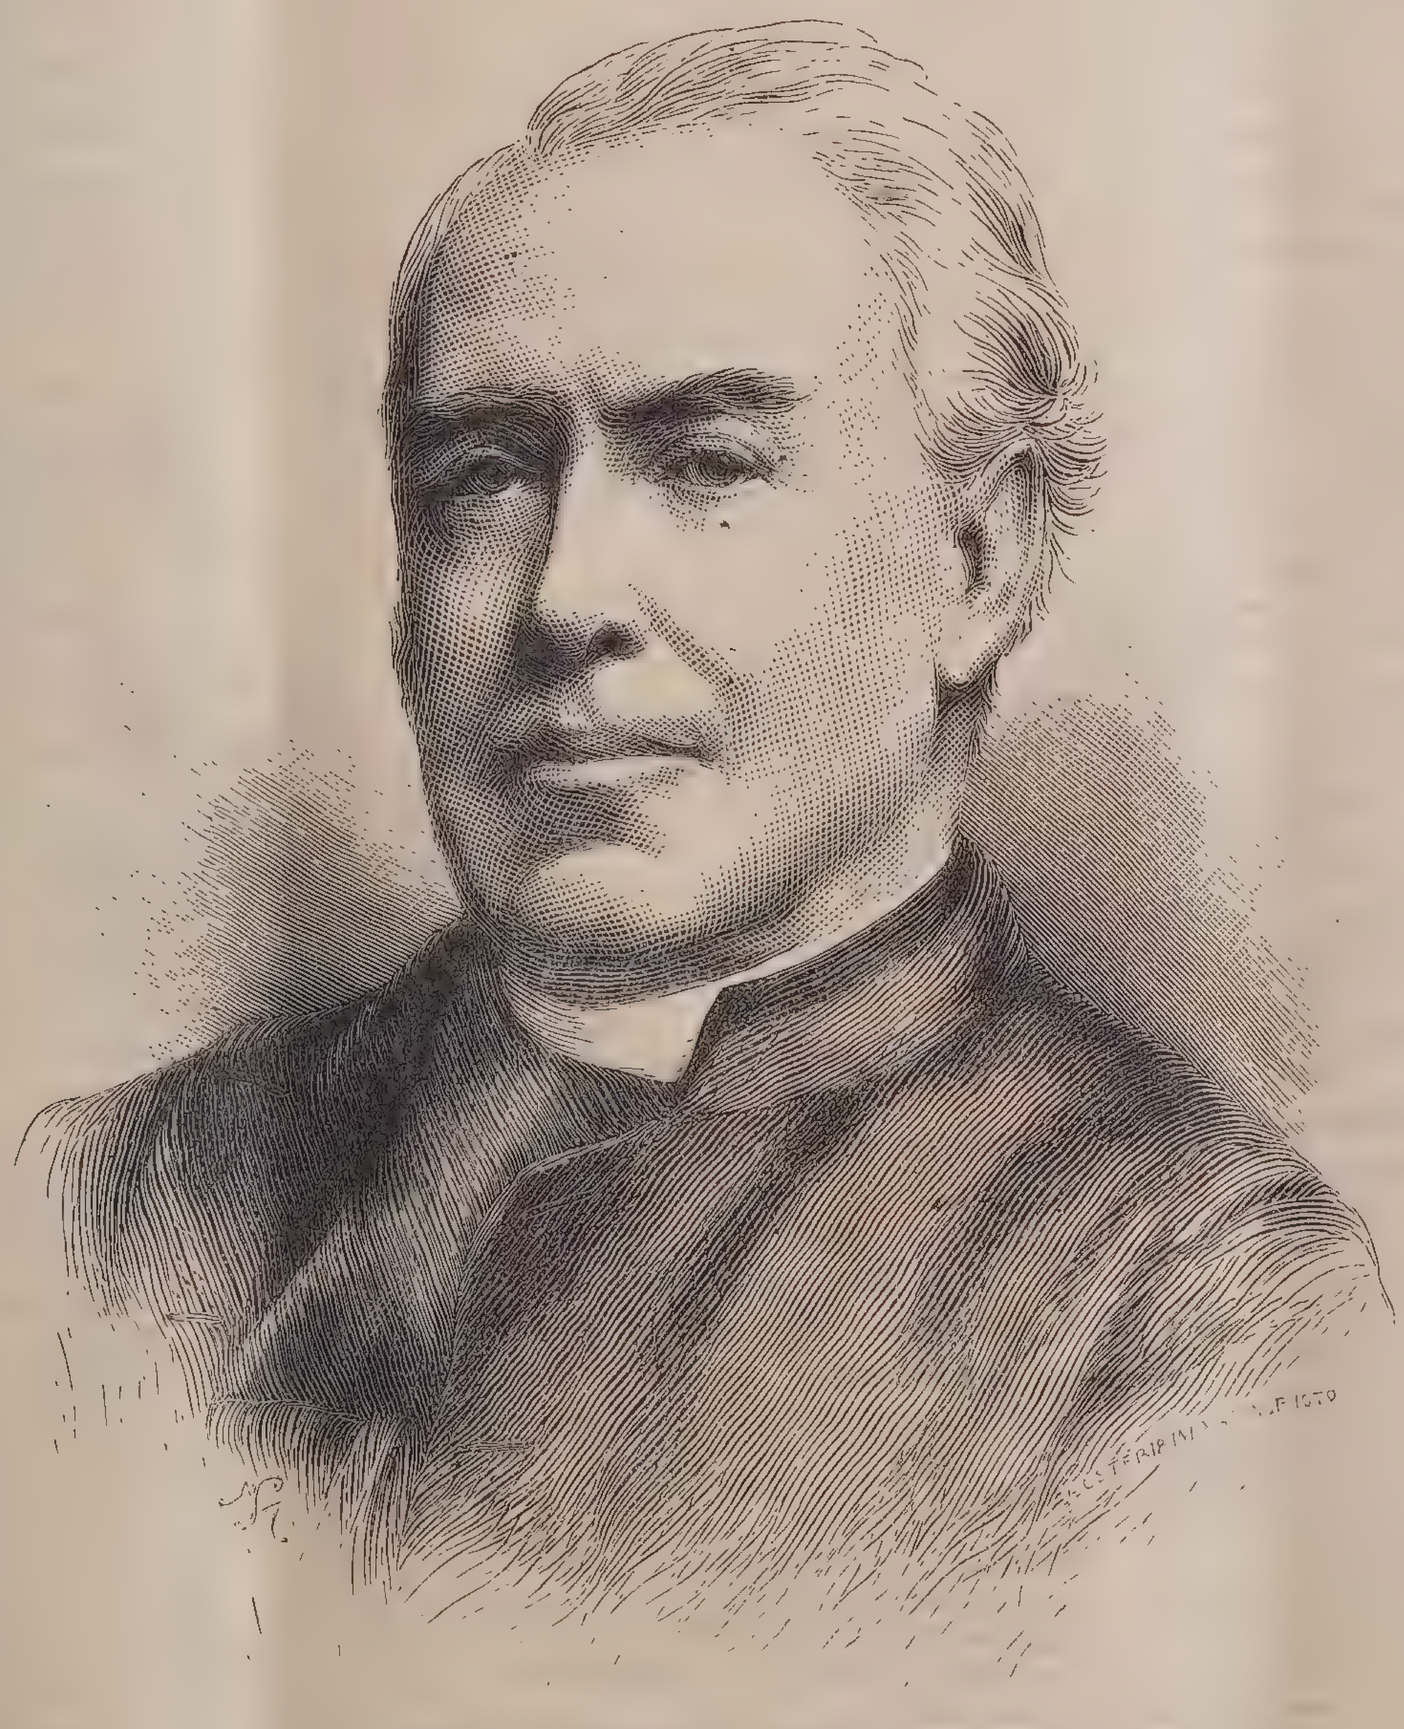
OUR present sketch has for its subject one who, with conspicuous success, filled for a long period important spheres in the Church of Christ. Having one aim, and that a high one, he was diligent in service; being brave and persevering, he gave no quarter to fear or discouragement. His service of fifty-five years abundantly proves him to have been a chosen vessel of the Lord to perform a great work in South India.

Edward Sargent was born in Paris in 1815, and early showed a leaning to Christian work. At the age of twenty he went out to India as a lay agent. There were then comparatively few native Christians in Tinnevelly, and only one ordained native clergyman in connection with the Church of England. After, for some years, superintending the seminary at Palamcottah and visiting the village schools, he left for England with a view to qualifying for work of a more definitely spiritual kind. Having undergone a course of training at the Church Missionary College, Islington, he returned to Tinnevelly, and, in 1842, was stationed at Suviseshapuram, where he laboured with great diligence for the building up of the infant Church. In 1850 he was transferred to Palamcottah to take charge of the district, and train candidates for the ministry. On the establishment of the Preparandi Institution two years later, he became its Principal, and retained that post until he was made Bishop in 1877.

About five hundred young men passed through the Institution during the time it was under his fostering care. Besides the daily instruction in the class-room, the Bishop translated several theological works of great value. He was very anxious for the conversion and spiritual growth of the students, being deeply impressed with the conviction that those who would do real spiritual work must be led by the Spirit of God.

As Bishop-coadjutor to the Bishop of Madras, Dr. Sargent was emphatically the right man in the right place. On the occasion of his lamented death in October last, our contemporary, The Record, said:—

Under his wise guidance the Native Church made remarkable progress; villages were occupied, churches were built, schools were opened, and converts were won from the worship of Siva and Vishnu to the love and service of the Lord Jesus Christ. Of the Native Church as an organised body, it may be said that he fostered the growth of its corporate life, and lovingly tended its spiritual welfare. He was not only loyal to the spiritual principles of the Church Missionary Society, but honestly strove to carry out its Native Church policy. There may have been times when Bishop Sargent felt that development was being pushed on too rapidly, but the committee never had a missionary more loyal to its wishes, or more full of confidence in its general plans. A thorough master of the Tamil language, he, until lately, preached regularly every Sunday to a large congregation. His thorough acquaintance with native modes of thought enabled him to deal with cases of difficulty as they arose, whether with individuals, or communities, with marvellous skill. He was always accessible. The poorest Christian from a distant village could come with his troubles and cares to the Bishop, and always received attention. Those who know anything of life in India will easily understand how this perfect acquaintance with the native language and native thought, combined with a loving, sympathetic spirit, gave him the natural qualifications for a ruler in the Native Church. Add to these endowments the high spiritual tone of all his ministrations, the devout, earnest way in which all his work was done, and those who knew the man and his work will agree in what was once said to the writer by an experienced missionary, "Tinnevelly may have another Bishop, but not another Edward Sargent.'



(From a Photograph by Messrs. Foster & Martin, Melbourne.)

The life of Bishop Sargent is to a very large extent the history of the Tinnevelly Mission. The period from 1835, when he was a catechist among the people, to 1885, when his missionary jubilee was celebrated, was one of great achievements undertaken in the name of Christ. At the beginning of the fifty years there were Christians in 224 villages in which the C.M.S. worked; at the close the number of such villages was 1008. There were 8693 Christians and catechumens in 1835; fifty years later the number was 56,287. In the same period the native ministry advanced from 1 to 68. In other departments the work went forward in a similarly cheering manner. From doing literally nothing for the support of the ministrations of the Gospel in their midst, the people so grew in religious knowledge and the grace of God that at the time of the Bishop's jubilee their contributions amounted to 33,000 rupees per annum.

At the present time the affairs of the church in Tinnevelly are so largely managed by the people themselves, that not a single native pastor draws his stipend from the foreign Missionary Society, the pecuniary responsibility of which is now confined to an annually decreasing grant-in-aid to the several church councils. The Bishop's missionary course began in seed time and ended in luxuriant harvest. He watched the church from youth to manhood, and ever with a devotion which was inspiring to all about him.

The Bishop's jubilee was naturally an event of great interest. It was celebrated on July 14, 1885, and the day was one of widespread rejoicing. Leading members of Hindu society added their hearty congratulations to those of the native Christian body, who presented him with an English Bible, suitably inscribed. Some little girls from the Tinnevelly High School placed garlands around the Bishop's neck, and presented him with limes. In many ways the people manifested their deep love for him. Acknowledging the enthusiastic tribute to his popularity, Dr. Sargent reiterated his strong desire to draw all men with the cords of love, and expressed a hope that God's blessing would abide upon his people and their families, filling their hearts with joy and peace.

It must not be supposed that the church Bishop Sargent so lovingly superintended is perfect. He was the last man to claim this. There are many nominal Christians who need conversion of heart, and many true Christians who need quickened spiritual life. It was the same in Apostolic days, and it is the same wherever there is a considerable Christian population now. Moreover, the Church Missionary Society is anxious that Tinnevelly should not be supposed to be a Christian country. The heathen are still in a vast majority; and some devoted young Cambridge men have lately gone out to organise and carry on fresh evangelistic work among them.

The Bishop's long service in the mission field was broken by three visits to England and one to Australia. The last visit to England was in 1888, when he came to attend the Lambeth Conference. In the course of interviews with the committee of the C.M.S., he dwelt with delight upon the happiness of a missionary's life as he had found it, but he was too ill at the time to attend any of the meetings. He returned to Tinnevelly the same year "to end his days among his own people." Though he did not recover health, he rallied; but about twelve months after bidding farewell to friends in England he passed to his rest, the call coming to him on October 11 last. His spiritual confidence when the end came was beautifully clear. Asked whether he was happy, a bright smile lit up his face as he replied, "Yes, happy in Jesus: blessed Jesus." It was with these words that he fell asleep. His final message to the Native Church was an exhortation to "stand fast in the faith," and to "love one another." At the funeral the entire European population assembled to pay a tribute of respect to his memory, while the native Christians attended in thousands. The hymns sung during the burial service were, "Shall we gather at the River?" and "Safe in the arms of Jesus." This last had proved a solace to the Bishop while on his death-bed.

The loss of his wife, in 1883, was a very severe blow to the Bishop. Writing in The Church Missionary Intelligencer, Rev. Edward Sell, of Madras, says:—

> For twenty-eight years they had lived and prayed and worked together. She was a true helpmeet to him in his work, and her influence on the younger Christian women was very great. Mrs. Sargent's girls' school was one of the most successful in South India. The Bishop retained the charge of it after his wife's death; and those who have stayed in his house will remember the bright, happy-looking girls who used to come in to family prayers in the morning, and how the Bishop, after the usual reading of the appointed chapter of the Bible, by careful questioning, sought to convey instruction to the children committed to his charge. In connection with this subject of family prayer, it may not be generally known that in the Bishop's house a portion of time was set apart every Sunday morning, after breakfast, for special intercession for the children of missionaries, and for the Missionaries' Children's Home.

Working in pleasant harmony with other missionaries, the Bishop gained a respect far beyond denominational borders. The Harvest Field, of Madras, has well said of him:—

> Throughout his diocese he was like a father moving among his own children. They had all been brought into close relations with him, either from their early childhood, or from the time of their baptism from heathenism. He knew them all—their names, their history, their habits, their danger, and their strength. And they all loved him. He had no easy task to guide the C.M.S. churches of Tinnevelly, won from heathenism, to self-support and self-rule; and if he did not achieve a perfect success, he yet accomplished much; more, probably, than any other could have done. But it is not as a great administrator, or even as a great missionary scholar like his friend, Bishop Caldwell, that Bishop Sargent will be best remembered. He will be known chiefly as a man of strong personality, of wide catholicity, a prince among vernacular preachers, and as a missionary who gave his whole heart to India for Christ's sake, made India his home, and stayed of loving choice to die among the people of his adoption.

Unquestionably Dr. Sargent was, in the true sense of the word, a great missionary. Convinced that his life was in the line of God's plan, and sure of the graciousness of the Divine purpose with regard to India, he laboured steadily and persistently, addressing himself to his duty, and discharging it in the fear of God. May such courageous and useful men never be lacking to the Church of Christ, both at home and abroad.

THE COW CROSS MISSION.

In face of many difficulties, Mr. William Catlin pushes forward his good work at Clerkenwell. The need is great, and the surroundings demand just such operations as those of the Cow Cross Mission. We rejoice to learn that the agencies of which St. John's Hall, Clerkenwell, is the centre, are proving a blessing to many. The Sunday-schools are the means of influencing the young in the right way; the mothers' meeting is, we are assured, attended by some deeply taught, spiritually minded women, whose houses are veritable beacon lights down in the "slums." Of course, temperance work is vigorously carried on.

The Mission Home of Rest is at Woking, where some earnest sympathisers with the London work have recently been found. The poor are helped in various ways, Mr. Catlin's endeavours being seconded by his devoted wife and daughters, and supported by many volunteer labourers.

It is now thirty years since Mr. Catlin began mission work in the neighbourhood of Clerkenwell. He is the same earnest man he ever has been, his references including Mr. Gawin Kirkham, and Mr. F. Newth, of New Barnet. We regret to observe that the balance-sheet shows £177 due to the treasurer. Mr. Catlin's address is 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS are going forward in Russia. At St. Petersburg alone 2000 children are under weekly instruction.

HONFLEUR AND HAVRE.

Crossing to Honfleur a little while ago, one of the men connected with a steamer was so good as to tell me of the Sailors' Rest there, and of the great advantage it was to the English seamen who visited the port. I found it to be extremely comfortable, under the care of a Christian couple. Most of the seamen visiting Honfleur sleep on board their ships, but evidently, so far as they could, they made this their home ashore.

Four weather-beaten men came into the reading-room that Saturday afternoon. One of them said:—"You see, sir, we've got no proper place on board for prayer, and we always come up here before we sail, to have a word together. Perhaps you will join us?" I did not think I was a formalist, but I was not prepared for the prompt, straightforward method in which that prayer-meeting was carried out. We were in the heart of it before landsmen could have chosen a hymn. Prayer was to these men a reality. The dangers of the sea, the need of guidance for themselves and families, and the spread of Christ's kingdom on the coming Sabbath by the preaching of the Word—these were presented with child-like faith at the throne of grace. We rose from our knees; had a hearty hand-shake; and they were off without losing a moment. Such a meeting for prayer—so direct, so trustful, so specific—I never saw.

On board the steamer for Havre I was so fortunate as to meet with a young Swede, who was on the staff of the English Sailors' Home there. I accompanied him, and received a hearty welcome from the superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Lennox. How thankful our country ought to be to Lady Beauchamp and her friends for establishing and maintaining this fine institution. Without it our English seamen who come into this port—the Liverpool of France—would be at the mercy of low French boarding-house keepers, whose desire for making money knows no control. He would be in the midst of every temptation and vice. How simple, thoughtless, and silly poor Jack is can scarcely be imagined. But here he is well looked after. If he has cash, it is taken care of; if he has none, and this is often the case, he obtains food and shelter among friends until a ship can be found for him.

For some time the need of a coffee bar had been strongly pressed upon the management, and I was thankful to see that a fine house has been adapted for that purpose. It is in a conspicuous place opposite the harbour. It shows bright with the faces of kind Christian friends, nice furniture, and coffee urns. So at last there is one temperance café in Havre at which English sailors and engineers may with pleasure and profit spend their evenings. One of the flats has been furnished as a visitors' room; and friends from the old country could not do better than make it their home when they visit Havre. The address is 23, Quai Casimir Delavigne. It is close to the Sailors' Home and Mission Hall.

It is to be hoped that these advantages may be largely taken advantage of by our countrymen, who are led to this large seaport in the pursuit of their calling. These institutions are not carried on for profit; they represent the practical sympathy of Christian friends in this country, who determined that at least there should be one harbour of refuge amid a thousand doors open to temptation, sin, and death in this French seaport. VEGETARIANISM.—The Committee of the London Vegetarian Society are prepared to send speakers free of expense to explain and advocate the reformed diet at any meetings that can be arranged for within ten or twelve miles of London. BUDDHISM IN CEYLON.

As India has had its Hindu revival, so Ceylon has had its Buddhist revival. To the latter there is no doubt that the recognition by Government of the Buddha's supposed birthday as a public holiday has contributed a good deal. Referring to a recent celebration, The Theosophist says that the anniversary of the birthday of Lord Buddha was marked by an enthusiasm of national fervour never before seen in the island. The Buddhist flag fluttered in the air over every monastery, over many thousands of private dwellings, and many triumphal arches, and was carried in many religious processions; carol-singing parties of young boys went about singing in praise of Lord Buddha; processions of women and girls carried on their heads baskets of flowers. The whole island put on a garb of rejoicing never seen since the European advent. Never for the last three hundred years has there been so much vigorous religious activity.

For some time past, the Buddhists, stirred up by the Theosophists, have been trying to wile away children from mission schools. The latest movement is a proposed Hindu-Buddhist college to counteract missionary colleges. Past history leads us to think that the union, should it take place, will be short lived. The Hindus put an end to Buddhism in India; the Hindu invaders of Ceylon demolished Buddhist temples, cut down their sacred trees, and burnt their sacred books.

The press is also actively used against Christianity. A year or two ago a small work called "Bhuddha and his Religion" was published by the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India. At the end of it is a contrast between Buddhist and Christian teaching, by the late Bishop Titcomb. A weekly paper in English called The Buddhist has felt it "an imperative duty—the duty we owe to Truth Sublime—to point out Bishop Titcomb's errors." The criticism begins by stating that, "it is majestically true that Buddhism does not acknowledge the existence of an eternal and unchangeable personal God." This is pronounced "a fiction of the brain"; so also is the idea of "eternal sentient existances."

There are several Buddhist newspapers in Singalese, in addition to the publications of the Buddhist Tract Society, the Buddhist Aid Association, and the Buddhist Theosophical Society.

On the other hand, it is satisfactory that there has been a great advance of Christian life in the island. The two visits of the Rev G. C. Grubb have been greatly blessed among the European community. Missions have never been more successful. Not long ago four Buddhist priests embraced Christianity. Native Christians have increased seventy per cent. during the last ten years. As one sign of progress, it may be mentioned that the circulation of Christian literature this year has been the largest ever known.

RUSSIAN ATROCITIES.—The articles published by The Times on the slaughter of Siberian political prisoners and the flogging of women at Kara have started an agitation which is likely to assume formidable proportions. At the initiative of Mr. James Beal, London County Councilman, Mr. Adolphe Smith, and others, the Oppressed Nationalities Aid Committee has been constituted in London. Simultaneously, Mr. Robert Spence Watson, Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P., Stepniak, and others, established at Newcastle a Society entitled the "Friends of Russian Freedom." Both these organisations are seeking to amalgamate, and both are anxious that this movement should be independent of all party distinctions, the object being to raise such an outcry in various countries as may awaken the attention of the Russian Government to the brutalities that are being committed in its name; and thus, perhaps, also help to secure for the Russian people at least some small measure of constitutional freedom.

HOPE FOR ALGERIA.

One of two young brethren sent out here by the Société Evangélique de Genève, writes me the following encouraging notes of their work:—

"I wish to tell you of the blessing which has been given us since we left Algiers. I will not speak of B. O. R. and M. where we had some subjects of encouragement, but must speak of T. Our brother, Mr. V. (a Christian colonist there), had convoked a meeting for us, which was much blessed. On Sunday we had three meetings, and we began to see some rays of hope, for several souls were awakened and under conviction of sin, and we exhorted them to repentance and to be converted, but they did not decide at that time.

"One young man leaving the meeting said to a companion, 'If these young men stay any longer I shall be obliged to give myself to the Lord; I can hold out no longer, I can live no longer as I have done.' Our friend begged us to remain and continue the meetings, as we ought to strike the iron while hot. We arranged to visit in the vicinity, and continue the meetings in the evenings. On January 8, we spoke on the subject of not loving the world, and after that had a prayer-meeting, where we felt the influence of the Spirit of God; and when we prayed for the unconverted present, a young girl prayed, asking God for the pardon of her sins, but her sobs drowned her voice, and we continued praying for her. Then her two brothers, one after the other, and her mother also prayed; after that a young cousin fifteen years of age; but with all their sobs drowned their voices.

"The next evening a young man was converted, and on the following Sunday evening we had a good revival meeting, when four souls gave themselves to the Lord and others were troubled in conscience. But, oh, what need there is for someone to come here and follow up the work, and there is an opening too in the adjacent town. Here there are many well-inclined people. Oh, let not this fire be extinguished."

This and many other of the French villages cry aloud for evangelists to teach them the way of life; whilst, alas, there are hundreds of villages careless, worldly, sinking into perdition for want of knowing by the hearing of the ear the word of salvation. Is there to be no response to this crying need? Are there not many waiting for a field of labour to be opened to them, and can they decline to heed this appeal from an unoccupied field?

Algiers. George Pearse.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY CONFERENCE.—Over 120 memorials on various subjects have been presented, principally from Scotland and Ireland. Among the latest was one from the Church of England Temperance Society, calling attention to the evils attending the traffic in spirituous liquors in Africa, and expressing a hope that the Conference would be able to find means to prevent the extension of the traffic in the district under its consideration, and also to make such provisions that advantage may be taken of every opportunity of prohibiting the importation, as well as the manufacture, in those territories where strong drink has already obtained a footing. Baron Lambermont, the president, in receiving this memorial, last week, explained that chapter i. of the programme, dealing with the slave trade in the country of its origin, and containing sub-sections for the traffic in arms, ammunition, and liquors, has already been read a first time, but the latter questions were reserved for further discussion. He strongly urged the importance of steps being taken to educate and keep alive public opinions in the various countries represented at the Conference, especially in England, as soon as the Conference shall be over, in order that full advantage may be taken of whatever decisions may be arrived at. The Brussels correspondent of The Times writes that the question of restriction, and, where possible, total prohibition of the liquor traffic with native races, is in good hands so far as both Belgian and English representatives at the Conference are concerned.

HELPING ONE ANOTHER.

For some years past a number of the women connected with Hoxton Hall have been banded together for mutual benefit, under the very appropriate title of the Help One Another Society. It is one of the many beneficent fruits of the Gospel temperance work inaugurated in Hoxton by Mr. Wm. Noble.

On Monday evening the annual gathering of the Society was held in Hoxton Hall, and the occasion was an extremely interesting one. The hall was well filled with the members and their friends, and a most profitable time was spent. Mrs. Howell, the working missionary visitor among the women, was able to report substantial progress. It was gratifying to hear from her that out of the hundred and odd new members, who had joined during the year, only three had been known to prove untrue to their abstinence pledge. Mrs. Noble is president of the Society, but the weak health of her husband and herself has prevented her from actively sharing in the work of late. To show sympathy with her and with the work, Mr. W. J. Palmer came up from Reading and presided; he spoke to the women in his hearty and practical way.

A capital address was given by Mrs. Pearsall Smith on the duty of fulfilling the law of Christ by bearing one another's burdens. Her remarks on the power and extent of women's influence for good, especially when they are united in the bonds of Christian faith and endeavour, were much to the point, and well calculated to help her Hoxton sisters in the fight against drink and other foes of the household. Mr. William Noble, though still in poor health, was present, and gave a brief address, as also did an earnest Canadian brother. Some excellent singing, by Miss Noble and other lady friends, rounded off a full evening's programme.

CAUTION.—We are asked to put our ministerial and other readers on their guard as to the doings of a band of coloured singers, who entitle themselves "The Original U.S.A. Jubilee Singers," and who have been touring lately in Scotland. They represent that they desire to raise funds for educating and fitting two of their number as foreign missionaries, but articles that have appeared in Scotch papers show that their statements cannot be relied on.

THE ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION OF THE LORD'S DAY.—The committee of the Sabbath Observance Prayer Union Society is very desirous to circulate in London and suburbs 300,000 copies of their call to united prayer from April 6 to 13. Last year only 25,000 copies were distributed; but it is hoped that, with the co-operation of more friends, a much larger number will this year be put into circulation, with the result that there will be a great deepening of public interest in the cause. Contributions to aid in the circulation will be gratefully received by Mr. Joseph W. Leng, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C. It is hoped that friends will send immediately, so that steps may be taken to have the "calls" printed and delivered in good time.

MR. STEAD AND THE ROMAN QUESTION.—The late editor of The Pall Mall Gazette reckoned without his host when he took the Pope under his wing. His first communications from Rome, in which he bespattered the venerable prisoner of the Vatican, were very savoury in the eyes of the Roman Catholic journals. Even Freeman's Journal republished them. But when Mr. Stead began to criticise, to laugh at the idea of restoring the temporal power, the Roman Catholic journals not only dropped their lucubrations, but told the London editor to let the church alone and mind his own business, for it was a piece of "audacious audacity" in him to presume to guide the church. The episode may be helpful to open the eyes of Mr. Stead and others who are dreaming the dream of mending the Papacy, of reconciling it with modern thought, and with the Christian feeling of these kingdoms. There never was a greater delusion.—Christian Irishman.

Saving the Lads.

In Cheapside, the busiest thoroughfare of this mighty city, a lad of about fifteen was carrying a basket of goods on his head one day, and trying at the same time to read a paper. What literature could be so fascinating as to cause such an attempt? It was one of the "penny dreadfuls," vigorously illustrated with pictures of pirates and murders, while the moral tone might be gathered from the headings of the chapters, such as "Tim Jones tastes the sweets of revenge," &c. The employer, who was a Christian man, called the lad into his office, and inquired whether he went to Sunday-school. "No, I've left school." "Do you go to church or chapel?" "No, sir." "Do you read the Bible?" "No." "Do you ever pray?" "No."

Here was a lad typical of thousands living in this Christian land, in the midst of churches, Sunday-schools, Bibles, and Christian agencies of all kinds—untouched, indeed, as completely outside all religious influences as heathen in the centre of Africa. What a startling, sad fact that these working lads, despite all that is done by the churches of Christ in this great city, are practically outside the benign influence, living without God and without hope in the world. In a few years they will be men, and, if not saved now, may fill up the ranks of the profane, the drunkard, the vicious, and the criminal.

But if they refuse Sunday-school, church, and chapel, how can they be reached? A friend writes:—At one of our Saturday evening temperance meetings at the Seamen's Chapel two young men testified to the great change in their lives. They had (so they thought) been the worst lads in the East-end—swearing and drinking. One had been charged with stealing postage stamps from the office where he was employed, and both of them were a great trouble to their friends. The first thing which impressed them as to their wicked ways was when passing the Lads' Institute one evening, they heard the singing of hymns. They stopped and listened at the window, and at the close one said to the other, "This is better than public-house singing and going to the theatre; we will come and listen again." After a short time they became members of the Institute—a blessing to their parents, and were truly converted to God.

Rev. C. Garland, of Christchurch, New Zealand, writes thus:—"I was requested to visit a young man dying of consumption. I found him fast sinking, but able to converse rather freely. At first I thought he was anxious about his soul, but soon found he was a believer, and trusting alone in the merits of Christ. Upon my inquiring how long he had known the Saviour, he replied: 'It is some years since, and a long distance from this place; it was in the 'Old Country.' For some time I was a member of the Working Lads' Institute in the Whitechapel-road, conducted by a Mr. Hill. Before I went there, I had no fear of God, no love for the Bible, and my parents laughed at religion. But I had not been at the place long before I felt I was a great sinner, and must be born again, or go to hell. I did not like to open my mind to the teacher, and was thus kept in bondage for some time. It was at the Bible-class this feeling first came over me, and I thank my heavenly Father that there, some few weeks afterwards, God in his great mercy gave me pardon and peace. Yes; I was saved. Never, sir, can I forget the interest taken in me and others who attended that Institution, especially in soul matters. I, of all others, have cause to thank my heavenly Father for what I learnt and received there; for, next to his grace, I owe my salvation to that place. I shall never see the old country again, but I am going to a better one, where there is no pain, no sickness, no death. I'm on the Rock, and that Rock is Christ."

The Institution referred to was specially started (as the result of a letter which appeared in this paper fourteen years ago, entitled, "The Lads of London") to reach the working lads of London, to try by God's blessing to do them good physically, mentally, morally, spiritually—in one word, to save them. It is no longer an experiment, but has solved the problem "how to reach our working lads." The cases just reported, and which, like the first, are really typical, prove this. All lads are welcome. The rules are simple, and the subscription so small as to deter none. There is a reading-room; also a library, and evening classes, a gymnasium, a swimming bath, chess and cricket, &c. Temperance and thrift are encouraged. The savings' bank and Friendly Society are well supported. Country lads and orphans are saved from the wretched lodgings or a threepenny "doss" by the provision of large healthy dormitories, fitted with nice comfortable beds. There are Bible-classes and also evangelistic services every Sunday, conducted by Dr. Grattan Guinness and some of the missionary students of Harley House. Only lately we received a letter from the friend who superintends this department as follows: "The Committee of the Lads' Institute will be glad to hear that the Sunday evening services, considering all things, are a decided success. Many have received good, and souls have been saved."

About 250 lads are in attendance, but the number might be doubled, and the work extended immediately, if a few friends with love to such work, and love for the souls of these lads would devote one evening a week, and a few others would give financial support. About five thousand lads have been benefited already, which shows the great need. The neighbourhood is notorious for crime, and the attractions for evil which abound.

The buildings are extensive and admirably adapted to the work, which, considering its importance, is sustained at a very moderate cost, most of the services in teaching, &c., being honorary. Although strict economy is practised, the funds are exhausted, and meantime the work, God's work as we believe it to be, is seriously hindered.

We admit there is neither the romance nor the pathos which pertains to rescuing the prodigal who has ruined himself and family by drink and vice—but is it not as blessed to save the ninety and nine from sin and the devil, as to rescue the one? Think too, if these lads are not saved now, humanly speaking, a large number of them will certainly go to the bad—and of these a large proportion will never be rescued at all. Surely here the old proverb is profoundly true—"Prevention is better than cure."—how much more economically both in labour and in money? Again, this is productive work, for many of the old members are now engaged in Christian efforts as Sunday-school teachers, evangelists, &c. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Henry Hill, founder and honorary secretary, 38, Bow-lane, E.C. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

MUSIC.

The refreshment experienced by Saul from David's harp, and the calming of Elisha's spirit by the minstrel (1 Sam. xvi. 14-23; 2 Kings iii. 14, 15) are accounted for by this beautiful couplet of Tennyson's—

> Music, which on the spirit softlier lies
> Than tired eyelids upon tired eyes.

INTERCESSORY PRAYER.

Who can say what are not, or shall not be, the happy effects, immediate or remote, of our prayers "one for another"? Can I remember critical points in my own history, or have such been disclosed to me in the history of others, when either bodily danger has been imminent, or other and greater perils have impended; when the mind, the character, has been on the brink of a gulf, drawn on by a pernicious allurement, entangled in a hidden snare, oppressed with trials hardly to be borne, urged towards the edge of a frightful desperation? And who can tell that the prayer of a departed parent, long since uttered and recorded, or the tender intercession of a friend far away, was not as the chosen invisible thread, which, in the hand of Providence, held me back from ruin?—Sheppard.

"NOT WITH WISDOM OF WORDS."

The systematic and brilliant exposition of the fact of the cross would have the effect, according to Paul's phrase, of literally "emptying" it. . . . Salvation by the cross is a Divine act which the conscience must appropriate as such. If one begins with presenting it to the understanding in the form of a series of well-linked ideas, as the result of a theory concerning man and God, it may happen that the mind will be nourished by it, but as by a system of wisdom, and not a way of salvation. It is as if we should substitute a theory of gravitation for gravitation itself. The fact evaporates in ideas, and no longer acts on the conscience with the powerful reality which determines conversion. —Godet.

Notes from Cambridge.

By An Undergraduate.

Mrs. Kingsley has been speaking on temperance, and Rev. H. A. Isaacs in reply to Ritualistic lectures recently given here. On February 27, Sir Charles Aitchison, K.C.S.I. (late Lieut.-Governor of the Punjâb), addressed a drawing-room-meeting, on "The present religious movement amongst the natives of India, and the great importance of strengthening and extending missionary educational work throughout the Empire." On Monday last (March 3), Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, addressed the members of the Daily Prayer Meeting.

Rev. James Stalker, of Glasgow, author of "Imago Christi," has been preaching at the Presbyterian service held in the Guildhall. Rev. J. Bell Cox, and Canon Knox-Little have been lecturing on behalf of the English Church Union, which has, I am sorry to say, a strong hold here.

Rev. G. H. Pole, from Japan, gave, a few nights ago in his own college (Corpus), a most interesting account of the educational work with which he is connected. The theological course lasts five years, and is occupied almost entirely with a close study of the Bible itself. To some, unfamiliar with the theological course at our own Universities, this may seem an almost unnecessary statement. Nine students from the college are already in the mission field, and several more are just completing their time. The difficulties of Mr. Pole's task are enhanced by the fact that he possesses no text-books with which he can work, and is obliged to compile his own for each course of lectures.

Speaking of lectures, it does seem unfortunate that the extreme criticism on the Old Testament, which, to say the least, is far from being proved or agreed upon, should be so universally put forward by University lecturers. They seem to forget that a large number of those who attend their lectures do not figure as spiritually minded men, albeit reading Divinity. It is refreshing to turn from such criticism, and to hear Mr. Moule's sermons on Sunday evenings, on The Faithful Sayings (2 Tim. ii. 11-13), or to listen to the earnest prayers offered up at our daily prayer-meeting to that throne of grace so shamefully blasphemed.

I have just received the report of the University Prayer Union.

Started in 1848, its numbers have grown from sixty-four to 1640. The special subjects for Lent are interesting:—"(1) Romanism. (2) That with a view to the growth of our work of united prayer in reality and power, we may all live in the remembrance that spiritual prayer can be the outcome of only a spiritual life." On the first subject the comment of the report is noteworthy. "The aggressive character of Romanism in England, brought prominently of late before the eyes of Cambridge residents by the building of the large and imposing church on the Hills-road, is marked not only by the erection of new places of worship, but also by unsparing efforts to proselytise the young, and in other ways. We shall therefore, during this quarter, unite in special prayer that the advance of Roman error may be checked, and its corruptions stayed by the prevailing power of the pure Word of God." The two special subjects for prayer during the year are:—"(1) For our Church and country, that the pure Word of God may be more and more recognised as the foundation of teaching and life. (2) That the special interest in missions so manifestly shown of late may lead to more earnest longing and prayer for the coming of the Lord, and the extension of his kingdom in all parts of the world." On the first of these heads the report says: "There are special difficulties.. raised in connection with the study...of the Old Testament....We shall pray that to meet all such difficulties there may be granted a wider recognition of the power of the Bible as the inspired and authoritative record of Divine revelation, and that this recognition of its supremacy may quicken many with a new life."

Among the names of members I notice Revs. B. Baring-Gould, W. H. Barlow, J. Barton, C. G. Baskerville, W. A. Bathurst, Right Rev. E. Bickersteth, Rev. Canon Body, Rev. Preb. Gordon Calthrop, Revs. H. Carless, W. W. Cassels, Sholto D. C. Douglas, T. W. Drury, D. and F. Harford-Battersby, Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby (Sûdan), Rev. Canon Hoare, Mr. Douglas Hooper, Revs. W. Jukes, H. C. G. Moule, E. A. Stuart, H. W. Webb-Peploe, Right Rev. G. E. Moule (Bishop of Mid-China).

Trinity College

and its Christian work occupies our attention this week.

Every Saturday evening the Christian men of the college meet for an hour's discussion of God's Word, and a great help these times have been. This term, "Studies in St. John's Gospel" have occupied the attention of the meetings. Among the subjects we notice the following:—"The New Birth," "The Water of Life," "The Good Shepherd," "The True Vine." Once a term, Dr. Butler, the Master of Trinity, himself takes the meeting, inviting the members into his own house.

The freshmen, in addition to the above, have their own Bible-reading on Sunday afternoons; at that time also, the special speaker for the evening at the Alexandra Hall holds a short meeting in Trinity for any members of the University. Every society has its secretary in Trinity; but, owing to the immense size of the College, the difficulty of working it in the interests of vital Christianity is far greater than in any other college. In summer the Christian men hold an outdoor service in one of the low courts so abundant in the town, and have thus carried the Gospel to many who have never heard whether there be a Christ.

This College has not been behindhand in starting a mission in London, and so large a College is naturally able to do anything of this kind very effectively. The band of their Mission, dressed in a very becoming uniform, was quite a sight on the river last year during the races. Members of the College frequently go down to give entertainments, and otherwise help in the work.

Trinity has an exceptionally brilliant list of notable names among its records of the past. The following will perhaps interest your readers most:—Dr. Benson, the late Hon. Ion Keith Falconer, Dr. Lightfoot, Dr. Westcott, Canon Farrar, Bishop Smythies, Revs. H. C. G. Moule, W. A. Bathurst, B. Cassin, Sholto Douglas, Canon Hoare.

MR. H. M. STANLEY'S LECTURES.—The Duke of Fife, K.T., has consented to preside at a lecture, to be delivered at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, by Mr. H. M. Stanley on his return to London. This will be Mr. Stanley's first public lecture after his own meetings at St. James's Hall. The proceeds of the sale of tickets will be devoted towards defraying the expenses of the extensions to the building of the Polytechnic.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following:—A week's special services, by Mr. Opie Rodway, at the Congregational Church, Titchfield, near Fareham, Hants, commencing on April 5.——A mission at Shrewsbury, March 11 to 20, by Mr. J. Burnham.——Three weeks' special Gospel meetings, commenced last Lord's Day at the Baptist Chapel, Birchington, Kent.——A week's Gospel services at Southport, beginning on March 16; and at Caterham, commencing March 23, by Mr. J. A. Vicary.——A three weeks' mission, by Mr. Robert Cairns, of the Evangelisation Society, at Inverallochy, Aberdeenshire, commenced on Sunday last.——A Gospel temperance mission, at Eccles, near Manchester, from March 10 to 17, by Surgeon-General Gunn, of Dublin.——Praise: For blessing received at mission services lately held in Bournemouth.

MRS. BOOTH.

We regret to learn that the condition of Mrs. Booth continues very painful and critical. After the remarkable rally that took place some two months ago she gradually gathered a measure of strength; but it has proved only strength to suffer. A very serious hemorrhage took place on Tuesday last week, which, for a time, seemed likely to prove fatal. But the discharge was ultimately mastered, and although the sufferer has been very prostrate since, more serious effects have been averted.

Expressions of sympathy continue to pour in from all directions, and are appreciated to the utmost by Mrs. Booth, who often regrets her inability personally to acknowledge these tokens of affection to herself and devotion to Christ. Considerate of all around her, and manifesting a wonderful spirit of resignation and patience beneath her affliction, she expresses constantly her eagerness for the arrival of the heavenly chariot.

DR. PENTECOST IN PAISLEY.

This evangelist began a month's labours in Paisley last Sabbath. He preached in the forenoon in the venerable Abbey, which was filled, though no public intimation had been made that Dr. Pentecost was to occupy the pulpit. The first fourteen verses of John's Gospel were expounded with great point and power. The evening meeting was held in the Geo. A. Clark Town Hall; it is seated for about 2000, and was crowded long before the advertised time of meeting. On the platform were many ministers and leading laymen of the town. The way of life was plainly and clearly set forth; an aged minister remarked at the close that it was one of the most lucid Gospel expositions he had ever heard.

At a well-attended after-meeting Dr. Pentecost explained his methods of work, and asked for the enthusiastic co-operation of Christians. That many of them will give him a hearty backing is certain, as the preliminary meetings for prayer, held during the previous week, were well attended. At one of these meetings about 300 were present, and the spirit manifested in it was an earnest of coming blessing

"NEARNESS TO GOD."—"D. J." desires us to make an emendation in his poem published in our last issue, entitled "Nearness to God." The fifth and sixth lines of the fourth stanza should read:—

"My other Advocate!
Me teach, guide, stimulate," &c.

The last line of the last stanza is:—

"I've gained the prize."

ALGERIA.—Writing from Mostaganem, Province of Oran, Mr. Arthur V. Liley, of the North Africa Mission, says:—"I am trying to make known Christ among the Arabs living in tents in the Dahra. At the same time services have been held among the French population, by whom an earnest desire to know the truth has been manifested. The field is ready for the labourer; but if I am to reach the people a horse is an absolute necessity." Possessed of this means of locomotion, Mr. Liley's time will be divided between the town and country in carrying the Gospel by message and book to those who are at present sitting in darkness.

GLASGOW POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Mr. W. Dawson, chief clerk, presided over the annual social meeting held a few days ago in the Christian Institute. About 350 members and friends assembled, and many testimonies were borne to the depth and importance of the work which Miss Shaw, the secretary, and her helpers have done throughout the service. Mr. G. H. Midgley, chief superintendent of the Telegraph Department, said that one result of the movement, now in its fourth year, is the reduction of irregularities among the messengers. Mr. K. McLean, a member of the Association, having spoken of the good influence of the Association, a brief address was delivered by Mr. W. M. Oatts, secretary of the Y.M.C.A.

Work in Copenhagen.

We most heartily thank our faithful God and Saviour for all his mercies towards us in the past year. The word has been sown almost everywhere in our city—in courts and yards, in halls, in public-houses and in the streets, in caserns and hospitals, on the training-ships and emigrant ships, and the Lord has often shown us that it has borne fruit. We praise Him for the time of grace which is now resting on our people, and our cry to Him is that more and more may be sent to partake in the work.

The meetings in the courtyards and streets are chiefly held in the spring and summer months. There are always attentive ears, but we also meet with opposition, especially from intoxicated people. In these meetings, of which 938 have been held, two clergymen and some graduates have been engaged besides the missionaries.

In Rosenburg Castle gardens fifteen meetings have been held during the summer months, at which thirteen clergymen and eleven other friends of the Mission took part. Some of these meetings were attended by 2000 to 3000 people. On the old ramparts of Christianshavn twenty-five meetings have been held. The audiences were generally 1000 to 1200. Eighty meetings were held at the courts of the caserns. One evening a soldier came running after the missionary, and said, in a broken voice, that he was a poor sinner; he was married; had often been to church, but never had the word struck him till now. He could scarcely speak for weeping. The missionary pointed him to the Saviour. He afterwards called upon the missionary and got the assurance of faith, in which he is now resting. On the training ships of the Royal Dockyard we have held thirty-one meetings. The men in our largest hospital have been visited almost weekly and provided with tracts. The word has each time been preached in six or eight rooms, and there are many instances in which the love of God in Christ has touched the heart, and men, who for years have not thought of eternal things, have after their recovery come to converse and pray with the missionaries.

In the winter months 108 meetings were held in the long passages in the large houses of the poor. These also brought blessing, and hearts were turned to the Lord. Two hundred and thirty-eight indoor meetings were held. People are invited to these from streets and public-houses. One evening a young man entered the room and listened with great attention. At the close of the meeting, he stayed until all had left; and came with tearful eyes to the missionary, and asked him to pray with him. "I have grieved my parents and lived an ungodly life; this is the first time I have been here." He has left his evil ways, and has found peace and salvation in Christ Jesus.

We have also at the public-houses gathered experiences of the Lord's mercies. It seldom happens that we are turned out, and although there is much bad talk, the men are mostly very quiet, when they see us enter. Now and again we are permitted to speak words of warning to these deluded ones. The landlords have several times silenced those that were inclined to be noisy while we spoke to them. In a court, the landlord of a public-house, who had often stood at his window and heard the word of life, came to ask for a Testament. He was entreated to turn to the Lord and begin a new life. Some time after we visited his public-house, and again entreated him to turn away from sin; he wept, and said that he would, if only he could get away from that kind of life, but that he had no other subsistence.

We have well-attended meetings for members of the Children's Scripture Union, and Mr. Bishop has made many of them happy through giving them the means of reading the Bible daily. Mrs. Robertson has kindly sent me money for Bibles and Testaments for those who do not possess a copy; this has greatly helped the work of our Mission.

Of English-speaking friends who took part in our meetings last summer, I am glad to mention Mr. Steven, of Glasgow, who kindly led me in the way of using the blackboard at our meetings, and otherwise helped the Mission; also Rev. Mr. Crawford, of Edinburgh, and Rev. M. W. Montgomery, of Minneapolis. I should be so glad if some would come to help me next summer. Vilhelm Wright.

Obituary.

MR. SAMUEL CHAPPELL

was a member, deacon, and secretary of Fuller Chapel, Kettering, and he was also a most earnest, devoted, and acceptable village preacher. All the denominations in the neighbourhood shared in his prayers and efforts. He was rapidly cut down in mid life by brain fever, and has left a sorrowing wife and four children. At his funeral a large number of all sections of the Church followed his remains to the grave. Temperance, peace, purity, and other social questions had his Christian support.

PASTEUR HENRI RAPIN, LAUSANNE.

This well-known Swiss pastor recently passed away at the age of seventy-seven. He was widely known as the author of a number of popular works on astronomy. His last days were in accord with the spirit of his active life. Having for some time been in a weak state of health, he was visited by a friend, who prayed with him. After responding "Amen, Amen," M. Rapin clasped his hands, and with a loud voice said, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace." These were his last words, and the prayer to which they gave expression was answered almost immediately, for that same night M. Rapin was "with the Lord."

SIR EDWARD BAINES.

This eminent Christian patriot entered into rest last Lord's Day, at the age of ninety. He had been ill for some time, but the end came peacefully. At an early age he became associated with his father in the editorship of The Leeds Mercury. In all good conscience he devoted his energies and talents to the support of movements which he regarded as for the material and moral good of the people. He threw himself into the Mechanics' Institute work, and was for over fifty years president of the very influential Union of those useful institutions in the West Riding. For fifteen years he represented Leeds in Parliament, and though a champion of educational progress, was also an earnest advocate of religious teaching in the public elementary schools.

He signed the temperance pledge in 1837, in order by force of his examples to induce some of his acquaintances to give up that which had proved a snare to them. On several occasions his fellow-citizens bore public testimony to their high regard for him, and ten years ago, in recognition of his character and public services, the Queen conferred upon him the distinction of knighthood.

Until a few years ago Sir Edward was an active journalist. Holding Nonconformist principles, he was singularly large-hearted, and duly estimated the importance of personal religion. On a public occasion, ten years ago, he commended to the youth of his native town a "dying deposition" in these sound words:—"The book that transcends all books is God's own Word; and the lesson it teaches, as beyond all other lessons, for time or eternity, is this—'fear God, and love the Saviour.'"

PASTOR CHARLES SPURGEON.—In our last week's sketch, it was stated that during Mr. Spurgeon's pastorate of South-street Baptist Chapel, Greenwich, over 12,000 members have been entered on the church roll. The number should have been 1200.

BRIVE, CORREZE.—The spiritual destitution of this region of France is much greater than it was made, by an error, to appear in Pasteur Cremer's letter published last week. Within a radius of fifty (not "two") miles there is not a single place of worship or Christian worker to be found.

ONLY A PENNY.

"None shall appear before me empty."—Ex. xxiii. 15.

"Only a penny," I heard them say—
A penny for Jesus, if given each day,
Would send the Gospel to every soul
Now sitting in darkness, from pole to pole.
Only a penny from every one
Who bears the name of God's own son.

Only a penny! How small a sum
By the side of the millions that go for rum.
To ruin the bodies and souls of men!
And the millions that end in smoke and then,
Of a penny apiece from everyone
Who trusts for salvation in God's own Son.

Only a penny, if nothing more;
But oh, how many from out their store,
Should give Him pounds of their precious pelf
They so freely spend upon poor self;
But surely a penny from every one
Who prays in the name of God's own Son.

Only a penny, to show our love
To Him who left his home above
For this very work, and whose last command
Gave this mission to Christians in every land.
Only a penny from everyone
To send the Gospel of God's own Son.

Only a penny! But day by day,
As the years so swiftly speed away;
Only a penny from young and old,
From the little lambs within the fold;
For God has given to every one,
With all other gifts, his own dear Son.

Maria A. West.

The Penny Pledge:—For every Church member:

Trusting in God for grace to faithfully keep my pledge, I do hereby promise, as a Christian, to give no less than a penny every day each year of my life for Mission work at home and abroad; and also to increase my giving as God prospers and gives the ability so to do.

Appeals.

The Lambeth Ragged School Society (Newport-street, Lambeth-walk, S.E.) wish to continue their free porridge breakfasts on four mornings a week to very needy children, chiefly selected from neighbouring Board schools. Their resources being exhausted, they ask for contributions. E. Nicholls, hon. sec., 106, Leathwaite-road, Clapham-common, S.W.

East-end Poor.—Miss E. E. Fooks, Harley House, Bow, London, E., writes: "We are in pressing need just now of articles of clothing for some of our poor friends in East London, especially dresses and boots for young women, and sheets and blankets: warm shawls will also be very welcome. Parcels of clothing will be gratefully received and acknowledged."

Imperial Mission Hall, Hanley.—This place, formerly a circus, has for some years been used for mission purposes. It seats three thousand people, and is being reopened after renovation. Towards paying the expenses £150 is still required, and it is hoped that this will not be added to the present cumbersome debt. Contributions may be sent to Messrs. Middleton and Hogben, who are now in charge of the work.

The Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society. (8, Adam-street, Strand, Adelphi, W.C.) are very much in need of funds. Some old and large subscribers have been removed by death, and it is hard to get their places filled. £600 is required each quarter to pay the faithful pastors who are labouring to spread the Gospel in Spain and Portugal. The Society is at present some months in arrear. Donations may be sent to Rev. H. E. Noyes, secretary.

Hackney-road Mission.—It is twenty-one years since this Mission was instituted, and it is the grief of the committee to have to curtail, through lack of means, the distributions of coal, bread, &c., which have in the past been so welcome to the poor. The sewing-class for girls is in need of supplies. Either large or small quantities of calico or flannel, &c., will be gratefully received. Parcels and donations will be thankfully acknowledged by Mr. Charles C. Girling, hon. sec., 33, Queen Margaret's-grove, Mildmay Park, N.

The Book World.

A Life of Peter.

Simon Peter: His Life and Times. Rev. Charles S. Robinson, D.D., New York, has collected into volume form a number of very attractive expository discourses on the Apostle of the Circumcision. They form an admirable biographical sketch, the outstanding incidents being presented in the order of the Gospel harmonies. The social and political situation in Palestine at the beginning of the present era is vividly depicted, and the Peter of history is exhibited in all the strength and weakness of his changeful character. Twenty-six in number, the chapters are eminently readable, imagination being wisely restrained in order that, viewing the Apostle as an everyday man, modern confessors of Christ may benefit by the lessons which his conflicts and triumphs so eloquently teach. Toward the close of his very suggestive study Dr. Robinson tersely says:—"Some respect is due to Simon Peter. It is easy enough wildly to find fault with him; but we may as well be candid. Peter is an attractive sort of man after all. He is bold, generous, tender-hearted, and earnest. Grace has a sharp fight with him, but grace wins in the end; and while most of us are stumbling along, and exclaiming, pitifully discouraged, as did John Howard more than once, 'O Lord God, why me?' we may as well remember that the last word this Apostle ever wrote was a thoughtful admonition and counsel: 'Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.'" Two editions of this very interesting work have been published in England—one by Messrs. Nelson, embellished with several illustrations, and another by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, reprinted by special arrangement with the American publishers. In each case the price is 3s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

"Anti-Caste" is the title of an excellent little monthly paper devoted to the interests of coloured races. It gives information calculated to broaden the sympathies of its readers, and to kindle and sustain within their hearts feelings of worldwide brotherliness and love. The cost is one shilling per annum, post free from the editor, Miss Catherine Impey, Street, Somerset.

Recorded Mercies. Autobiography of Jane Andrew, Cornwall. Wilmshurst, Blackheath. God's gracious dealings with an afflicted lady and her brother are told in very simple fashion. As the writer lived in a very small circle, and seems to have had little connection with external Christian work, her story will rather interest those who know her than edify the Church at large.

A Homiletical Commentary on the Books of Chronicles. By Rev. James Wolfendale. 5s. R. D. Dickinson. This is a volume of "The Preacher's Complete Homiletical Commentary on the Old Testament." It is provided with critical and explanatory notes, gathered from a wide range of reading, and calculated to prove of special service to Christian workers who can command but few expository books.

The Bible Student in the British Museum. By Rev. J. G. Kitchin, M.A. 1s. Cassell & Co. A descriptive guide to the principal antiquities in the Museum which illustrate and confirm the sacred history. Bible students will visit the British Museum to real purpose if they first possess themselves of this manual, which is comprehensive in scope, and has evidently been compiled with great care.

Church History. By Professor Kurtz. Translated from the German by Rev. John Macpherson. Vol. iii. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is the concluding volume of a work of great utility. As a text-book for students no better ecclesiastical history can be named. Kurtz interprets the events of early times in the light of the most recent discovery, and sets forth modern life and work with remarkable fulness and lucidity. In addition to describing the varied activities which have crowded the past three centuries, the third volume gives valuable chronological tables and a copious index. Though the scope is very wide, the regard for detail is such as will render the work very useful in theological and reference libraries. The translator has performed his difficult task with great success.

The Abolition of Suffering. By S. B. G. McKinny, M.A. Elliot Stock. This is a disappointing book. While rightly asserting that all sickness and suffering are due to sin, the writer tries to prove the converse. He seems to believe that by obedience to the will of God, in which he includes more perfect sanitation, sickness, suffering, and poverty will disappear. He appears to leave out of calculation some of the fundamental truths of revelation.

The Bright and Morning Star and other Sermons. By the late Rev. Henry Wilkes, D.D. 4s. 6d. R. D. Dickinson. Twenty-four discourses of an eminently practical type. Delivered in Canada in the course of a long and useful ministry, they will well repay perusal by British Christians. The fame of the author is sure to command many readers in the Dominion, and, being introduced to attention in "the old country" by a prefatory note from the pen of Dr. Monro Gibson, the sermons are likely to have an extensive influence in Great Britain also.

St. Paul and the Christian's Triumph. By Rev. George Nickson. 1s. Marshall Brothers. Rev. Handley C. G. Moule writes a preface to this little book, the author of which is associated with him in work at Ridley Hall, Cambridge. Taking for his text 2 Cor. ii. 14-16, "Thanks be to God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ," &c., Mr. Nickson enlarges in a helpful manner upon Christian duty and equipment. Expressing a hope that the book may be instrumental in winning young men to an entire devotion to the Lord, Mr. Moule says: "My experience tells me that there is no side of truth, after the first blessed message has been received indeed, which so finds out and draws in young men, so leads them into a life which is strong and fruitful for Christ, as this side—this Gospel of the Lord's triumph over us, and in us, and through us, this blessed march through life in the train of his captives, who are also then his soldiers, sharing his victory." We sincerely trust that these pages, so stimulating to spiritual consecration, will find many readers.

Songs of the Land of Beulah. Original leaflets. By J. H. S. Fifty copies, assorted, 6d. Partridge. A specially attractive series in all respects. Some of the songs appeared in our columns. All are spiritually helpful, beautiful thoughts being chastely expressed.

"Ho, Every One." A Gospel booklet, composed entirely of Holy Scripture. The good news is set forth with admirable fulness. The arrangement leaves nothing to be desired, and the type is beautifully clear. We trust this booklet will have a large circulation. (1s. per doz. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Grape Shot Leaflets on Christian Evidences. By H. L. Hastings and others. We hope many Christians will lay in stores of this excellent ammunition, and eagerly embrace opportunities to let it do its work upon the strongholds of infidelity. The leaflets are of twelve kinds, and cost only 1s. per 100, assorted. (Marshall Bros., 10, Pate noster-row, E.C.)

A special Stanley number of The Illustrated London News contains many graphic pictorial reproductions of events that marked the progress of the intrepid explorer's latest mission in Africa, with appropriate accompanying letterpress. We think, however, that the reader might have been spared some of the pictures representing hostile encounters with the natives.

"What are the Wild Waves Saying?" Devout reflections for thoughtful Christians. By Rev. William Frith. The figurative language of Scripture and the ways of God's providence are pegs on which an experienced teacher hangs many a word of counsel and warning. To Mr. Frith the roaring of the sea has suggested truths which Christians generally would do well to take to heart. (1d. Partridge.)

The Cross and Crown Cards. Messrs. Nisbet & Co. have published on a large card (18 in. by 10½ in.) a synopsis of the four Gospel accounts of "Christ before the Jewish and Roman Tribunals," arranged for Bible study or ready reference, by Rev. Charles Neil. A distinct section is given to each of the six trials, and the incidents, about eighty in number, are separately named with special regard to accuracy, terseness, and suggestiveness. The card will prove of great service to careful Bible readers. (6d.)

Soldiers' Homes, and What They are Doing. By One in the Ranks. 3d. Portobello: Thomas Adams, 143, High-street. A soldier here bears strong testimony to the good work done in Soldiers' Homes. Among the stories in illustration of the kindness of ladies who have at heart the welfare of the soldiers, is one which will commend Homes and their workers to the warm sympathy of mothers who have wayward sons. A wild young man, who seemed proud to declare that his friends knew nothing of his whereabouts, was induced to write home. By return of post he received a loving letter from his mother, with her portrait, and he soon came to realise as never before that he was loved by the parent whom he had treated so ungratefully. Then the lady told him of One who loved him with a still stronger love; and that love also touched a responsive chord in the heart of the soldier, who, to-day, is not only one of his family again, but is serving God in the regiment to which he belongs.

Biblical Hope versus "The Larger Hope." By Dr. E. Wood Forster. F. Southwell, 27, Ivy-lane, E.C. In a reverent manner, the author examines Scripture with regard to the fate of the heathen. Holding that many have in all ages exercised repentance toward God so far as they have known Him, he concludes that such are sheep of a fold distinct from the Church. We have no mind for speculation, but where we cannot follow Dr. Forster in point of doctrine, we discern a truth-loving spirit which demands admiration.

Protestant Church Reform. By Bishop Gregg. 3d. Marlborough & Co. This is a sermon which the author preached on November 15 last, in Nathanael Church, Brighton. He asks, "What can Evangelical and Protestant Church people do in the present crisis and distress, caused by the growth of Ritualism and Romanism in the Church of England?" Even if indisposed, in every respect, to accord with the answer given, evangelical Christians in general will readily allow that there is cogency in the argument, as well as force in the facts adduced.

Captain Dawson has written a very useful tract, entitled, The Relief of Emin Pacha, in which he points many important lessons from passages in Mr. Stanley's recent letters from Africa. Attractive in form, and definite in purpose, this tract deserves a large circulation. (1d. Bournemouth: Messrs. Bright, The Arcade.)—The Life Pictures packet of booklets, by Captain Dawson, meets a distinct want. The covers are bright, and the subjects taking; spiritual truths being based upon outstanding events of the day. (Packets of six sorts, 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

Recreation and Amusements, from a Christian Standpoint. By Rev. S. J. Whitmee. 1d. Bristol: W. F. Mack, 70, Park-street. A sermon on a practical question. Faithful words, fitly spoken. Mr. Whitmee has nothing to say against rational amusements, but he maintains that time and place must not be disregarded in the pursuit of them. Of church entertainments he truthfully says: "I am convinced that catering for amusement in connection with places of worship has failed—almost universally failed... Where the Gospel of Christ is faithfully preached, and the Spirit of God works, there is no need for these expedients. They may be all very well in a place deserted by the Spirit of God, with death in the pulpit, and the spirit of the world in the pew."

The Higher Criticism: Some account of its labours upon the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua. By Rev. Cyprian T. Rust. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. What the higher critics claim to have done is here admirably set forth from the positive side. How little of Holy Writ remains! With a calmness almost sarcastic, Mr. Rust utterly discredits the much-vaunted method whereby, in order to exclude the supernatural from the Bible, prophecy has been post-dated and history distorted. It is not in the least without reason that the reader concludes that the critics do not address themselves, without prejudice, to the elucidation of truth, but rather to getting rid, if possible, of such parts of the Bible as cannot conveniently be harmonised with their own preconceived opinions.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

There is now a temperance society in every ship in the British Navy.

It is said that Messrs. Spiers & Pond are considering the erection of temperance bars at railway stations.

In a recent letter, Mr. Gladstone states that he introduced the licensed grocers' system in the interests of temperance; but, if it be found hurtful, he does not advocate its retention.

Some of the temperance women of Dakota, U.S.A., seem to have taken the law into their own hands, and have smashed certain saloons in which their relatives were enticed by drink.

General Smit, one of the joint commission to Swaziland, declares that it cannot remain independent, as the nation is fast going to ruin through drink. It is a sad sight, he says, to see men, women, and children reduced to the lowest level by alcohol.

Sir Stuart Bayley, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, has promptly introduced the reforms in the drink traffic intimated in the despatches of Lord Cross. Some of the most prolific sources of temptation to indulge in liquor are being swept away, and the doom of others has been declared.

The Manchester and Salford Licensing Law Vigilance Committee having good reason for believing that the law is constantly broken by holders of beer and spirit licences, it proposes to bring evidence against houses detected in breaking the law, and to press for withholding licences from the tenants of such houses. Any local friends who can help in this effort should place themselves in communication with Mr. F. W. Maxwell, hon. sec., 29, Princess-street, Manchester.

CONSECRATION MEETINGS have been held in Lyndhurst-road Congregational Church, Hampstead, for ten days, the evangelists being Rev. F. D. Sanford and Mr. Reader Harris. So far as we have been able to observe or ascertain, the meetings were of a helpful and stimulating character. Believers were exhorted by both evangelists to a thorough and whole-hearted Christian life, while the privileges and responsibilities of such a life were earnestly set forth.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Newcastle who, six years ago, asked for £60,000 to be expended in the building of churches in his diocese, has now received nearly £76,000, and amounts continue to reach him.

Dr. Walsham How has refused the offer of the bishopric of Durham. He desires to consecrate what remains of his life to the new diocese of Wakefield, of which he was made the first bishop about two years ago.

A Church Reading Society has been formed at Birkenhead "for the Promotion of Higher Education in Religious Knowledge." The object is stated to be to encourage definite and systematic study in Holy Scripture, the Prayer Book, church history, and Christian evidences.

On Sunday evening last the Archbishop of Canterbury preached to the people of the New Cut in the Victoria Hall. There was a large congregation, more men than women. The sermon was based on the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread." Having shown that it is impossible that God can forsake those who trust in Him, the Archbishop spoke of things temporal, pointing out that too often gambling and drinking cause leakage of the resources of wage-earners He afterwards urged his hearers to receive "the bread of eternal life, by receiving the Lord Jesus Christ." The discourse was couched in simple language, and relieved by appropriate anecdotes. The large body of the people did not take part in the confession and the Lord's prayer, but the singing of some of Mr. Sankey's hymns, in which the Archbishop joined, was an exercise as universal as it was joyous.

On Monday evening, under the auspices of the Church of England Sunday-school Institute, there was a conference of clergy, superintendents, and teachers, at Sion College, Thames Embankment, when the subject of "The Sunday-school Teacher in relation to Modern Thought" was discussed. The opener was Rev. A. J. Harrison, lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society, and several speakers joined in the discussion. Mr. R. W. Dibdin held that the prime duty of the teacher was to make the scholar thoroughly acquainted with what the Bible says, rather than be dependent upon commentation. Rev. J. F. Kitto, who presided, urged that teachers should not teach what they did not believe or hold with the firmest convictions. Many of the sceptical questions of the day would fall into their proper place if teachers were straightforward and honest. The conference was preceded by a prayer-meeting, at which an address was delivered by Canon Legge, on "The Teacher's Spiritual Life, and How to Maintain it."

PRESBYTERIAN.

The executors of the late Mr. George Sturge, a member of the Society of Friends, have informed the treasurer of the Foreign Mission of the Presbyterian Church of England that they are prepared to pay £5000 out of the residue of his estate.

SALVATION ARMY.

Rotherhithe Grammar School has been turned into a Salvationist barracks.

Seasons of revival on Sunday last are reported from Hammersmith, Clapton, Stepney, the Grecian, and St. Helens.

The Fenham-road Mission Hall, Peckham, has been secured for the Army, and some professed salvation in connection with the opening services. It is situated in the midst of a dense popu ation; there is every promise of a good work being accomplished.

METHODIST.

A committee has been formed to appeal for funds to carry on the work at Camden-street Chapel, attached to the North-West Branch of the London Mission, and worked by evangelists under the direction of Rev. Edward Smith, of Clerkenwell.

To assist in raising funds in furtherance of the Forward Movement, the Wesleyan Home Missionary Committee has issued an attractive collecting card, in which they ask for an income of £50,000 a year in order that this aggressive work may not be hindered. It is proposed to circulate these cards among the young people by means of the ministers, and it is thought that a considerable amount may annually be raised from this source.

Large Home Missionary meetings have been held at Liverpool, Hull, Grantham, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Morley, Portsmouth, and Newport, Isle of Wight. The speakers have included Revs. Thomas Champness, Peter Thompson, W. D. Walters, Dr. Lunn, Mr. Josiah Nix, and other advocates of the "Forward Movement." At the meeting at Morley, Sister Lily also delivered an address, and much interest was aroused in the work of the "Sisters of the People" connected with the West Central Mission.

The Primitive Methodist mission party destined for the Zambesi, where they are going to found a new mission, are now well on their way. They are out of reach either by post or telegraph in the depths of the African forests. Great anxiety will be felt to receive further tidings, which are not, however, expected for months. Meanwhile, the churches and Sunday-schools at home are holding meetings, and raising funds on every hand to meet the heavy financial outlay connected with this equipment.

BAPTIST.

The Young Men's Missionary Society in connection with Melbourne Hall, Leicester, have undertaken the support of a missionary on the Congo.

During the past year over eighty new members joined the church at Duckpool-road, Newport, Mon., under the vigorous evangelical ministry of Rev. A. T. Jones; nearly sixty of these were baptized by the pastor.

Rev. Charles Brown, of Nailsworth, has accepted an invitation to become the first pastor of the new chapel in Ferme-park, Hornsey, N. This new church supersedes the Baptist Church in Crouch-end, formerly under the hon. pastorate of Rev. John Batey.

In connection with Frogmore-street Chapel, Abergavenny, there is a "Christian Social Reform Society." The members are mostly total abstainers, and the object of the society is to oppose every form of intemperance, impurity, dishonesty, oppression, and social wrong. All subjects of religious controversy or political dispute are to be excluded, and the society is to be conducted on Scriptural principles.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The adult school movement spreads and deepens. At Hertford a new school has just been opened. Birmingham maintains its supremacy. Stansforth Hall, with class-rooms below and hall above, holding seats for 500, was opened on January 4. Other places have been and are in course of preparation, for the accommodation of extended school and mission work there; and Darlington holds a high place in this department of work. Recently, under the presidency of the Mayor, the twenty-second annual meeting was held at Skinnergate, the Mayoress—Mrs. I. A. Pease—giving out about forty prizes to the scholars, and such true friends of the movement as Theodore Fry, M.P., Arthur Pease, late M.P., and J. B. Hodgkin, secretary of the Home Mission Committee, speaking encouraging words, and rendering noble help. Many other towns show similar activity in fighting ignorance, intemperance, and indifference.

George Wood, of Wellingborough, conducted a successful week's Gospel mission at Middlesborough in January, and in the neighbouring town of Stockton.

Isabella Young and William Hobson concluded a series of Gospel temperance meetings and Bible-readings on Sunday, the 23rd ult. Remarkable power attended the Gospel meetings on Sunday, and at the closing prayer-meeting a goodly number of young people were enabled to confess Christ as their Master and Lord.

On the Monday and Tuesday after, William Hobson lectured at Norton and Stockton on "Early Friends." There was a good attendance at both. They are now engaged in a Gospel mission at West Hartlepool.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Joshua C. Harrison, of Park Chapel, Camden Town, has asked his congregation to obtain the services of an assistant minister.

Rev. A. Mearns is to resign the Secretariat of the Congregational Church-Aid and Home Missionary Society, so as to devote the whole of his time to the work of the London Union.

At Alderton Congregational Chapel (says The British Weekly), a good work has been going on since the dawn of the new year. Twelve have been proposed for church membership, and there are twelve more applicants. The Sunday-night congregations have trebled, and prayer-meetings risen from the proverbial two or three to scores.

Rev. R. F. Horton delivered an address on the "Forward Movement," to a large assembly on Sunday week, at Mansfield College, Oxford. Mr. Horton, in the course of his remarks, said they, as Nonconformists, had a forward movement, and it was once more to bring the great religious conception which formed the centre of their life to bear on what was called the social and industrial problem of modern England.

A conference of the pastors, deacons, and delegates of the north-east district of the London Congregational Union was held at Stamford-hill a few days ago, Rev. J. M. Gibbon presiding. An address was given by Rev. Thos. Hooper (Kingsland) urging the importance of a closer union of the churches of London, and especially the claims of churches in the poorer neighbourhoods on the sympathy of the members of the churches in the suburbs. Revs. Andrew Mearns, Alderman Fleming Williams, G. Snashall, T. C. Udall, and others, took part in the proceedings.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The death is announced of Rev. William Martin, LL.D., of Perth, Emeritus Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Aberdeen. Dr. Martin used to devote his summers to evangelistic tours in such remote districts as Orkney and Shetland, where his services were greatly appreciated.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Arrangements are completed for holding the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Anniversaries throughout Ireland during the beginning of next month.

The Y.M.C.A. recently organised in Limerick is progressing favourably. Premises have been taken by the Committee, which are now undergoing repairs. They hope to be able to have possession of the same early this month.

One of the most successful and beneficent organisations in Ireland is the Presbyterian Orphan Society. The Training Home for Orphan Girls, opened about a year ago, has forty-three girls in training, and promises to be very efficient.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Samuel Hamilton, Presbyterian minister, of Buckna, co. Antrim.—Rev. Gilbert M'Callum, until recently pastor of Springfield Congregational Church, Dewsbury.—Rev. D. Arthur, Congregational minister, Aberdeen, N.B.—Mr. W. M. Grose, an active worker connected with the Baptist Church at Stoke-on-Trent.—Rev. G. O. Bate, a well-known Wesleyan minister, formerly secretary of the Wesleyan Education Committee, and principal of Southlands Training College, Battersea, London.—Rev. Bassett E. Thomas, of Cardiff, a retired minister, formerly pastor of the Welsh Baptist Chapel at Gelligaer, Mon.—Rev. J. A. Flide, minister of the Congregational Church, Burnham, Bucks.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

SWITZERLAND has 340 Young Men's Christian Associations, with a membership of 4850.

THE BASEL MISSION.—It is grievous to note that while doors are everywhere opening which this excellent agency could well fill, the funds do not keep pace with the pressing needs of the work. Last year's balance-sheet shows a large deficit.

THE SABBATH IN AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.—The compositors and journeymen printers of Budapest have memorialised the Hungarian Government on the importance of observing the Sabbath. The petition bore two thousand signatures, and asked that the seventh day might be declared a rest day in printing establishments.

LUTHERANS IN PARIS.—The Lutheran Church has its mission here, whereby efforts are made to furnish means of worship to many isolated members lost in the general population. It supplies pastors to three districts, in which several agencies for good among young and old are kept in vigorous operation. Fifteen deaconesses attend to visitation and nursing the sick.

THE PARIS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE has been discussing the Sabbath question, and has given a qualified support to the movement for the reduction of railway work. The Chamber favours the lessening of goods traffic on the seventh day, in order to secure rest for the railway employés, which they regard as desirable on hygienic grounds and in the interest of public morality and social order.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—The directors of the London Missionary Society have received letters from their agents at the south end of Lake Tanganyika and Fwambo to September 24. The writers say:—"There seems to be no reason now for anxiety on our account, and we are all in capital health and spirits, and in no real danger at present. We have all the necessaries of life, and every prospect of doing substantial work at our new station (Niumkorlo)."

EVANGELISATION IN FRANCE.—M. Eug. Réveillaud recently held meetings at Matha, Charente-Inférieure. A correspondent of Le Christianisme says that the audiences were very sympathetic. He says:—"We are here in quite a Catholic region, and the 160 Protestant communicants were formerly, without exception, Catholics." Yet it was more easy to proclaim the truth to the people than it is in some Protestant quarters, for the correspondent adds:—"At his last meeting M. Réveillaud had an audience of from 300 to 350 people, who stood and listened to the Gospel message."

OATHS IN THE FRENCH ARMY.—General de Négrier, commanding 11th Corps, recently gave out the following order, after visiting a barracks at Nantes, where he heard superior officers swear when addressing the troops:—"Officers are reminded that nowhere in the theory of military movements are the commands accompanied by oaths or blasphemous expressions. Therefore the General directs that in future commands be not accompanied by such like coarse expressions." We congratulate the worthy General upon this order, which will, we trust, go the round of our nineteen corps d'armée.—Eglise Chrétienne.

RELIGION IN BERLIN.—A movement has been started in Berlin to abolish the letting of pews in the churches. The local association of the Evangelical Church Aid Society is promoting two new works of great promise. The number of deaconesses in Berlin is to be considerably increased, and ministers are to be appointed in many needy parishes. Both the measures are started at the desire of the Empress. There are already five hundred deaconesses at work in the Rhine province, where there are no fewer than three thousand Roman Catholic sisters of mercy. This fact has induced some friends to move in founding a second Deaconesses' Institute in the province to supplement the work of Kaiserswerth.

THE BELGIAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY CHURCH is seeing much good fruit of its colportage work. Comparing the New Testaments which they buy with the preaching of the priests, the people do not hesitate at times to draw conclusions which amount to votes of no confidence in their spiritual advisers. The priests make it a rule to demand the "bad books," but they do not always get them. When they do, they commit them to the flames, as they have done all down the centuries. Scarcely a month passes but the colporteurs report stories of the Holy Scriptures having been burnt by Catholic curates. A worker in the province of Namur and Ardennes lately sold a New Testament to a woman whose first copy the priest had burnt. The woman declared that she "would be wiser in future," meaning that she would take good care that the priest did not get the book which she was determined to read for herself.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 9.—Nehemiah IV.

Reproach (1-6).—Whenever God's work revives, there is sure to be evil speaking and reproach. It should be a subject of congratulation when it is so (1 Pet. iv. 14). It is easy to make a mock of sacred things, and yet it is sure to come back on those who are the ringleaders. It is a mistake to reply. Let us hand our cause over to God, and go on with his work. It matters very little what men say, so long as He is pleased. Whilst God is on our side, we need not fear what man shall do unto us. The waves break into drops of ineffectual spray as they thunder on the bar. Had Nehemiah had the light of our dispensation, he would not have prayed as in ver. 5. Our Lord has taught us to intercede for our enemies (Matt. v. 11). But let us emulate his zeal for the name of God, and let us remember that increased light means increased responsibility (Matt. xi. 11). Oh, that all members of the spiritual city of God had this mind for the Lord's work (6).

Active opposition (7-15).—Detraction and scorn are apt to become more virulent as they are defied. The smouldering embers break out into a flame. In days of conspiracy, our friends and allies are apt to grow discouraged and to advise the suspension of our work. "We are not able" (10), "the Jews said ten times..." (12). But faith looks to God alone, and triumphantly holds on its way. What a lovely combination of prayer and watching (9). Prayer does not make us presumptuous. "Trust in God, and keep your powder dry," said Cromwell. It is a good thing when families stand together for the faith (13). What a splendid battle-cry in all days of peril and sorrow. Remember the Lord (14). Compare 2 Chron. xvi. 9.

Wise precautions (16-23).—We must all combine the soldier and the labourer (2 Tim. ii. 3-6). Our hands must be familiar with sword against the attacks of our spiritual enemies, and with trowel to contribute a little bit of work towards God's building. All the people of God should make common cause against common foes. We stand or fall together (20). There is no release in this service on this side of the grave. The servant of Christ is never off duty (23).

MONDAY, MARCH 10.—Nehemiah V.

(1) Serious complaints (1-5).—It is grievous enough when there is trouble without the Church; but the case is greatly aggravated, when the people of God are at variance among themselves, or prey on each other. So much time had been given to wall-building that husbandry had been neglected, and the poorer Jews were obliged to mortgage their property, and sell their children into bondage to get money to live, and to pay the 12 per cent. interest and the royal taxes. Thus the richer Jews were taking great advantage of the stress and hardship of the times. They might argue that they had justice and right on their side, but surely they were under the restraints of a higher morality than that which obtained in the ordinary dealings of commercial life (Jas. v. 1-9).

(2) Wrongs redressed (6-13).—It was a daring thing to assail vested interests, especially as Nehemiah had himself sprung from the ranks; but his motive was so absolutely pure and beyond suspicion that he was able to carry his point. Our hands must be clean, if we are to set others right. "The fear of God" (9, 15).—Let us ever appeal to men on the highest grounds, for then conscience will be our ally. "It is not good" (9, and Matt. xiv. 4).—We should ever judge our actions as they may appear in the sight of those who hate and oppose the Gospel. "The reproach of the heathen" (9).—The result was most satisfactory, and brought praise to God (2 Cor. viii. 19).

(3) Nehemiah's moderation (14-19).—This paragraph was evidently added at a subsequent period to the rest of the chapter, and details the habit of Nehemiah's administration. He exercised unbounded hospitality (Rom. xii. 13; Heb. xiii. 2); but refused to take what was his due from the people, because of the many burdens under which they were groaning. In this we are reminded of the great Apostle (1 Cor. ix.). How full is this book of ejaculatory prayer. Even from his writing-table, this true-hearted man would lift up his eyes to God. Is there anything better for us than that God should think of us for good? (Ps. cxxxix. 14).

TUESDAY, MARCH 11.—Nehemiah VI.

(1) A plot (1-9).—What marvellous comfort is here for those who are doing God's work amid slander and reproach. Let such also read Ps. xxxvii., and specially 12-15. The interests of God's work are infinitely more important than our safety or reputation. Let us not go down into the plains to defend ourselves, but remain steadily doing our great work (3). Life is too short to spend any of it in self-defence. Do God's work, and let Him care for all the rest (3). Open letters are not pleasant. They make talk among our servants. We do not like to have wrong motives imputed. But our sure resource is in prayer. It is a good thing to make every fresh attack of the enemy an argument for appealing for additional grace (9).

(2) False friends (10-14).—The sailor has more cause to dread the sunken reef than the rock-bound coast, lined with white surf. And we need most to fear those who kiss us as they betray. Also sometimes Satan tempts us under the guise of religion. How many Christians live in bondage, because of scruples which seem to be religious, but are lying spirits. Because a thought happens to wear a religious guise, it is not necessarily from God. "Try the spirits" (1 John iv. 1).—Whatever weakens and enfeebles and restrains from holy service, or concentrates thought upon self is probably a Shemaiah or a Noadiah.

(3) The finished wall (15-19).—All our work should be wrought of our God (15). We are only the tools and instruments, He the Architect. There is no life like this—God is the great Worker in the world. When our innermost counsels are reported, it makes us very wary of our secret lives. But if we are careful of the scrutiny of men, how much more so of the scrutiny of God (2 Kings vi. 12). Amid the threats of men let us be "stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch..." (1 Cor. xv. 58).

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12.—Nehemiah VII.

It is probable that Nehemiah returned to the Persian Court on the completion of the first part of his enterprise, in the building of the walls, and that he left Hananiah and his brother in charge, until he had been able to obtain a prolongation of his mission.

Hananiah's character is very aptly described (2). These were two splendid characteristics: the fear of God and faithfulness (1 Cor. iv. 2).

Sound common-sense dictated the policy of appointing each man to guard his own property (3). It is a great art to utilise the idiosyncrasies of men for the cause of God. The extent of the city walls had evidently been marked out in faith, as directed by Zech. viii. After all, it is in vain to set our watch, unless we have secured the Divine guardianship (Ps. cxxvii. 1, 2).

Registration seems to have engrossed much of the care of these returned exiles, and it was necessary, not only that each might inherit his ancestral property, but that the descent of our Lord might be easily traced to David. We ought to be very careful to be sure that we and our dear ones are on God's registry. We cannot lay claim to our inheritance, unless we are heirs through the new birth (Rom. viii. 16, 17). Nehemiah compares the genealogical register made by Ezra, before the people left the land of their captivity (Ezra ii.), with the exact numbers who had reached Jerusalem. The differences in number probably arise from changes which occurred in the constitution of the emigrant parties—some not coming who thought of doing so; others coming who had given no such intimation. Ezra and Nehemiah wrought together, and we should find no real variation in their narratives, if only we knew the whole case. It is right to attribute every good impulse to God Open your heart for Him to put into it his own thoughts, and to work through for his own purposes (5).

THURSDAY, MARCH 13.—Nehemiah VIII.

The reading of God's Word (1-8).—What a fair spectacle. The unity of the people "as one man" (1). The spontaneous demand for the reading of the Word, springing from a genuine thirst for it; they spake unto Ezra. The attention which made the people stand from the first ray of light till midday (3). The reverence manifested as Ezra opened the Book, and the great congregation rose (5). The deep emotion and glad thanksgiving (6). Several assistants helped him, some of whom may have been centres of little groups, who could not get near enough to hear, or they may have taken turns to relieve Ezra's voice; it is said they read in the Book (8). Whenever we open the Book of God we should turn to the God of the Book (6). Perhaps ministers would get larger audiences and more attention, if they were to bend their energy to causing people understand the Bible. It is said that synagogues devoted to the study of the law sprang from this era.

The strength of joy (9-12).—The first work of the law is to produce an agony of conviction, but afterwards there is joy. It is most important that God's children should cultivate joy (John xv. 11; Gal. v. 22; Phil. iv. 4). Nothing more convinces the world of the reality of religion, or is a better source of successful service. A discouraged joyless Christian is a weak one. We should make others sharers of our joy (Is. lviii. 7, 10; Luke xiv. 13). We double our joy by sharing it.

The Feast of Tabernacles (13-18).—The more we read the Bible, the more we hunger for it. And the secret of profiting by it is to turn what we learn into instant obedience (14, 16). This feast commemorated the wilderness, and anticipated the blessed Gospel times (Zech. xiv. 16). It had been observed before (2 Chron. v. 3; Ezra iii. 4); but never with such splendour. Our life would contain "very great gladness," if we, too, lived as pilgrims and loved God's Word.

FRIDAY, MARCH 14.—Nehemiah IX.

What a blessed result of the Bible-study of the previous chapter. It led to confession, separation, and worship. Read here Zech. vii. This is a noble model of true prayer and confession. And it becomes us to study it for imitation and adaptation.

(1) Adoration (6).—We should not only thank God for his great goodness to us, but should ever praise Him for what He is in Himself. In this way we shall mingle our voices with those of the host of heaven.

(2) A recital of the past (7-15).—It is also good to review the dealings of God with us in bygone days, and with our people. There are hill-tops in our experience where the air is clear, and we can see the way by which we have been led. At such times we look beyond second causes to the great Orderer of our lives, and it is one perpetual assertion of Thou. The history of God's dealings with Israel is an epitome of his dealings with ourselves. The choice in Ur, the redemption from Egypt, the wilderness wanderings, the land of rest—all these have their counterparts in our life-story.

(3) Confession (16, &c.).—Side by side with the story of God's loving care runs the story of sin (16, 17, 18, 26, 29). The gold and black strands are closely interwoven. In the midst of God's best gifts, we break out into sin; and yet He still gives us his good Spirit, and withholds not manna (20). How many times has He delivered us, not after our sins, but after his great mercies (28). What comfort there is in the description of God in ver. 17: "Ready to pardon." Surely our troubles have been self-inflicted, our chastisements lighter than we deserved. We must acknowledge that God has been just (33).

(4) Consecration (36-38).—It is well to make written and sealed covenants with God; not that we are able to keep them in our own strength, but trusting Him to fulfil them through us. Thus were fulfilled ancient predictions in the case of Israel (Jer. l. 5; Isa. xliv. 5). Who now will this day consecrate himself to God in a sure covenant?

SATURDAY, MARCH 15.—Nehemiah X.

Here is a list of the signatories to the covenant, which was signed on behalf of the people. Notice that separation must precede covenant-making. This covenant included several distinct points which were obligatory because they were in the law, and now became doubly so (29). The items were:—

(1) That they would not intermarry with the heathen (30).

(2) That they would not buy or sell on the Sabbath, or holy days (31).

(3) That they would observe the Mosaic ordinances as to debt (31).

Their neglect of the Sabbatic year had been one cause of their captivity (Lev. xxvi. 35; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21).

(4) That they would maintain the temple service. They had robbed God in tithes and offerings (Mal. iii. 8, 9), and therefore their labours had been often futile. All this was to be altered, and a proper tenth was to be given, together with the firstfruits. We ought not to be less careful than they were in respect to systematic giving. We are inclined to think we are giving much more than is really the case, until we give on principle. We ought to give from love at least as much as they gave from law. Never less than the firstfruits of all, and the tenth of all, and as much more as may seem good. All we have is God's, and we should see that our gifts do not fall beneath that standard.

Let us never forsake God's house, either in attending on its services (Heb. x. 25), or in maintaining its institutions. Though our hearts may worship Him anywhere, yet we ought to find peculiar interest in any earthly embodiment of that heavenly world, in which He is everlastingly worshipped and served.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 16.

The Draught of Fishes.—Luke v. 1-11.

Golden Text: Verse 10.

In John i. 35-51, Peter and others are called only to discipleship. In this lesson, and in Matt. iv. 18-22, and Mark i. 16-20, they are called to a closer and abiding relationship, in view of their call to be apostles.

There are differences between this narrative and that of Matthew and Mark; but these are such as can easily be reconciled. One relates what the others omit.

The "order" (i. 1) in which Luke sets forth the Gospel narrative is evidently moral rather than historical. Hence incidents which in Matthew and Mark follow this lesson are placed by Luke before it. Perhaps Luke related the miracles (iv. 33-41) first, in order to place the faith of Capernaum in striking contrast to the unbelief of Nazareth.

(1) The borrowed pulpit (1-3).—The scene of this incident is "the lake of Gennesaret." "This lake, formed by the river Jordan, is twelve or fourteen miles long, six or seven miles broad, and 165 feet deep. Its waters, fresh and clear, contain abundance of fish. To the west, its banks are intersected by calcareous mountains, while on the east it is bounded by chalk or basalt mountains 800 or 1000 feet high. Its shores, now desolate, were, in our Lord's day, covered with cities, and inhabited by a busy throng. It abounds in interesting memories of our Lord's labours."—Lange.

The occasion was the eagerness of the people "to hear the word of God" (1). They could not but listen to this Prince of Preachers (Ps. xlv. 2; Isa. lxi. 1-3). A Divinely called and Divinely anointed preacher has no difficulty in getting a congregation. The fishing boats were drawn up on the beach (2); and the fishers, after their fruitless night's toil (5), were washing their nets. Simon's boat (3) becomes a pulpit. We have seen Christ making use of Simon's home (iv. 38, 39), and now He makes use of his boat. We may consecrate to Jesus not only our homes, but our occupation as well.

(2) The draught of fishes (4-10).—By this miracle Jesus repaid Peter for the loan of his boat. It was also an acted parable, preparatory to the call which was to follow (10). Simon is addressed (4), because, as he was afterwards leader among the Apostles, so was he among his companion fishermen. The command: "Launch out," &c. (4) was a strange one. Night was the time for successful fishing. What fisherman, after such a night as Simon had spent, would think of casting his nets in the day? Yet such is Jesus' command. It tests the faith and obedience of Peter. Until a man is willing to lay down his judgment at the feet of Jesus, he has not learned how to obey. Peter's reply (5) shows his readiness to surrender his own opinion to that of his Lord. "Nevertheless."—Though under ordinary circumstances it would be unwise, his confidence in Jesus led him to do a seemingly unwise thing at his command. It was an important lesson for Peter and for every servant of God. The greatest triumphs of the Gospel have been not on the lines of human wisdom (1 Cor. i. 18-25). Until our own thoughts are surrendered to Him, He cannot make full use of us. The result (6) proved the wisdom of the command of Jesus. Whether this was a miracle of knowledge or was effected by his own will, it is equally remarkable. The lesson it was calculated to teach Peter was that, as a fisher of men, he might work without Jesus and expect nothing (5), even under most favourable conditions; while in company with Jesus, and in obedience to his commands, he might expect success where it seemed most improbable. Oh that every teacher would learn that lesson! Other results followed (6-10). The astonishment of all (9, 10) found expression particularly in the strange request of Peter, "Depart from me," &c. (8). To him the miracle had been a display of the glory of Jesus, like that which Isaiah beheld in the temple (Isa. vi.); and it produced the same result. There was no confession of any definite offence, but such a manifestation of Jesus made him deeply sensible of his own sinfulness and unworthiness. His request was not like that in Job xxi. 14; but rather that of one who needs and desires Jesus, but feels his own unfitness. It is such men whom Jesus can use.

(3) The call to service (10, 11).—In giving such a response to Peter's strange request, our Lord acted according to Isa. lvii. 15. As Peter pondered the miracle in the light of this call, he would understand more and more of its symbolical import. Note how our Lord honours obedience and faith in things that are least by calling to a higher service. "They forsook all and followed Him" (11).—Can we call it self-denial? Contrast the "all" they forsook with the "Him" they followed—was it an unprofitable exchange? Let those who are afraid of self-denial remember to what they are called (ix. 23).

Lesson Points.

(1) Where Jesus finds his labourers.—Not among speculative dreamers, nor among men filled with ambition, but among those who quietly and faithfully fulfil their daily calling. Compare Moses (Exod. iii.); Gideon (Judg. vi.); David (2 Sam. vii. 8).

(2) How He trains his servants.—By testing their obedience to Him in little matters (3, 4); and by the exhibition of his own glory to humble them (8). To be consciously unfit is a necessary condition of true fitness.

STREET ARABS' GRATITUDE.

A number of waifs rescued from city street-life and placed with farmers in Canada have clubbed together and sent a draft for £148 8s. 10d. to Mr. Fegan, of The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., as "a surprise gift, to show their love for him and their grateful remembrance of their old Home, and to help towards the expenses of the next party" of one hundred boys leaving on March 20. This is the second year the "old boys" of this Institution have exhibited this pleasing esprit de corps; the remittance this year shows an increase of £40 over last year's amount, and was accompanied with most gratifying assurances from many that as they prosper in life they will continue to support the Home that sheltered and befriended them in their hour of need.

Several of the "old boys" have now taken up their own land and have begun to work upon their own homesteads with every prospect of becoming well-to-do settlers. The cost of each rescued street-arab's passage and outfit is only £10, and about £800 is still needed to meet the cost of this next swarm "hiving off" in a few weeks.

CONFERENCE IN ROME.

Dear Sir,—We propose having a Convention in Rome from April 14 to 18, for the purpose of building up believers, and for quickening and deepening spiritual life. Pasteur Monod, Rev. Evan Hopkins, and Lord Radstock will, we hope, take part in the meetings. There is no better centre in the world than Rome is for well-arranged gatherings for fostering a life of faith and godliness. The Epistle to the Romans is still "quick and powerful," and the letters written from here by St. Paul concerning the power of a trusted Christ have peculiar force and sweetness in this great city.

A Conference of such a kind will need the prayers and pecuniary assistance of friends at home. We shall be very thankful for help sent to Rev. Evan Hopkins, Richmond; Miss G. Filder, hon. sec., 27, Via Sistina, Rome; or to myself.

A. C. Thiselton,
Chaplain of Trinity Church, Rome.

TROUVILLE.—Mr. P. H. Hansen, sailors' missionary at this French port, writes to say that a good work is going on at the Bethel, both among English and French. The ships are visited, while meetings are held at the Bethel that are well attended. Mr. Hansen, whose address is Deanville, Trouville, France, would be glad of some weekly copies of The Christian and other good literature for the seamen.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Robert Cairns has concluded a five weeks' mission at St. Combs, Aberdeenshire, where there have been tokens of considerable spiritual awakening.

Mr. D. L. Moody, after his Brooklyn mission, gave four Bible addresses in the Marble Collegiate Church, Fifth-avenue and Twenty-ninth-street, New York. Mr. George C. Stebbins had charge of the music.

Exeter Hall.—The mission for men recently held by Rev. Henry Montgomery proved a time of great blessing. Over 130 men handed in their names as professing conversion to God during the week.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has brought to a close a three weeks' mission in the Dowan Vale Free Church, Partick, Glasgow. Many tokens for good have been given. Mr. Bradlaugh commenced a mission at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Sunday last.

Mr. J. W. Moodie conducted a mission in the Sharon Hall, Paisley, from February 16 to 28. Numbers professed to receive Christ. One feature of the meetings was that a number of backsliders were restored. Mr. Moodie has now gone to Newarthill.

Mr. James Jones has concluded a successful ten days' Gospel temperance mission at the Lockhart Hall, Hammersmith. A goodly number have professed spiritual decision, and others have signed the temperance pledge. Special meetings were held for women and children.

Mr. E. J. Parker recently conducted a week's Gospel mission in the Baptist Chapel, Sittingbourne. Amongst the inquirers were five husbands and wives, and a man who had not attended a religious meeting for seven years. He had been a great opposer of the Gospel, but is now quite a changed man.

Mr. Newton Jones has completed a seventeen days' mission at the Congregational Church, Ryde, holding services nightly for both children and adults. Some have professedly taken Christ as their Saviour, and a noted feature has been the banding together of several young men who say they will be out and out for Christ.

Rev. G. C. Grubb's mission in Ceylon has proved a blessing to all classes in many places. Workers have been brought together and stimulated, and the Gospel has been preached with great power and cheering results. The meetings in Colombo were largely attended, and the Christians seemed to be of one heart and mind.

Mr. John Fawcett, of Durham, whose work on Tyneside has been so greatly blessed, recently conducted a Gospel temperance mission at Wellington, Salop. The Central Hall was crowded nightly, and a large number of drunkards were reclaimed and souls saved. The local workers in the temperance cause lent willing aid, and the mission was in the highest sense a great success.

Mr. George Hefford has concluded a sixteen days' mission at the Seamen's Bethel, London Docks. On each of the three Sundays four meetings were held; a free breakfast was given, followed by a Gospel address. In the afternoons services for children were held. Some 150 to 200 men were addressed in the evening at a model lodging-house near. The week evening meetings were times of blessing to many.

Mr. Henry Thorne recently conducted a very successful Gospel mission in Malvern under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The Bible-readings were largely attended by believers of all denominations, and much appreciated. The evangelistic meetings were held in the spacious Assembly Hall, and a goodly number professed to have found Christ. Mr. Thorne was unwell throughout the mission, but power was given him for each meeting.

Brading.—A seven days' mission has been held in the Congregational Church, Brading, Isle of Wight. The chapel was well filled each evening of the week by an attentive and deeply impressed audience. The missioner was Rev. Robert Balgarnie, assisted by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Chamberlain. At the close of the mission a goodly number of persons, mostly connected with the congregation and Sunday-school, had professed faith in Christ Jesus.

COW CROSS MISSION.

CRITICAL STATE OF FINANCES.

The friends associated together in the work of this Mission are very much concerned at the serious falling off in the receipts at Christmas, 1889. We have hitherto been enabled (for nearly a quarter of a century) to meet and pay up all claims at the end of the year;

But now we are £170 behindhand, and unless this is forthcoming now, immediately, we must certainly give up either St. John's Hall, Clerkenwell, or our little Cottage Home of Rest at St. John's, Woking. With such a brightening future as we have now before us this Summer, it is difficult to believe that we shall have to vacate either of these. But we dare not go further into debt. We do not ask of those who have subscribed in 1889-90, but of the friends of former years, who seem to have forgotten us. Of course we shall make it a subject of earnest prayer to our heavenly Father, and if it is His work He will not suffer

The Cow Cross Mission to collapse.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent Appeal fo IMMEDIATE HELP:

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have also a large number of young women to look after, who have passed through, and are doing well in situations, but who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five shillings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT
TO MONDAY, MARCH 3, 1890.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Emigration.—Mr. W. J. Pady, 72, Iffley-road, W. (Deacon of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush) proposes to take a party to Canada about the middle of April, and will be glad if he can be of service to any friends going out. He has sons in Ontario, Manitoba, and the North-West.

AWAY TO THE WEST!!!

170 Trained Lads (the First Party this year) will (D.V.) "Swarm Off" from our various "Homes" for Canada on March 27. A number of these will be bound for our New Industrial Farm, Manitoba, the remainder for Ontario.

Dear Friends,

With the winter still upon us, I am bound to make arrangements for the exodus of my First Party of little Emigrants for this year; and I hope to be able, through God's goodness, and the generous gifts of His people, to meet all the expenses for the "Swarming Off" of 170 Fine Lads from our overcrowded hives in East London.

As everyone knows who reads THE CHRISTIAN, I and my faithful colleagues have had very heavy burdens to bear during the past eight or nine months. The struggle has been in several respects a fiercer one than heretofore. Moreover, it has been made more difficult to rescue the perishing, and to snatch unhappy children from the vile surroundings in which they were discovered by us; but through the infinite mercy of the Lord, we have been sustained, and though often "faint," are yet "pursuing."

These 170 dear young lads now about to leave us have all of them been tested and trained with the greatest care in our workshops. Not a few of them have also, happily, given marked evidence of having "yielded their own selves to the Lord." This gives me greater confidence in the prospects of their future success, and I know I may ask for them all the prayerful sympathy of every servant of Christ.

Need I remind you that no truer, wiser method has ever been devised for effecting four very desirable objects than this scheme of well-organised Christian Emigration of trained and tested young people?

(1) It saves the child, delivering it for ever from the perils of its former lot.

(2) It relieves our over-crowded cities, the labour-markets of which are hopelessly congested, and in which the struggle for existence is growing fiercer every day.

(3) It supplies Canada with her greatest need: additions to her population of the choicest materials—honest, healthy, and industrious, and piously-trained children, who, by God's blessing, will grow into the successful citizens of the near future.

(4) It provides room for the immediate admission to these Homes of as many fresh cases, to be rescued from the streets and lanes of our great city.

But further Funds, to meet the expenses of this Emigration Party, are much needed. Some help has already come in, but much yet remains to be done. As in former years, I am glad to be able to announce that £9 per boy entirely covers the cost incurred in settling him suitably in Ontario; but £11 are required for placing each of the Older Lads in Manitoba.

£54 will therefore give six Ontario boys a start in life. £66 will do the same for as many older youths going to Manitoba.

I hope during the present year to be permitted, if God spare my life, to place out at least 500 trained children in the Dominion, far from the squalor and wretchedness of the slums of East London.

Any gift sent in response will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, WM. FOWLER, ESQ., or by

Your faithful Servant in Christ,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

SUITABLE FOR A GIFT-BOOK.

The Christian Portrait Gallery:

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED Life-like Portraits and Biographic Sketches of Prominent Christian Workers of the Present Day.

Handsomely Bound, Demy Quarto, Cloth,
Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"This handsome, large, quarto volume, beautifully bound, is one of more than ordinary interest to the Christian reader. It contains upwards of one hundred biographical sketches, with remarkably life-like portraits of men and women who have been—and some of whom still are—eminent workers for God at home and in foreign lands."—English Churchman.

"This handsome volume will be valued by all who are interested in the Christian life and work of our day. The portraits are very good, and the accompanying sketches are models of brief, terse, and adequate biographies. The volume will form a handsome feature for the drawing-room, and be especially suitable for presentation."—Baptist Magazine.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller in the United Kingdom or the Colonies.

Important Work by Dr. A. T. PIERSON,

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Terse, trenchant, and suggestive."—Life of Faith.

"A most masterly treatise on the Evidences of Christianity. The book is full of argument and of suggestion, and lighted up with striking illustration. The volume is a very 'readable' one, and those who have to do with 'honest doubters' could scarcely find a better to put into their hands."—The Church.

"Would that all our young men—and especially such as are exposed to sceptical influences—could get hold of this able work! It would fortify them in the faith of the Gospel, and supply them with powerful weapons against opponents."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"For half-a-crown any one may obtain here all that is best in the way of fact and argument on prophecy and miracles, on the scientific accuracy and the ethical beauty and sublimity of the Bible, and on he person and teaching of Christ." Methodist Recorder.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller in the United Kingdom or the Colonies.

PRESS NOTICES.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth; but its principal aim seems to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."—Wesleyan S. S. Magazine.

"Full of suggestive reading, illustrated with numerous capital woodcuts."—Bookseller.

"'The Herald of Mercy' ought to be very widely spread in the homes of the poor, where we are certain it would meet with a hearty welcome. To ministers and visitors we recommend it as one of the best works we know."—Preacher's Analyst.

"Very good. Cannot be better. The very thing for distribution."—Sword and Trowel.

"It is profusely illustrated, and full of instructive and profitable reading for old and young. The Gospel is presented in its most winning and attractive form."—Christian Age.

FROM THE PARABLES.

256 Pages.

With Twenty-four Full-page Original Illustrations.

Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

THE CHRISTIAN TREASURY says:—

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work."

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST says:—

"We commend the volume to the special attention of ministers, lay preachers, and Sabbath school teachers, as a most helpful auxiliary to the elucidation of the Saviour's parabolic teaching."

A SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION of "PEARLS of WISDOM"
Is also Published, price 6d., in Tinted Covers;
1s., in Cloth; 1s. 6d., Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges.

Percival's Picture Gallery.

WITH COLOURED FRONTISPIECE.

Elegantly bound in cloth boards, with gilt edges, 2s.

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH says:—

"Thank you, A.L.O.E., for introducing us to 'Percival's Picture Gallery.' We have walked through with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We recommend our readers to follow our example, which they can do for two shillings."

THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH says:—

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist, sketching his pictures and telling his wonderful stories, is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get-up of the volume is a credit to the publishers. It will make a fine Gift-book, fit for any recipient."

VERY SUITABLE AS A GIFT-BOOK.

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH says:—

"A fresh and vigorous Book; calculated to provoke unto love and good works. Preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and others will find many helpful thoughts here."

THE ROCK says:—

"A delightful picture of the American Evangelist amidst home surroundings."

A BOOK FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Nineteen Beautiful Years.

A RECORD OF THE LIFE OF A BELOVED SISTER.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD.

With Introduction by Bishop Foster; and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, John G. Whittier. With Three Portraits, and View of Miss Willard's Birthplace.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH says:—

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings. The portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."

THE LADIES' TREASURY says:—

"A better, purer present to girls and young women cannot be found."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Limp cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s.

THE BAPTIST MESSENGER says:—

"This book contains some most remarkable things, it being the history of a most remarkable man, full of zeal, full of love, full of faith, full of the spirit of prayer, and living in close communion with his God, was an immense power through the Spirit in the towns and villages of his native land. It will be read with considerable interest, and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"

THE PREACHER'S ANALYST says:—

"This biography is full of interest, and will have a still higher attractiveness for those who are engaged in the ministerial work.'

The Golden Treasury

BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illustrated Frontispiece.

Very Suitable for a Birthday Present.

BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY has been translated into nearly all European languages, and has obtained an enormous circulation in Germany and Great Britain. In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read. In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "Birthday" Edition, four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank squares or spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries, consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK,

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a GENTLEMAN at PERTH.

On the 8th March, I received a letter from Mr. N—, and statement of his case. He says: "I had a bad cold and neglected it. I did not think of consulting any doctor until blood came. The cough is not leaving me. There is tightness in the chest and pain in the side. I have lost seven pounds of flesh in the last three months. I took Cod Liver Oil until my stomach would bear it no longer. Should your treatment cure me, I will do all I can to make it known." And it did cure him.

On the 6th April, he writes:—"Your medicine has done me much good." Complaining of some throat irritation I advised him thereon.

Writing to me in May, he says:—"Your medicine has done me a world of good. My cough is nearly well."

On the 6th August he writes:—"It is five months now since I consulted you for my bronchitis, contracted three years ago. I am now well. My usual strength has returned. Walking is no trouble now, my appetite is good. I rest well at night. I am better than I ever expected to be, and cannot thank you enough for the wonderful change. I will not fail to make you known in every household where I hear of cough or of chest symptoms, during my life."

The patient assigns a reason for not wishing his name and address to appear in print, but I do not think he would object to my privately referring any patient to him.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BEETHAM'S Glycerine & Cucumber.

Is the most perfect emollient milk for preserving and softening the skin ever produced! It soon renders it soft, smooth, and white; entirely removes and prevents all roughness, redness sunburn, tan, &c., and preserves the skin from the effects of the sun, wind, or hard water, more effectually than any other preparation. No lady who values her complexion should ever be without it, as it is invaluable at all seasons for keeping the skin soft and healthy.

PRISON MISSION
And Discharged Female Prisoners' Aid to H. M. Convict Prisons.

Women from all English and Scotch Prisons are eligible for help.

The Mission has relations with Foreign Prisons—European, American, Canadian, Australian, Indian, African, &c.

Last Christmas 16,318 Gospel Letters were sent to Prisoners at home and abroad.

During 1889, 2,973 Women were received at the Prison Gate Breakfast Room.
" 1,006 had Help given.

During 1889, 20,182 days' work was done by Discharged Female Prisoners in the Mission Laundry.
" 948 Religious Services were attended by them.

Mrs. Meredith earnestly begs the help of Christian Friends to support this work.

Her recent appeal did little more than cover expenses. Liabilities remain unpaid to a large amount, and are necessarily increasing.

Death and loss of property has reduced the number and power of the Mission Subscribers. Who will fill their place?

£1,200 is still needed to carry on this great Gospel Agency, reaching the deepest depth of crime, and touching sinners the farthest off rom Mercy's Open Door.

HELP in this EMERGENCY will not be asked in vain if we unite in faith and prayer, saying to this mountain, Be thou removed, and it shall be done.

Cheques crossed to Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOME, BOUVERIE & Co., payable to Mrs. MEREDITH, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."
Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions when all 'the mists have rolled away.'"—Baptist Messenger.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White.

Note.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

 All friends are kindly asked to send in their Subscriptions, Donations, and Collections with as little delay as possible, as the Accounts for the year are about to be closed.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of Bishop La Trobe, of the Moravian Church.

We have received a copy of the indictment brought before the Free Presbytery of Edinburgh against Professor Dods. We heartily sympathise with the desire that this painful case should be dealt with faithfully. Nothing is to be gained either by the Free Churches or by Dr. Dods himself if the investigation is not of the fullest description. At the same time we question the wisdom of making such a long indictment against him, and of preparing it in such a legal form. It appears to us to be open to the charge of saying too much, and if any of the points of the indictment cannot be proved, the strength of all the other points will be diminished. Already one of our contemporaries is asking, ironically, why "the libellers did not charge the Doctor with atheism." A few charges, simply and succinctly stated in not more than a dozen sentences, would seem to have been more to the purpose.

Investigations of this character are very painful, and need to be carried out in the spirit, not only of fidelity to the truth, but also of brotherly love. Something is due to Dr. Dods, for whose present position the Free Churches are in some measure responsible. We have never refrained from expressing our strong disapproval of many of his statements, and we think that there is every justification for the present inquiry. But we earnestly hope that those who are taking action in the matter will not prejudice their case by even an apparent want of charity towards Dr. Dods. Religious controversy is dangerous ground, and needs to be trodden in the spirit of prayer. The committee appointed to investigate this matter have our sincere sympathy and our earnest prayers that they may be wise to know, and courageous to do, what is right.

This is a humanitarian period; the enthusiasm of humanity is gaining ground, with humanity writ large, and the God who is enshrined in the word en-Thus-iasm almost overlooked. Passing over many palpable forms in which this spirit is manifested, we are led to consider even current teachings with regard to Holiness, for which, and for many of the results of which, we devoutly and fervently thank the God of holiness. One of the earliest terms in this connection used in this generation was "the higher Christian life," now generally abbreviated into "higher life." One of the latest, and which has now become a very general formula, is "the deepening of spiritual life." Both of these in their intention are deeply important. But our question is, May they not direct attention to the creature, without an adequate and proportionate reference to the Creator; to man, without sufficient reference to God? Are they not too subjective, not sufficiently objective? The Bible describes the higher life as walking with God; as knowing the Lord. It was from GOD man fell, and the Lord Jesus suffered, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to GOD. We commend this consideration to those who have been led to make a specialty of doctrine according to godliness; being assured that the thoughts here suggested are being, by the Spirit of God, pressed upon his pastors and teachers—of which the address of Rev. W. Crosbie, reported in our last issue, is one of many indications.

A correspondent sends us The Investment Register, in which brewery investments are warmly recommended as having "advantages over all other businesses in their unique possession of a 'tied trade,' or monopoly, the importance of which is daily more and more recognised by the investing public." This "unique advantage of a tied trade" is dwelt upon again and again with deepest satisfaction, and "the whole cause of the Allsopp trouble is found to be their reliance upon a free trade." For "the value of a brewery depends, in our opinion, upon the number of 'tied houses' owned by the brewer...The company which secures a large tied trade, and has funds to continue purchasing houses, is the company whose prosperity is assured." The very curse of the brewery trade—the tied houses—is here held up as its great and unique advantage. "Surely (says our correspondent) no true Christian could take shares in a business whose prosperity depends on the moral and physical ruin of his fellow-creatures."

In the same paper we find the following facetious paragraph:—

> Apropos of brewery shares, it may not be amiss to relate a story, chuckled over in business circles, of a very estimable man who was able to get certain brewery shares at par. In consequence of the representations of his friends, he has now been convinced that it is not right to engage in the liquor traffic, and directly he was so convinced he sold out. But although he bought at 100, he sold at 270.

We do not see that this good man was to blame for having sold at the advanced price. The Investment Register does not inform us whether he gave away to the victims of the brewers the profit he had made. At any rate, we hope this incident may prevent all other very estimable men from investing in breweries.

The other day a paragraph appeared stating that Father Ignatius was dead—only to be contradicted a few days later. Did it mean that Father Ignatius had ceased to be, and that Abbot Ignatius had taken his place? A correspondent of the Cardiff Western Mail writes a lengthy and graphic sketch of the formal dedication of the new Llanthony Abbey; and of the consecration of three young monks, which he thus describes:—

> The three monks, in reply to the abbot—who was most gorgeously apparelled in cloth of gold and hood, which caught and held the lights blazed forth from all parts of the building—who asked whether it was their wish to depart, said, "We wish to dwell in the house of the Lord for ever!"
> The abbot (for that is the title the monk of Llanthony has recently assumed) asked would they make a solemn vow of celibacy, obedience, and poverty. That was answered in the affirmative. After other ceremonies of the most gorgeous description, the three brethren who sought to be made monks laid themselves down on their backs on the floor of the church. A funeral pall was placed over them, to signify that they were henceforth dead to the things of this world. A long wax candle was placed at each of the four corners of the carpet on which they lay. This was followed by the burial service, performed by the abbot, and the great bell tolled as if for the dead, and the De profundis was solemnly chanted. Moving around the prostrate figures, the abbot, now robed in black vestments, scattered ashes upon them, and said, "Ashes to ashes and dust to dust." He then sprinkled holy water upon the prostrate forms. A black curtain was now drawn across the church, hiding everything from the congregation. Subsequently that was withdrawn, and it was then seen that the three monks had commenced their spiritual existence. The head of each bore the tonsure, and was encircled with a large turban-like wreath of yew, lilies of the valley, white roses, and hyacinths. The abbot received the three monks, each of whom held beneath his chin the houseling white cloth. The abbot now administered the Holy Communion in both kinds to each. But the abbot spoke of the bread as the real flesh, and the wine as the real blood, of the Saviour. Later on in the service the abbot, standing in wedding garments on the steps of the altar, proclaimed the three new monks as being "the spouses of our Lord Jesus Christ," and on the third finger of the left hand of each he placed a plain wedding ring. After the ceremony of consecration was over, the three young monks took their seats, covered with crimson cloth, and thirteen or fourteen nuns, completely concealed in white wraps, descended from somewhere, and bowed low to receive the blessing of the monks.
> The church and monastic buildings were then formally dedicated by the Abbot Ignatius to "Our Lady of Llanthony" and "St. David, the Apostle of Wales."

The next time we hear of Abbot Ignatius will very likely be as holding evangelistic meetings with the enthusiastic assistance of evangelical Christians, in some place of popular resort.

In a pastoral from the Roman Catholic Bishop of Liverpool which was read in the Roman Catholic chapels of that diocese on Sunday week, much stress was laid upon the remarkable increase of priests and congregations in that district of Lancashire. The Bishop points out that fifty years ago there were in the six Northern counties only 231 priests, whereas now there are 1026; and that in the diocese of Liverpool there were 115, whereas the number now is 396, "the increase having been gradual and steady." These figures, however, may be qualified somewhat by the fact that during the last three years forty or fifty of the Jesuit priests exiled from Germany have found their way to Liverpool; but, even after having allowed for that, and for the immigration of Irish Romanists to the banks of the Mersey and the manufacturing towns of South Lancashire, the increase points to considerable energy on the one hand and to some lack of it on the other.

The vicar of St. John's Church, Cardiff, has preached a sermon in defence of the theatre. "Some of the statements," says The Western Mail, "were rather remarkable to come from the pulpit," e.g.:—

> 'Theatre-going was very largely on the increase in every Christian country, and he asked whether the Church was wise in ignoring that fact. Theatre-going was not only increasing among Church people, but there were godly Nonconformists in that town, some of whom occupied a high position in the religious societies to which they belonged, and they thought it no evil to go whenever they chose to the theatre here or elsewhere. He was simply dealing with facts, because he wanted them to look the matter face to face, so that they might get a true and unprejudiced view of the question.

If these are facts, we certainly think that the Church of God in Cardiff is not wise in ignoring them. It is very desirable that those who claim to represent Scriptural Christianity there, should get a true and unprejudiced view of the question, and act upon it.

The following words of Archdeacon Kaye, in the Lower House of Convocation, are pertinent to Archdeacon Farrar's motion in favour of the adoption of the mediæval device of brotherhoods:—

Are the difficulties to be dealt with at the present day greater than those which had to be dealt with when our Divine Lord sent forth his Apostles and Evangelists? Whatever might be the faults of Jerusalem, surely its moral state was not worse than that of Rome or other cities. I do not find that the Apostles ever recommended Christians to form themselves into brotherhoods. They seem to have relied confidently upon the principles of the Gospel which they preached. They considered that the Word of God and the Spirit of God in the heart were quite sufficient to cope, and that effectually, with all the difficulties of this sinful world.

The European question of Socialism occupies two able papers in Good Words and Macmillan's Magazine for the month. The discussion is narrowing itself to the issue whether the basis of society is communistic or individualistic. The paper in Macmillan presents strong facts in defence of the latter view. During the last fifty years the average money-wages have increased from 50 to 100 per cent. The British workman can purchase for 28s. necessaries which would have cost him 34s. in 1839. Individual action has contributed mainly to this result. And it is this that Holy Scripture enforces. Beneficent State organisation will follow a Christianised society, including the British workmen themselves, and man never makes a greater mistake than when he refuses to believe this truth.

We recently commented upon the praiseworthy efforts of the German Emperor to remove the causes of discontent among the working classes of the Fatherland. A remarkable speech which he delivered on March 5 at the banquet of the Brandenburger Diet contains eloquent passages permeated by true nobility of thought, and disclosing lofty conceptions of duty. After stating that he followed the view of his grandfather, who regarded his position as a duty set him by God, he added:—

I see in the people and the land which have descended to me a talent entrusted to me by God, which, as the Bible says, it is my duty to increase, and for which I shall one day have to give an account. I mean, with all my strength, to trade so with my talent that I hope I shall add many another to it. Those who will help me, be they who they will, I heartily welcome. Those who oppose me, I will dash in pieces.

The sentiment of the concluding sentence is to be deprecated, but it is heartily to be wished that all royal utterances were pervaded by the same spirit as the rest of the quotation. Would that the young Emperor would use his influence in favour of the reduction of the present huge and burdensome European armaments, and the settlement of international disputes by arbitration.

It is interesting to note that several of the leading questions which it is proposed to submit for the consideration of the Berlin Labour Conference have long ago been legislated upon in England. For instance, that of the regulation of labour in mines. The employment of women underground was prohibited years ago, and it was only upon the petitions to Parliament of the workers themselves that the employment of females in work at the pit mouth was not compulsorily abolished in 1888. In regard, too, to the labour of children the Factory Acts have fully protected the little ones, and Sunday labour, except as regards railways and tramways, has been much reduced. There is, however, all the more reason that Great Britain should be adequately represented at the Conference; for, if we still have much to learn in the direction of softening the strain between capital and labour, we have a noble testimony to give as to the practical wisdom of legislation based upon Christ's golden rule.

Evolution is the subject of articles in two leading reviews for March, also of numerous letters in The Record. It is evident that a strong reaction has set in against materialistic conclusions on the question: That life, without a living parent, should have proceeded from a single cell, concerning the nature and existence of which we have no evidence whatever; and that thence, by an uncontrolled and blind development, there should have come all the marvellous products and rich varieties of usefulness and beauty; that this should be regarded as a more rational and intelligible account of the universe of matter and mind than that of man believing in a Creator, must come to be looked upon as one of the most amazing infatuations of the age, and one of the saddest proofs that men in the nineteenth century, as in the first, "did not like to retain God in their knowledge" (Rom. i. 28).

Some of the devotees of materialistic science appear to believe that the problem of existence is fully explained when all things have been reduced to a molecule, a germ, or a protoplasm. But when the evolutionist has arrived at this point he is utterly at a loss; with all his boasted enlightenment he is still groping about in vain to find the secret of life itself. On this point the Bishop of Carlisle, in the current number of The Nineteenth Century, states the case fairly and plainly when he says:—

It may be possible for naturalists to discover some of the steps by which the finished work comes to be what it is: but the actual origin of natural things—the wonders of life, the varied beauties of the universe, above all, the mind of man, which is capable of understanding, appreciating and discussing the problems to which natural things give rise—is to be sought in no region lower than that which may, with all reverence, be described as the mind or as the imagination of God.

Monte Carlo is crowded; all the hotels are full, and the gambling rooms of the Casino have never been so largely patronised as this season. A new wing has been added, giving space for two more roulette tables.

Such is the saddening tale told by The Times' correspondent. That one of the most beautiful and healthy places in the world should still be disgraced and marred by this gambling hell, with its vicious frequenters and its ghastly train of suicides and ruin, is a grave reflection upon the great Powers of Europe. The interests of international morality demand its suppression. England is not alone in condemning this plague-spot; the respectable Press of France, Germany, and Italy have often urged that the scandal should be put an end to, and an Italian deputy some time ago declared in Parliament that he "looked upon the Casino at Monte Carlo as an anti-human institution and moral and social pest-house, which ought to be stamped out. Moreover, is it not an instructive satire upon this demoralising establishment that in Monaco it is a penal offence for a native to visit the saloons?

At a recent meeting in connection with the C.M.S. in Salisbury-square a letter was read from Rev. H. J. Hoare, of Peshawur, Punjab. He speaks of it as a city of seventy or eighty thousand inhabitants. The Afghans in it call themselves Bani-Israel—sons of Israel. They have a decidedly Hebraic cast of feature. They are great enemies of idolatry, and bigoted Mohammedans. The Gospel can be freely preached; a handsome church is built; and English-speaking natives attend a Literary Institute. Before this wide door which is opened the paucity of missionaries is the pressing distress. "Fields white unto harvest" is the summons proceeding from every quarter.

AJUALA VILLAGE MISSION.

Miss Elizabeth Clay has purchased additional land adjoining her compound, with a view to the erection of a woman's hospital at Ajuala, Punjab. The dispensary in the compound, which has been managed since March last by a young Bengali lady trained at Amritsar, was visited by 623 new and 1258 old patients before the close of the year. In December a lady who had been medically trained at Mildmay and connected with the C.E.Z.M. Society took up residence, and has already begun dispensary work in a town about four miles away. Miss Clay feels confident that the new Hospital, the foundations of which are being laid, will prove a great blessing in the district.

In addition to the medical work, educational and evangelistic efforts are continually going on in connection with the Ajuala Village Mission. There are two large schools for boys, two for girls, and one mixed school in different villages, in all of which Bible teaching is given. There is also a small free boarding-school, in which a few of the more promising daughters of recent low caste converts are being trained for teachers to their own people. Direct Gospel teaching is given more or less regularly to Hindus and Mohammedans in about 486 houses in the 85 villages, within reach of a day's visit from Ajuala or its out-station Sawuan, and during the last year about 189 more distant villages were also visited in itineration. Many villages in the district could not, however, even have one visit during the year, there being before November only two ladies ready for anything like full work. The staff, exclusive of Miss Clay, now consists of two ladies who joined her by private arrangement about fifteen months ago, the Bengali lady, another lady assistant engaged in India in November, and the above-named medical lady from the C.E.Z.M.S. There are besides three Christian men and five Bible-women, these last sustained by the C.E.Z.M.

For a large proportion of the expenses of this Mission, Miss Clay is entirely responsible, trusting to friends to help her. Many low-caste families have recently been baptized, numbering altogether seventy-eight individuals. A devoted C.M.S. native clergyman was appointed in 1886 first pastor of the church at Ajuala, and his evangelistic work amongst the men of the district is very valuable. Communications in England may be sent to Miss Clay's sister, Mrs. Thorold, Hougham Rectory, Grantham.

FOREIGN MISSIONS:

A STATEMENT AND APPEAL.

For several days I had been seeking evidence outside the Scriptures that God greatly used unlearned and uncultured men for the conversion of the heathen. At last, after telling our heavenly Father that I was an ignorant man, and had come to Him for wisdom, I went to a place that had never occurred to me till then, and opened an ancient volume, from which I venture to make the following extraordinary and deeply interesting extracts, in which I have made scarcely any verbal alterations:—

The origin of the Missions to the Heathen of the United Brethren was attended with circumstances singularly interesting. Count Zinzendorf, a young nobleman, was the instrument employed by God for preserving the small remnant of the ancient Church of the Brethren in the beginning of the eighteenth century. In consequence of dreadful persecutions stirred up against them by the Papists, the Brethren's congregations in Moravia (upwards of 200) were totally destroyed, their ministers together with many noblemen and private individuals of their church put to death or exiled, and their Bibles or other religious books burnt. Those few who survived the persecution and faithfully adhered to their principles were forced to conceal themselves in cellars and other obscure places, in the caves of rocks, and the almost impervious thickets of the forests, where they held their religious meetings in private, and chiefly in the night, for fear of their enemies. On being informed that there was greater liberty of conscience in Saxony and Silesia, many sought an asylum in those countries. Some of these emigrants arrived in 1722 at Bertholsdorf, in Upper Lusatia, an estate belonging to Count Zinzendorf, who, when he had learned the cause of their emigration, received them in the kindest manner, and encouraged and assisted them in forming a colony on a neighbouring hill, called Hutberg. This colony afterwards received the name of Herrnhut, and became the first congregation of the renewed Brethren. About nine years afterwards, A.D. 1731, Count Zinzendorf having to go to Copenhagen to be present at the Coronation of Christian VI., King of Denmark, some of his domestics became acquainted there with a negro named Anthony. This man told them much of the in the island of St. Thomas, and of the ardent desire of many, especially of his sister, to be instructed in the way of salvation. Anthony visited Herrnhut, and told the little church there that the labours of the negroes were so incessant that they could find no leisure for instruction unless their teacher himself became a slave. Two young men in particular, Dober and Leupold, accepted the conditions, and whilst Leupold's request to go to these slaves was being read to the congregation. two other brethren, Stach and Boenish, resolved to offer themselves to go to Greenland.

A sacred impulse to missionary labours was thus imparted to the congregation at Herrnhut by the great Head of his universal Church....The impulse thus granted operated most powerfully, for though the colony at Herrnhut then consisted of only 600 persons, and these mostly poor exiles, yet having given themselves unto the Lord, they were disposed to offer to Him also all they possessed, fully persuaded that it is nothing with the Lord whether to help with many or with them that have no power.

Supported by this conviction, they cheerfully encountered every difficulty, and endured the severest hardships in distant countries, and among barbarous tribes. Within the short period of ten years missionaries went to the heathen in America, to Lapland, to Tartary, Africa, &c.

Matthew Stach and his cousin, Christian Stach, proceeded to Copenhagen early in 1733, just sixty years before the noble shoemaker Carey started for India. They were conducted by Christian David, who was a carpenter and a native of Moravia and the person by whose interposition Count Zinzendorf was induced to receive the Moravian emigrants on his estate. God afterwards employed Christian David as a blessed instrument of leading many of his persecuted countrymen to Christ. "There was no need of much time," says one of them, "or expense for our equipment. The congregation consisted chiefly of poor exiles who had not much to give, and we ourselves had nothing but the clothes on our backs. We had been used to make shift with little, and did not trouble our heads how we should get to Greenland, or how we should live there. The day before our departure a friend in Venice sent a donation, and part of this we received for our journey to Copenhagen. Now we considered ourselves richly provided for, and therefore would take nothing from anyone on the road, believing that He, who had procured us something for our journey at the very critical moment of starting, would also supply us every requisite for accomplishing our purpose whenever it should be needful." At Copenhagen they met with many difficulties, but committed their cause to God, and were not disappointed. Affairs soon afterwards took a different turn; the king consented that one more ship should go to his colony of Godhab in Greenland where the Danish missionary, Hans Egede, resided.

The way being thus opened, the missionaries waited on Count Pless. At first their proposal did not meet with much approbation. To a person of his rank and education, who was not ignorant of the little success of the learned, indefatigable, and zealous Mr. Egede, it must have appeared a wild scheme indeed, for young, illiterate persons to engage in so difficult and seemingly hopeless an undertaking. He, therefore, raised many objections, and sent them to some divines to be examined; but, being once convinced of the soundness of their faith, and the uprightness of their intentions, he conceived a great regard for them, readily consented to present their petition to the king, and seconded it to the utmost of his power. Among other arguments he made use of the following, which deserves to be recorded: "God has in all ages," said he, and in the eyes of the world the most unlikely and even despicable instruments, for accomplishing the grand designs of his kingdom, to show that the honour belongs to Him, and to teach mankind not to rely on their own penetration or power, but on his benediction."

His Majesty even condescended to recommend them to Mr. Egede, in a letter written with his own hand. After reaching Greenland and having an interview with Mr. Egede, it became needful to think of some method of maintaining themselves, and this was no easy task in such a country and among savages, whose mode of living was filthy and disgusting in the extreme, and with whose language they were unacquainted. They obtained little by fishing and hunting. The acquisition of the Greenland language was another difficulty....In a few instances, however, their kindness, in the midst of a devastating small-pox, touched the savages. Then they were themselves attacked by a violent eruptive disorder, which so increased in the winter that they nearly lost the use of their limbs. They wrote: "We perceive no traces of any good begun among the heathen; no, not so much as a sigh, and the poor creatures find DEATH where they should find LIFE....We are conscious of our total insufficiency in ourselves; every good of mere natural growth, even our alacrity in learning the language, seems to droop, and nothing remains but what grace hath wrought. The Lord knows best why He called to this station the most feeble and inexperienced of his servants. However, we will remain on our post, and vie with each other in the exercise of faith, though the prospect presents us with nothing but apparent impossibilities; yes, here we will stay till Jesus, our Lord, help us, and our only concern shall be to please Him.... Thus passed the next five years.

But in 1734 two new assistants, Frederick Boenish and John Beck, arrived, and brought them the joyful intelligence that it was the intention of the Brethren at Herrnhut to support the mission to the utmost of their power. Afterwards and "they were obliged to pacify the cravings of nature with shellfish and seaweed"...

God did not forsake his faithful servants in their trying circumstances...He who sent a raven to feed his prophet disposed a strange Greenlander to come forty leagues from the south, and from time to time to sell them all he could spare. By this time, however, they had not only learned to be satisfied with very mean and scanty fare, but had also inured themselves to the eating of seals' flesh, mixing up a little oatmeal with train oil.

Having had repeated occasion to speak of Mr. Egede and of his wife's kind attention to our brethren, it may be mentioned that, having requested his dismission, it was granted him in the most gracious terms, and he returned to Copenhagen after having laboured in this country with truly Apostolical zeal for fifteen years without seeing any abiding fruit to his labours.

Knowing that they got the assistance of the Danish missionary in trying to learn Greenland language, the savages insulted them thus: "Fine fellows indeed to be our teachers. We know very well that you yourselves are ignorant, and must learn your lesson of others." It was true that they had to acquire Danish to get Mr. Egede's assistance to learn Greenlandish. They insulted and maltreated them, and pelted them with stones, yet they continued their visits to the heathen, though without any visible success....

In 1740, however, a great change took place in the mode adopted by our brethren...Hitherto, our missionaries had laboured principally in speaking to the heathen of the existence, the attributes and perfection of God, and enforcing obedience to the divine law, hoping by these means gradually to prepare their minds...and it must be allowed that abstractedly considered, this method appears the most rational, but when reduced to practice, it was found wholly ineffectual. For five years our missionaries had laboured in this way, and could scarcely obtain a patient hearing from the savages. Now, therefore, they determined, in the literal sense of the word, to preach Christ and Him crucified...No sooner did they declare unto the Greenlanders "the word of reconciliation" in its native simplicity, than they beheld its converting and saving power. This reached the hearts of their audience, and produced the most astonishing effects. An impression was made which opened a way to their consciences, and illuminated their understandings. They no longer remained the brutish creatures they had once been; they felt they were sinners, and trembled at their danger; they rejoiced in the offer of a Saviour...this supplied their young converts with a powerful motive to the abhorrence of sin and the performance of every moral duty to God and their neighbour...The missionaries themselves derived benefit from this new method of preaching...and were often astonished at each other's powers of utterance. In short, the happiest results have attended this practice, not only on this occasion in Greenland, but in every other country where our missionaries have since laboured for the conversion of the heathen.

It would take up too much of your space to tell of the wonderful triumphs that followed, and so I append one little extract from Chambers' Encyclopædia. It is under the heading "Moravians":—

The Brethren early entered on missionary work, and all the prosperity of their Church has been evidently connected with their earnest prosecution of it. Their first mission was planted in 1732, in the Island of St. Thomas, in the West Indies, the missionaries who went thither expressing their resolution to become slaves if necessary, in order to carry out their purpose. A mission to Greenland, which has been eminently successful, and may be said to have made Greenland a Christian country, was commenced in 1733.

Are not these extracts on all fours with Acts iv. 13: "Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceiving that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus"? Again, is it not what we might expect on reading in Paul's first letter to the Corinthians (i. 26-29): "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence." Alford, in commenting on this passage, says: "How that not many [of you] are wise according to the flesh (he means in that wisdom which may be acquired by human diligence without the teaching of the Holy Spirit), not many mighty, not many noble." He adds, Oldhausen observes:—

> The ancient Christians were for the most part slaves and men of low position; the whole history of the expansion of the Church is in reality a progressive victory of the ignorant over the learned, the lowly over the lofty, until the emperor himself laid down his crown before the cross of Christ.

But what has all this to do practically with the present budding desire that is now rising in the minds of so many Christians scattered over the earth for the evangelisation of the world? Very much; in fact, its consideration is most urgent. Results most momentous depend upon it. For, really, if we overlook or do not take heed to our Lord's mind, not only will much of our arrangements be misdirected, but our very prayers will be hindered. For example, may we not, in England and America, in asking for labourers for the mission field be confining our desires and our prayers very much to the young men of our colleges? Well, surely it is right to pray for these young men? Yes, but in number they may form a very small part of the men, both young and old, that we may be sure the Lord of the harvest is ready to ingraft and endue with power, and send forth from all sorts of what are called secular pursuits — ploughmen, mechanics, seamen, soldiers, railway men, tradesmen, commercial travellers, mercantile men, and professional men and women; many on their own means, many to support themselves, and many to be supported by the Church or by others, besides innumerable Christian natives.

In the civil war for the emancipation of the slaves, America did not confine itself to those who had been taught the art of war.

Then why should we, in the very teeth of Scripture, and of the multitude of living instances outside of Scripture, confine our prayers and our selections so much to the young men of our colleges? My very heart loved and loves still to think of the splendid cultured fellows that it has been my happy privilege to have known, who have gone out from our English and Scottish universities; but these very cultured fellows, some from earth and some from heaven, would be the very men to shout the loudest Amen and Amen to an enlargement of our prayers to heaven, and to our shouts on earth, "Come over and help us, our nets are breaking."

Lord of the harvest, our reliance is on Thyself, and we cry to Thee for Thyself to lay hold of, and to thrust out labourers of thy own selection, old or young, men or women, cultured or uncultured; for is not now the harvest greater than ever? Are not the labourers few indeed? And hast Thou not still some such as these poor and persecuted Moravians of whom the world is not worthy? Reginald Radcliffe.

LECTURES ON THE HOLY LAND, EGYPT, AND SYRIA are being given by Mr. G. H. Lord, of Buckhurst Hill, who has lately returned from a lengthened sojourn in these countries. He has devised a most impressive series of object-lessons with the aid of representations of Oriental costumes, &c. Mr. Lord is an enthusiastic exponent of the Biblical aspect of his subject, as well as an able and acceptable preacher of the Gospel. He has delivered these lectures in various parts of London, is finding his way into provincial towns, and has already visited Hastings, Eastbourne, &c. Next Monday and Tuesday he lectures in Norwich on behalf of the local Y.M.C.A., by invitation of Mr. Robert Adcock, of the Victoria Hall Mission in that city.

Preaching the Kingdom of God.

By JAMES VAN SOMMER.

III.

Let us now consider the subject of Practical Repentance as affected by the truth of the Kingdom of God.

Repent ye, "for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 2). The Lord Jesus and John the Baptist did not simply call to repentance. They enjoined as a powerful reason this word of knowledge, the Kingdom of God is at hand (Mark. i. 15).

Our minds incline to receive truth in portions; yet let us remember that portions are parts of a whole, and they should be so regarded. No part is isolated in a living structure. All is attached. So with the words of this life. One portion touches, leads on to, and into another; and involves and is affected by another. Paul charged Timothy in the sight of God and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the quick and the dead, and by "his appearing and his Kingdom" (2 Tim. iv.). The latter twofold events are linked together. Let us hold them in like manner.

Observe also in John iii. that the Lord Jesus did not declare the necessity of the New Birth as an isolated portion of truth; but He taught it as a necessary preliminary to seeing and entering the Kingdom of God. Not only were sick persons to be healed, but they were to be informed that this healing was significant of the blessings of the Kingdom. Say unto them, "the Kingdom of God" is come nigh unto you (Luke x. 9). The Kingdom so filled the mind of the Lord Jesus, that events were instantly spoken of in connection with it. The reason given to the disciples why they were to suffer the little children to come unto Him, and were not to forbid them, is, "for of such is the Kingdom of God" (Matt. xix. 13, 14, xii. 28). And when the Lord Jesus in the Spirit of God cast out demons, that occurrence was not circumscribed in its importance within itself; but then the Kingdom of God came, as regards its feature of deliverance from Satanic usurpation. Satan's partial overthrow was a sign and commencement of the final overthrow; and man's deliverance at that time was a sign of the believer's full emancipation.

If, then, to our understanding of repentance for our sins, we are adding the thought of repentance with reference to an approaching Kingdom, we become influenced by the "powers of the age to come"; and the important subject of repentance is found to be very wide, and to call loudly for considerable diligence in preparing for the Kingdom. We have not only to be sorry for sin, but to change, and to be changed by God, in everything, whether in spirit, knowledge, motive, thought, or conduct, which is unsuitable to that Kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit, which is about to be established in power and glory; and whose essential principle is, that except your righteousness shall exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into "the Kingdom of Heaven."

A repentant Christian is not indeed to pass his days in bitterness of spirit, remorse, and dread, and with a sense of distance from God. Far otherwise. Genuine repentance, under the shelter of forgiving love, does not dispirit. Surely happy love and a kindling eye, and neither moroseness nor dejection, were seen in Zaccheus as he stood forth and declared his determination that the Lord should not be reproached through having him for a disciple, whatever he had been before. Such heartiness is refreshing, and it affords a stimulating example. Practical repentance, truly viewed, becomes something far beyond an act of sorrow; while, seeing that we should do works meet for repentance, it is not a matter of an hour or a day, but it must necessarily be life-long. It is to be the fruitful life of a saved sinner, now also a child of God, ever appropriate to, and evidencing, the change wrought in him by the grace of God. [Possibly we do not quite catch the author's meaning in what follows here, touching John the Baptist's exhortation in regard to repentance as a preparation for the Kingdom; we therefore omit it.—Ed.]

When once the truth of the Kingdom has become established in the mind, all Scriptural truths will, by degrees, range themselves in regard to that, and thus fall into their appropriate places. Its bearing on the Church, on the nation of Israel, on the nations generally, will all duly appear.

And what a grand range of blessedness is presented! The glory of God and of Christ; the brightness, grandeur, and dignity of the Kingdom in its vast and different degrees; its resurrection joys and spiritual powers; its happiness, security, righteousness, purity, holiness, peace, worship, service; the unhindered fellowship with the Lord Himself, and the blessed companionship of the entire family of faith; the re-union with those who have gone before; the full endowments of the Holy Spirit adorning the universal Church; the Father's name written on our foreheads (his character no longer obscured, but presented in our very look); the creation itself also delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God; the whole, the fruit of the loving self-sacrifice of Him who once suffered for sins, the Righteous for the unrighteous, that He might bring us to God.

Christ, the second Adam, the Lord from Heaven, will come in the glory of the Father with his angels; and his reward is with him to render to each man according as his work is. And there shall be a voice, as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, "Hallelujah, for the Lord our God the Almighty reigneth." God's Kingdom shall come, not within only, but in outward glory, majesty and beauty. His will shall be done, as in Heaven so on earth. "All thy works shall praise Thee, and thy saints shall bless Thee." "For of Him, and through Him, and unto Him, are all things. To Him be the glory for ever. Amen."

May we walk worthily of God, who calleth us into "his own Kingdom and glory."

FIGHTING INFIDELITY.—Major Liebenrood, of Reading, writes to say that the infidel and secularist party have lately been showing signs of much activity there in lecturing and in the distribution of anti-Christian literature. To counteract this, lectures have been delivered by Mr. Thomas Barber, of Northampton, an experienced Christian controversialist. His lectures have been largely attended, and they have made much impression on the hearers. Conversations were held with some young men whose minds had been filled with doubts, and they have been greatly helped. An Anti-infidel Society is established in Reading, and the lectures will be continued as occasion demands. M. Barber is anxious to have a magic lantern so as to show the monumental discoveries confirming the Scripture narratives. His address is 36, Shakespeare-road, Northampton, and those who wish to help in the fight against infidelity would do well to secure his services.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXVI.—UNANSWERABLE QUESTIONS.

1 Pet. iv. 17.

Stormy times were already breaking on the Church as the Apostle penned these words. Such times had been repeatedly predicted by the Lord, but until now they had not been allowed to break forth in all their terror. A Divine restraint had been laid on the antagonistic influences which lay in wait for the moment in which they should be slipped from their leash. But there was every reason to believe that further respite would be very brief —"The time is come when judgment must begin at the house of God."

Bitter as they are, such times are needed—needed as the north-east wind to break off the dead and useless timber in the spring; needed as the winnower's fan to separate the chaff from the wheat. Without these searching times of judgment, the Church becomes filled with those who make a profession of godliness, but deny its power; whilst without them even the godly and genuine are apt to become too luxurious and self-indulgent, wrapt in slumber, and indifferent to the needs of the world. So from time to time it is needful for God to set Himself to the work of discrimination, of crisis, of judgment.

But the sufferings of this life, at their worst, are only part of a great mystery of pain and judgment which exists, not here only, but hereafter. The believer in Jesus has nothing to fear from that. Whatever may be his present sufferings, they cannot pass the limit of this mortal life, they have no power to send one single stab or thrill over the barrier which separates the two worlds. With the ungodly it is not so. The tempest which breaks on their heads in this life is but the beginning of their sorrows. Through death they pass to greater misery. They depart accursed into fire. They are cast into outer darkness. They are reserved unto a further day of judgment to be punished. Moreover, the sufferings of such as refuse the Gospel are of a very different description, both here and hereafter, to those of God's children. There is the sting of remorse, the reproach of conscience, the bitter sense of severance from God, and love, and hope, and blessedness. Though the believer may suffer, his heart brims with hope; but the heart of the worldling is filled with darkness, the midnight of the soul.

The Apostle forbears to go far into a description of the condition of the impenitent in the future world. He leaves it vague and unexplored, asking questions which he does not answer, starting problems which he does not solve. And in this he sets an example to modern curiosity, which is only too apt to build up a gigantic system of speculation as to the future of the lost, on which the Bible either preserves complete silence, or withdraws the vail but a hand-breadth.

His main end in adverting to the matter at all is with the view of comforting these troubled saints. If, says he, you suffer in time, remember that you will have an eternity of respite. If you suffer as children, rejoice that you will never have to suffer as enemies. If you pass through the deep dark waters of judgment, be sure that your lot is very different from what it would be if you were ungodly and profane. Great though your sufferings may be, they are not to be compared with those of such as reject the Gospel. And, standing on the edge of your own sorrows, you may peer into the seething abyss of theirs, which is indeed a bottomless pit, swathed in mist. And then he concludes this paragraph of suffering with sweet and helpful words about the committal of the soul to God.

I. The lot from which we have been saved.—There are three gradations or phases of rebellion mentioned here: the disobedient, the ungodly, the sinful. Thus does the spirit pass from the negative condition of carelessness to the positive position of rejection. And in its course it treasures up for itself wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. If you obey not the Gospel you are classed with the ungodly and the profane.

And if such shall read these words, let them consider how certain and awful must be their doom. We are not speaking now of idiots or heathen, or of those who knew not, and yet did commit things worthy of stripes. An infallible authority has told us that they shall be beaten with but few stripes. Our address is to those who have heard the dying words of Jesus, but have turned away from them unmoved, not because they cannot believe, but because they will not, preferring darkness to light, sin to goodness, self to God.

You have seen the righteous suffer, and how difficult they have found it to endure. Though sustained by the presence of God, and the promises of the Gospel; though assured of the certainty and glory of their reward; though able to read love's message in each stroke, and to see the speedy end of all discipline in heaven's azure calm; yet they have only just been able to keep heart and flesh from despair. But how will it be with you when the hour of your sorrow comes, as it will come, here or hereafter? You will have no presence of God to cheer you, no promises on which to lean, no certainty of a speedy termination, no testimony of a good conscience, no prospect of release. Before you only the certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days when He shall deal with thee?"

If the children suffer so, with all the alleviations of a Father's love, what will not the rebels suffer? If the sufferings of saints be so heavy, what of those of sinners? If the sufferings of this life are often so terrible, what will those of the next be? If the beginning be fraught with so much anguish, how about the end?

It was the earnest wish of a holy man that his death might be so triumphant that his unconverted sons might be convinced and attracted by the evident power of the Gospel to sustain and cheer in the dark passage of the valley. Instead of this, to his deep regret, his spirit lay under a cloud, he was oppressed with fear and misgiving, and the enemy was permitted to torment him to the uttermost. But these very facts were the ones which most profoundly impressed his children. "For," said the eldest, "we all know what a good man our father was, and yet see how deep his spiritual sufferings were. What then may we not expect, who have given no thought to the concerns of our souls?"

Besides, consider all that required to be done before the righteous could be saved. Expenditure, such as taxed the resources of Divine Omnipotence. An atonement, which could only be achieved by the death in a mortal body of the infinite God. The gift of the Holy Spirit Himself, to enter and possess corrupt and wayward hearts, winning them to Himself. All the marvellous interpositions of Providence, the teachings of Scripture, the strivings of conscience. And yet, notwithstanding all, how little is effected in many of God's children. Christian character seems to resemble Chat Moss, which swallowed tons on tons of earth apparently in vain, till the contractors began to despair of ever making even a thin railway embankment across its boggy expanse.

In nature we see glowing worlds, gigantic orbits, vast mountains, noble oceans in their gleaming expanse, cataracts, forests, waterfalls—all worthy of God. But when we come to the moral and spiritual side of his people's character, in spite of all that He has done, we are astonished at the meagre result. Is this all? "The righteous are scarcely saved." They are saved at tremendous cost, and they certainly do not seem to repay the outlay to which the ever-blessed God has gone.

But if, after all that has been done in them and for them, they are no further forward than they are, what will be the condition of those who remain where the righteous were once, and who have rejected the gracious operations of the Most High? They are charged with sin, with no part or lot in the redemption which the Saviour wrought. They are subject to the abominable pollution of inbred corruption, without the counteracting influence of the Divine Spirit. They are indifferent to those blessed provisions which have engaged the attention of the ever-blessed Trinity, from all eternity, and rush heedless into the other world. "Where will they appear?"

There are several of these dread unanswered questions in the Bible. "What will ye do in the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from far?" Again: "Who can stand before his indignation, and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger?" And again: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" But amongst them all there is not one more terrible and unanswerable than this: "Where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?"

We can only answer the question in the negative. They will not appear in the clouds when Jesus comes again; only his saints will come with Him. They will not appear at the marriage supper of the Lamb; only the blood-washed can enter there. They will not appear on the right hand of the Judge; only the righteous are found there. They will not appear among the blessed throngs of the golden city; for thither entereth nothing that defileth. But when we have ransacked all these places in vain, we have not answered the inquiry as to their abiding place. We must leave this for the solemn light of eternity to disclose.

Oh, for tears of blood to weep over their fate! But let us mingle notes of thanksgiving, that we shall never, never know it. We cannot perish. We are the objects, as they might be, of an unchangeable love which cannot be thwarted. Bought by the blood, taught by the Spirit, the subjects of the mighty power of God we shall yet be more than conquerors. Troubled, but not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair; cast down, but not destroyed; staggering, but not falling to our eternal destruction; on the edge of destruction, but brought safe home on the shoulders of the Good Shepherd. Well might Dr. Cæsar Malan say to Dr. Gray, turning suddenly on him, when walking with him at Geneva: "Brother, you would not go to heaven if you could help it"; and then, in answer to a look of surprise, added: "But, brother, you must go, for Jesus will not let you go elsewhere."

II. The Method Suffering Saints should adopt.—First, Be sure that you keep in the current of the will of God.—"Suffer according to the will of God." Do not go out of your way to incur trouble. Refuse to fling yourselves from the mountain brow at the suggestion of every tempter. Dare not to go far afield from under the canopy of the stately pillar-cloud. Accept all that comes in the natural course of things, but do not sow harvests of pain by presumption, or wrong-headedness, or any form of evil-doing.

(2) Secondly, Go on doing well.—"In well doing." Do the next thing. Even if maligned, traduced, or misunderstood, persevere in doing well. It does not matter how your good deeds are received by men. If you are like God, you will find them received with contempt and ingratitude. But your sun must still shine and your showers fall on the evil and the good, on the just and on the unjust. You serve the Lord Christ. Live to please Him.

(3) Thirdly, Commit the keeping of your souls to God.—Our dying Lord committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously. "Father," he cried, "into thy hands I commit my spirit." And God has abundantly vindicated Him. Let us, in life and death, place our souls, our honour, our good name and standing, our prospects and future, without reserve or question, into the hands of God. He is faithful. Creation is witness to his faithfulness. The stars return with unerring punctuality. Seed time and harvest, summer and winter, do not cease. He satisfies all instincts which He has implanted. He hearkens to every cry which He has instilled. And, therefore, with unerring love and power He will respond to every appeal made to Him by his suffering ones. "He will redeem their lives from deceit and violence, and precious shall their blood be in his sight."

Safe and strong, tender and true, are the hands of our faithful God. Drop down into them, they will catch you, and sustain your burdens and yourselves. They can hold the oceans in their hollow, but they are scarred with Calvary's nail. Weary, tired, suffering ones, lie still, none shall pluck you out of the Father's hands. Without anxiety or alarm you may look out from them on the wreck of matter, and the crash of worlds. They shall ultimately bear you, as they did your Lord, through all the heavens, and set you down at his own right hand in glory.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—A number of destitute persons were fed the other evening at Miss Child's Home, Ratcliff-highway. Their cases were looked into, and lodgings secured for those in need of it. The "Lifeboat" crew muster the previous night was full of interest. Several were there to praise God for saving them from a watery grave, when their ship was in collision—eleven of the hands are still missing.

HIRA SING PURI, from the Punjaub (now studying at Harley House, Bow), has been giving addresses in different parts of London on the liquor traffic in India. He deals mainly with the injustice of the excise or "abkari" system by which the Government sell to the highest bidders the right to traffic in strong drink, and to plant their drink-shops in any locality they please, irrespective of the wishes of the people. It is extremely important that the personal and collective interest of Christian citizens in this country should be aroused on the bearings of this system. Those friends in London who desire an address from our earnest Indian brother should communicate with him at Harley House, Bow, E.

Ministry of Women in Palestine.

It is plain to observant workers in this Holy Land and elsewhere that the "last days" of this, the Christian dispensation, when the "times of the Gentiles" are drawing to a close, bear a close resemblance to the "first days."

We see men and women going forth in the same Apostolic way, obeying the simple yet direct commands of our Lord and his Apostles in a manner that has been too little regarded during the intervening centuries.

"Healing the sick" is now again beginning to be associated directly with preaching the Gospel, and in India, China, and Africa, missionaries are going forth in numbers in the spirit of Gideon's three hundred, and of St. Luke iii. 11. In this land there are great possibilities for work, doors open that have long been closed, and I believe the prophecy contained in St. Mark x. 23 will, in its primary interpretation, be now literally fulfilled: "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come." The "army of the publishers" is going forth with good tidings to the cities and villages of Israel as it has never done since the candlestick of Christianity was dimmed in the land.

Once more before Shiloh comes is the message of peace to be published all over the country. Again doth the Lord say: "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

The work is still going on under the surface in regard to Moslems, and the Lord's direction as to publishing accounts of it is strictly, "See thou tell no man." Therefore, for obvious reasons, we can give no details of this work here, which is opening before us in many directions, far in advance of the number and strength of the workers. We are six Sisters, and the villages and cities around us are many. A weekly visit to a few is all that we can compass at present, going forth two and two according to the Divine method. And what is one visit a week among hundreds of sick bodies, and still more ailing souls, steeped in ignorance and darkness, till they will scarcely lift a finger to help themselves?

Where there is no Christ, human life is of little value. Men will let their sick and suffering relatives perish, rather than spend a few pence on their behalf, knowing well that it will be the same with them when they come to die. A fatalism far removed from Christian resignation is their prevailing feeling. Submission to the will of God, who is indeed Wisdom, Will, and Power, but of whose love they know nothing.

How can they know that "God is love," while ignorant of Him in whom dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, who is the true revelation of the Father.

To them God is not a Father: this is one of the first articles of their creed. Yet these readily and thankfully receive the "Hakeem,' or doctor; and especially if their helper comes to them in the form of a woman. She is not to be feared, but welcomed; she can do no harm to the soul, "she is only a woman."

This is our opportunity, and with much prayer for guidance, and giving heed to the command, "Be wise as serpents," we seek to lead the sufferers to the Good Physician. The "Old, old story of Jesus and his love" is sung to them in their own tongue over and over again; and tears ran down the cheeks of one old woman, while another listener said: "I learned all about this when sick in —— Hospital, and now I have no care about the next life, for I know all will be right there." In one town ninety patients received help during a two days' visit, and there we were told that prayer was made even in the mosque that the "Hakeemet" would come and live among them!

"Come over and help us" is now the constant cry of the natives, the hindrances are not so much from the common people, who still hear Him "gladly," as from the chiefs. Will those who read this remember us in two ways—first, will you pray that the "open doors" may be kept open long enough everywhere to deliver the message of salvation, and will you pray that the Lord will show you whether He has chosen you to come over and help us, before the doors close for ever?

Oh, dear sister, think what it will be if one day the Master should say to you, "I opened a door for you in one of the villages where I used to teach and heal, but you did not come in, so the souls were not gathered, the white fields were not reaped."

Who dare say that this reproach will not fall on some even of the "kings' daughters," who do not "hearken" to this voice; and can anyone picture a more terrible judgment, even for the unbelieving rejector of Christ as his Saviour, than this address to "his own" people, who did not come to his help, when He called?

THE TRUE REVENGE.

The heights by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upwards in the night.

WISE AND HARMLESS.

Wisdom without innocency is knavery; innocency without wisdom is foolery: be therefore wise as serpents, and innocent as doves. The subtilty of the serpent instructs the innocency of the dove; the innocency of the dove corrects the subtilty of the serpent. What God hath joined together, let no man separate.
—Francis Quarles.

TRUTH.

Truth is more precious than gold or rubies, and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared to her. Truth is that heavenly glass wherein we may see the lustre and glory of Divine wisdom, power, love, and mercy. In this glass you may see the face, the favour, the riches, and the whole heart of Christ, beating and working sweetly towards your souls. Let your souls cleave to truth, as Ruth did to Naomi. What John said to the Church at Philadelphia, I may say to you: Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. You had better part with honour, riches, friends, pleasures, and the world's favours, yea, your nearest and dearest relations, and your very lives, than to let go truth.—Thomas Brooks.

"NONE OTHER NAME."

In that unknown world in which our thoughts become instantly lost, still there is one object on which our thoughts and imaginations may fasten, no less than our affections; that amidst the light, dark from excess of brilliance, which surrounds the throne of God, we may yet discern the gracious form of the Son of Man. . . . Where can we find a name so holy as that we may surrender our whole soul to it, before which obedience, reverence without measure, intense humility, most unreserved adoration, may all be duly rendered? One name there is, and one alone; one alone in heaven and earth—not truth, not justice, not benevolence, not Christ's mother, not his holiest servants, not his blessed sacraments, nor his very mystical body, the Church—but Himself only, who died for us and rose again, Jesus Christ, both God and Man.—Dr. Arnold.

The Gospel in Italy.

MRS. WALL, writing to a friend respecting her deeply interesting work in Rome, declares that her heart is more than ever set upon distributing the Word of God among the people. She says: "We have been enabled to send the Gospel message many hundreds of miles, and frequently we hear with joy of poor people, living up among the mountains where for many months in the year they see nothing but snow, gathering together of an evening to read the old, old story. In one place where we spent the summer two years since, but owing to the power of the priest were not able to have a public meeting, they sent a man here with a letter signed by fifteen men, asking us to send them copies of the New Testament, that they might read it together. Quite recently we have heard of a young woman who, having been in our little hospital for a time, returned home taking with her a copy of God's Word. She did not live long afterwards, but during her illness frequently and more especially to her brother, of Jesus and his love to her. She would not allow them to send for the priest; she said he could do her no good, she trusted only in Jesus, and had no fear, because He had promised to be with her even to the end. Her New Testament she left to her brother, who has since arrived in Rome for work. He came at once to our meetings, and is now in the inquirers' class, hoping shortly to join the church.

TALKED TO HER FRIENDS,

"During the summer one of our evangelists was very much interested in a poor deaf and dumb man, who cleans boots at the corner of one of the streets. He gave the man the Gospel of St. John. Passing the same street a short time afterwards, the evangelist offered him some tracts, which the man received with great pleasure and wanted to pay for. He made signs that he wished for the entire New Testament, and shortly afterwards the complete Bible. The man's gratitude was very marked, and one felt that the Lord was working in his soul. The evangelist made a point of seeing him frequently, and the poor man made signs that he had ceased to go to confession, but that he had found peace in reading the Word of God. He also made signs to show that he had from his little room. Feeling so happy himself, he tried to teach his deaf and dumb companions of Jesus Christ. Leaving his work on the Sunday morning very early, he went outside the gate of the city, taking six of them with him. He "talked" to them of Him who came to seek and save the poor lost sheep, and they read together the Word of God. Recently this man has expressed his desire to be baptized and join the Church. Mr. Wall and the evangelists are all much pleased with his sincerity and courage. It seems that he will no longer work on the Sunday, although this is the time when these men are able to earn most money. He is a real Christian, his very countenance showing the peace that fills his heart. I have of the power of the Word, in the husband of one of the women attending my mothers' meeting. I went one afternoon last spring to see her little boy who was ill. Her husband had hurt his foot, and could not go to his work that day. Seeing him there, I directed my conversation to him, but knew nothing of his state, never having seen him before. I spoke of the Word of God, and begged him to read it, leaving a copy with them. After I had left, he said to his wife, 'I don't believe in what that lady says, nor in anything in the New Testament; but I should just like to look at the book.' His attention was riveted, and he began to take pleasure in reading. He afterwards came with his wife to the meetings, and now is never happy unless he is with us whenever the doors are open. The New Testament is now his constant companion, and we hope that ere long both husband and wife will join the Church.

"We rejoice that the Lord himself is working here in this land where Paul, his servant, laboured, suffered, and agonised in prayer for the conversion of the Romans. You will, I am sure, do what you can to provide us with the precious, incorruptible seed, that it may be sown broadcast in every town, village, and hamlet of the Peninsula."

Shameful Official Action in a British Colony.

IN the Hong Kong Government Gazette of January 25, 1890, there are two notices, published by command by the Colonial Secretary "for general information," which, in the interests of national honour and righteousness, I desire to make known beyond the limits of that British Colony. The notices are over the seal and signature of "N. G. Mitchell-Innes, Acting Registrar-General," and are headed "The Protection of Women and Girls Ordinance, No. 19 of 1889." They state that on the 18th and 24th days of January, 1890, the first floors of No. 26A, Graham-street, and No. 177, Queen's-road West, Hong Kong, were declared by the Acting Registrar-General, "pursuant to section 41 of the above Ordinance," to be each "an unregistered" place of moral leprosy.

My mind not being clear on the legitimate connection between a law for the protection of women and girls, and the regulation and registration of houses of ill-fame, I procured a copy of the Ordinance in question, and found that the major part of it was practically the old Contagious Diseases Ordinance under a new and misleading name. Licentiousness is still carried on under the sanction and authority of British Government in Hong Kong.

Section 27 of the new Ordinance declares that no such vestibule of hell (Prov. vii. 27) must be opened without a Government licence; sections 30 and 31 make it the duty of the Registrar-General of the Colony to keep a permanent record of such places, and of their female inmates, in the same manner as marriages are registered; and that his office must be furnished with a photograph of every Government harlot. In contradiction of every righteous idea of government, of English Common Law, and of the precepts of the Bible, evil-doers, provided they are duly registered and licensed, are not hindered, but helped in their infamous practices; the Government become their accomplices in the debauchery of the population. Anyone daring to attempt to carry on an infamous house without the partnership of the Government is made liable under section 44 of the Ordinance "to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months; for the second offence to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding six months; and for a third and any subsequent offence to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding twelve months; provided always that it shall be lawful for a magistrate to punish such offender both by fine and imprisonment if he shall think fit."

The law thus becomes a terror not to evil-doers, but to evil-doers without a licence. The partnership of authority with lawlessness in Hong Kong is so cordial as well as complete that section 56 of this Ordinance actually empowers the "Governor in Council" to take steps to provide for the safety and escape of inmates of dens of infamy "in case of fire." Such an outrage upon both human and Divine law as this Ordinance in a British dependency may impudently lift its head for a time, but in the long run neither the Governor in Council nor accomplices in sin can escape the just judgment of God. I hope, in addition, that they will not escape the righteous condemnation of the British Parliament and people.

Yesterday I asked one of the few higher officials in Hong Kong who are not responsible for this corrupting law, what difference there has been since the so-called repeal of the C.D. Ordinance, over the supposed destruction of which there has not unnaturally been much rejoicing among Christian people in Great Britain. He said, "Everything goes on exactly as before." The omission of one feature from the new Ordinance that was in the old one, viz., the power to compel women to go up to periodical medical examination in order to their certification as fit for the market of lust, makes no difference in practice. The women are given to understand that they are expected by the officers of the law to go up as usual, and they do so. The officers under the new Ordinance are the same as those under its predecessor.

Streams of women, including Japanese, may be seen on certain days in the week proceeding along the crowded thoroughfares towards the examination house, in vehicles drawn by men. The vestibules of hell from which they proceed are made conspicuous to every passer-by, by large numerals, four or five times the size of the figures used in numbering houses. The character of these places is still further assured and advertised by the fact that the numbers on them have no relation to their position in the street. The figures refer, presumably, to their number in the Government register. They are not a few. Without looking far, I saw one numbered as high as 140.

Such are some of the facts and scenes which obtain under the rule of our gracious Queen in Hong Kong. They are enough to make even the heathen blush. There is little to choose between heathenism and civilisation without God. But it cannot be that such is the civilisation with which Hong Kong is to be permanently cursed. The matter is a painful one, but I leave it with confidence to the action of my countrymen at home, and especially to that of the Christian Churches.

Hong Kong, Jan. 31. ALFRED S. DYER.

THE ANCIENT MERCHANTS' LECTURE.—In consequence of the closing of Finsbury Chapel, the Merchants' Lecture will be delivered in April, and in future at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. Rev. Alfred Rowland will lecture every Tuesday at one o'clock during April.

MANCHESTER FEMALE STRANGERS' LODGING HOUSE.—This is an institution of a type well worth multiplying. The success of the work done at Manchester should encourage Christians in other large towns to similar practical endeavour. From the annual report we learn that the visitors to the House, 105B, Piccadilly, Manchester, last year numbered 738. They were single night lodgers, paying from 6d. to 1s. 6d. per night. The influence of the institution is very beneficent. Runaway wives and self-willed daughters have been assisted to return to their friends; servants also have been aided in procuring situations. Women and girls have been met at the various railway stations. On this excellent phase of prevention and protection work, the committee of ladies has the assistance of railway officials, waiting-room attendants, and the police. The hon. superintendent and treasurer of the House is, Miss Wright, 9, Addison-terrace, Victoria-park, Manchester.

DUBLIN PRISON GATE MISSION.—During last year 435 women and girls were met at the prison gate by ladies who, after breakfast, spoke to them words of Gospel love and hope. Some, after a short probation, passed from the sewing-room to the Mission Home. Forty-one of the younger women were provided for during 1889, the majority of them obtaining situations. In general, the conduct of those attending the Mission is very satisfactory. The various industries have prospered, the earnings of the women and payments for their lodging reaching the amount of £1389, which is considerably more than half the total cost of the Mission for the year. These and other facts are given in the annual report. At a public meeting, held a few days ago, the Archbishop of Dublin suggested that a similar mission might be founded for men. The way is at present being opened for the establishment of a permanent Children's Aid, a lady having given herself to the work of a much-needed Home.

In Eastern Lands—Egypt.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

What a surprise awaits the traveller who has never seen an Eastern land; on stepping ashore at Alexandria everything is new. The climate is delightful in the midst of our winter; the natives carry about with them the picturesque in their turbaned heads and flowing robes, and the graceful palm tree, with its fronded head, seems to say, "Welcome!"

The only place I visited in Alexandria to inquire about mission work, was Miss Robinson's Soldiers' and Sailors' Home. I saw at a glance that it had all the characteristics of her work at Portsmouth, and is worthy of her reputation. The building is lofty externally, and roomy internally. English ladies are there to welcome the men, as at home; and the various rooms for meetings, classes, refreshment, and recreation, are admirably arranged in all their details. English soldiers and sailors ought to be grateful; and all their well-wishers should thank God for the provision made for their temporal and spiritual good, while on this foreign shore.

Cairo, as has been the fashion of late years, was full of English and American visitors, the latter outnumbering the former. The bulk of them seem to spend their time in mere sight-seeing and personal enjoyment. Last Sunday the English church was crowded, and the Bishop of Melanesia (Dr. Selwyn), preached a good sermon from Rom. xii. 21. The attendance at the American Mission Church in the evening, though good, was not equal to the English Church in the morning.

Everybody has heard of Miss Whately's schools in Cairo. I sought them out in the afternoon, and was taken first to a large Jesuit college, and then to another school; and finally my guide managed to find out the place I wanted. Over the entrance, in English and Arabic, are the words, "British Mission Schools." The buildings are large, and pleasantly surrounded by gardens. I had a very interesting conversation with Mrs. Shakoor, who, since Miss Whately's lamented death last year, has carried on the work. She is a Syrian, or, as she described herself, "a daughter of the country," and therefore has qualifications for working among the natives which no foreigner can have. The work is on a distinctly religious basis, and every child is taught a great deal of Scripture. Mrs. Shakoor lays great stress upon this, as many of the girls are taken from school so early, being married when they are mere children. I was anxious to see but nothing was going on save an Arab service. So I remained for that. It was conducted by Rev. Mr. O'Connor, who, I understood, was connected with the Church Missionary Society. A curtain divided the room, the women and girls being invisible. From our point of view there seemed a want of reverence in the covered heads of the men and boys, for the fez remained on all the time. In fact they seem to regard this dark-red head-dress as part of themselves, not removing it even when they sleep. The prayers, hymns, lessons, and sermon, were all in Arabic, and did not convey to me a single intelligible word. Afterwards, by request of Mr. O'Connor, I gave an address, and was told it was admirably translated into Arabic by one of the Arab teachers. This work includes a Medical Mission, with a native doctor, and also evangelistic work in the country. Bishop Blyth, of Jerusalem, when visiting Cairo a few days ago, confirmed a Jew and Jewess and two Mohammedans, converts in connection with this Mission.

But undoubtedly the mission work in Egypt is done by the American Presbyterian missionaries. They have extensive premises in Cairo, including a large church, schools, and residences for missionaries and teachers. They have no less than 100 stations throughout the country, 26 churches, 27 foreign and 238 native workers, over 5100 hearers, and 2600 communicants. The pupils in their day-schools exceed 5700, and in their 97 Sunday-schools 4300. These were the figures in 1888, and of course there has been an increase since. They have been thirty-four years in the field, and have made very steady progress amid many difficulties. The Jews object to their children reading from the New Testament, and the Mohammedans from the Bible; but no objections are allowed. There is an hour's Bible lesson every day, and the parents are told that if the children do not attend this they must be taken away altogether.

My visit to the Cairo schools was singularly interesting, though I was unfortunate in not seeing the missionaries, who were holding their annual meeting on the premises, thirteen being present. But Miss Thompson, who has been at work here for twenty-five years, proved a valuable guide and expounder. I saw classes for grammar, arithemic, geography, composition, geometry, &c., with a strange mixture of scholars. Sitting side by side were Mohammedans, Copts, Syrians, Jews, Soudanese, and others; the girls displaying picturesque costumes, which would greatly amuse our English school girls. There were as black as jet, who, Miss Thompson informed me, were part of a batch of twelve rescued slave girls, all of whom were received by this Mission, and are being trained and taught. As I addressed about 120 of the girls, and was interpreted by a native pastor, I thought they displayed as great a share of quickness and intelligence as English children do. It is a pity that English and American tourists do not seek out these Christian institutions, and encourage the workers, instead of spending their time in mere sight-seeing.

I had not returned from the Pyramids more than an hour before it was reported that I had preached a sermon on the top of the Great Pyramid of Ghizeh. I did say a few words to a group of Arabs on that elevation of 450 feet, with the trackless Lybian Desert on the one side and the green plain of the Nile on the other, thus adding another to the many curious open-air pulpits I have occupied. But the most interesting part of this visit to the Pyramids was a conversation during the descent with one of my Arab guides, who spoke English well. I wanted him to tell me how he hoped to be saved, for I saw he was

A DEVOUT MOHAMMEDAN.

It really amounted to nothing more than salvation by works, if at all, and his fatalism made him indifferent whether he was saved or not.

On the last evening of my stay in Cairo, I discovered Wesley House, set apart as a Soldiers' Institute. About a dozen English soldiers were holding a prayer-meeting. Rev. Mr. Jackson, a Wesleyan minister, has bought this house, where he resides, and seeks the welfare of soldiers.

Port Said, where I finished these notes, is described as a very wicked city. Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of Naples, whom I met in Cairo, has been here trying to get the immoral literature suppressed; but has not met with much success.

Open-air preaching is not permitted in Egypt. I feel sure its teeming population would listen to the Gospel thus preached; but a great stir was made when two members of the Salvation Army attempted it, and I was told by the American Mission that they are not permitted to do it even in their country stations.

Port Said, Egypt.

MRS. BOOTH, we regret to learn, has experienced another week of extreme suffering. Not only has there been an increase in pain, but during the latter part of last week a continuous period of sickness. On Monday last she was much worse than she had been for some days.

SAILORS' REST, DEVONPORT.

Through God's goodness, the Sailors' Rest at Devonport in its enlarged form is an accomplished fact. Your readers who have contributed to the new buildings will, I am sure, rejoice with me, and join in praise to Him who has enabled us to bring this great work to a successful issue. Some years ago, I desired to enlarge the place, which was all too small for our needs, and also to do away with three disreputable public-houses that stood between our house and the Royal Dockyard. Very earnest prayers went up to God from Christian blue-jackets asking in their own simple language that God would "bless the effort to pull down the devil's dens." God did bless the effort; money flowed in, two donors giving one thousand pounds each. First one public-house was secured, then another, and then the corner one; and great was the joy when the last barrel of beer was rolled out, and the keys lay upon my table.

Since then a large building has arisen, constituting, it is believed, the finest specimen of a "Blue Jackets' Coffee-house" in the world. The work from the beginning has been hedged with prayer; many a time we have scarcely had "a shot in the locker," and yet, when the builder's calls have come, they have been promptly paid; and, although much yet will have to be paid, still our eyes are looking to God, for the Lord will provide.

Our "house-warming" commenced on Monday, Feb. 17, by an official inspection. The Admiral and naval officers of all ranks crowded in, and hearty and warm were the congratulations offered; among the warmest were those of Captain Lord Charles Beresford, just appointed to H.M.S. Undaunted. The Admiral, in a very kind speech, said that he considered the new Sailors' Rest one of the most important additions that could have been made to Her Majesty's Navy, and that

THE GOOD IT DID WAS INCALCULABLE.

The following week was devoted to representative gatherings: on Tuesday, a large tea-party of seamen in the port, followed by an enthusiastic meeting; on Wednesday, a Christian Union meeting; on Thursday, a meeting for seamen's wives and other friends, to whom the mission band of Christian blue jackets gave earnest addresses; on Friday, the hall was crammed for a "praise-meeting," addressed by myself and my lady workers; on Saturday, nearly 200 young blue jackets from H.M.S. Lion marched up to tea, headed by their fifes and drums. On Sunday we were crowded all day, and many received real blessing. On Monday, 24th, a fine squad of 225 boys belonging to H.M.S. Impregnable paid us a visit. Hearty singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns, and earnest speeches, followed, and cheers with a "three times three" were given. On Tuesday we were bright with the scarlet coats of the Royal Marines, whose earnestness was so great that thirty-five signed the pledge. The happy "house-warming" closed on Wednesday, Feb. 26, with a temperance "at home," at which earnest prayer was offered, and the dear fellows felt that, on the site of the old publics, God had built a house for his own glory.

It was the realisation of prayers answered to Miss Wintz and myself. We feel that He who has blessed our mutual work for so many years will continue to bless it, and we thank Him for our band of earnest workers, in the service and out of it. The work has cost nearly £17,000, and will run up to about £21,000 when we have enlarged our hall, and have pulled down and rebuilt the old block, which is fast going to decay. Our enlargements at Portsmouth will shortly commence; the work among seamen there was never more prosperous. I am sure that your readers will pray for us that we may go on simply trusting in omnipotent strength.—Yours in the Master's service,

Agnes E. Weston.

A Temperance Poem.

THE VOICE THAT CALLED YOU "DAD."

Hark, what do I hear in the distance, Jim?
That sound of a steeple bell!
It seems to float on the breezes, Jim,
Like the voice of our little Nell.

I stood at the end of the garden, Jim,
Last night ere you came from work,
And counted the quarters chiming out
From the dome of yonder Kirk.

And there, on the top of the dreamy hill,
I could see two tiny feet
Come tripping along, like a fairy child,
And its laugh was clear and sweet.

Then came a pang to my throbbing heart,
And I felt a mother's care,
As I caught a glimpse of the dimpled cheeks,
And cluster of golden hair.

Ah, Jim! it is more than tongue can tell:
The cup of this bitter woe
Has never seemed full to the brim before,
But now it does overflow.

Would God, I never had lived to be
The wife in a drunkard's home;
'Twere better I'd been in an early grave,
Or cast on the desert to roam.

When you took me to wed in the old grey church,
You were sober and kind and true, [Jim,
And I thought of all men in the world then,
That none could have equalled you.

But drink, cursed drink, has for ever undone
The link that your promises tied;
I can never be happy, or trust you again,
Since our little Nellie has died.

God saw she was dear from her cradle to me,
He knew that you cherished her too,
But deemed she was safer in Heaven above
Than here, while entrusted to you.

Ah, Jim! if you knew how I sit and think
Of the happy days gone by,
Your heart would pine for the vanished love,
And a tear would dim your eye.

I can see you now at the altar stand,
So handsome, fond, and brave;
I can hear the parson question you,
And the vows you proudly gave.

I can hear those soft sweet accents fall,
As I catch that glance so kind;
I can see the smile on my mother's face,
As she knelt with the group behind.

But, Jim, I could never have thought that you
Would bring me to grief and shame:
You said though troubles might overtake,
Your love would be e'er the same.

But time has passed; they are broken vows;
And I feel so old and grey;
Though it only seems, and it only is,
Nine years since our wedding day.

Do you hear them, Jim, those merry bells,
How they peal in the balmy air?
They are surely awakening bygone love—
Or mocking our silence here.

You are sober now from the cursèd drink,
And your cheeks look pale and sad:
Are you thinking, Jim, of your sinful life,
Or the voice that called you "Dad"?

She is far away in the heavens now,
Where all is bright and fair;
But I'm haunted, Jim, by the Bible's words
"No drunkard shall enter there."

Can you bear the thought of a banished soul,
And weight of your own disgrace?
Can you bear to think that our darling's eyes
Will never behold your face?

Do you feel the print of that tiny kiss,
Pressed on to your manly cheek?
Do you hear the words that filled your heart
With a joy you could not speak?

Yes, Daddie was all to Nellie once,
And Nellie was all to Dad;
And mother had never been beaten then,
By a husband drunk and mad.

Ah, Jim! I can see you are crying now,
That drop on your sleeve's a tear.
Maybe, 'tis a message from God to-night;
Come, kneel with me now in prayer.

That gentle tap at your troubled heart
May never return again;
Oh, list to the call, if it be from God,
Don't let it be sent in vain.

There is hope this side of the grave we know,
Whatever our sin may be;
But who can say when the next bell tolls,
If it toll for you or me?

Yes, Jim! there is hope for the dying soul,
If only His word abide;
I could never bear to see you lost,
Swept down by the awful tide.

Yes, hope! there's hope and a promise, Jim,
Of a future fair and bright;
And the past shall be as a shadow flown,
If only our hearts unite.

It is conscience, Jim, that awakens now,
And points to the deadly sin.
You can open the door of your heart to-night,
And let your Saviour in.

He is knocking there, with a loving hand;
If you send his love away,
He may never come back, or call you, Jim,
Till the awful judgment day.

But if you are willing to take Him now,
Whatever the past has been,
He will blot your sins from his holy book,
And make you a heart so clean.

Then, hand in hand, as the years roll on,
We can live our lives again;
And the sun will beam with a brighter ray,
To gladden each care and pain.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., March 16, Matt. xxii. 34—46; Mon., March 17, Matt. xxiii. 1—15; Tues., March 18, Matt. xxiii. 16—28; Wed., March 19, Matt. xxiii. 29—39; Thurs., March 20, Matt. xxiv. 1—14; Fri., March 21, Matt. xxiv. 15—28; Sat., March 22, Matt. xxiv. 29—41.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Rev. W. S. Standen, Messrs. H. Hutchinson and James S. Tyler, Manchester, Conference of Scripture Union Local Secretaries, March 11. Mr. T. Sayer, Congregational Church, Sutton, to March 22. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Hammond-street Sunday-school, Hoxton, to March 14. Mr. H. Hankinson and Mr. Henry Hutchinson at Dublin, March 21—28. Mr. S. J. Hewett, Y.M.C.A., Claremont, Hastings, April 8—15. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Andrew's, Lambeth, April 10—20; St. Leonards, April 26 to May 5. Mr. James S. Tyler, Baptist School-room, Lydbrook, April 13—20.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—The offer to give £1000 to the Mission towards a new hospital ship, as soon as the public had contributed another £1000, has been supplemented, and the Albert has probably by this time started on its first errand of mercy to the toilers on the stormy waters of the North Sea. A legacy of £1000 to the Mission funds is also reported.

A NEGLECTED FIELD.—Mr. George D. Coleman, colporteur in the district of Tarapaca, Chili, writes to us:—"I am often asked for the Scriptures in the Kitch-a-way language, which is spoken by people in the United States of Columbia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, West Brazil, Chili, and the Argentine Confederation. I am surprised to find that there is no Bible in this tongue. Ecuador and the United States of Columbia are in the chains of Rome, and most of her people speak Kitch-a-way. Who will enter this field, where darkness, sin, and pollution rule?" Persons desiring further information may address Mr. Coleman, at Casilla 62, Iquique, Chili.

A MISSION AT SOUTH SHIELDS.

A special mission has been conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane at South Shields. The committee of the Y.M.C.A. took the matter up, and sought to unite the ministers and the churches in an effort to reach the crowds of non-churchgoers. The largest and best known place in the town was taken, the Free Library Hall. Much prayer was offered previously, and during the week immediately preceding prayer-meetings were held every night; and daily Bible talks, by Mr. Oscar Owers, were given in the Y.M.C.A. Hall.

On Sunday, February 23, the mission commenced, and seventy young men met for early prayer. In the afternoon the Bible-class was taken by Mr. Lane in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. The workers met for prayer, &c., at 6.30, then held a meeting in the large market-place, issuing invitations and putting cards and bills into the hands of the hundreds wandering about. At 8 p.m. the Free Library Hall was filled, over 1000 people being present at the meeting. During the week there was an encouraging attendance, but the closing meetings of Sunday and Monday most decidedly showed forth God's power and glory. On Saturday night, at the usual Y.M.C.A. weekly prayer-meeting, many were under deep conviction.

Mr. Lane gave an address which was much blessed to Christians on Sunday morning, and afterwards preached in one of the chapels. In the afternoon the Music-hall of the town was packed from floor to ceiling with men only, 2500 or more being present. It was a stirring and moving spectacle as one regarded the surging crowd of sin-marred faces, showing so unmistakably how their hearts were yielding to the truth of the words, and the loving appeal of God's servant, as the Holy Spirit used him. At times, so great was the power of this feeling, that bursts of applause would break out from the full hearts, as the speaker denounced some special sins. One young man afterwards told the secretary that he had been guilty of a special sin; he had told it to no one before, but he wished Mr. Lane to know. Thank God, that same young man gave his heart to God on the Monday night, and is now a member of the Y.M.C.A. We went home from the meeting rejoicing that our glorious Lord had been in our midst, and fed the thousands.

Monday afternoon the Y.M.C.A. Hall was filled up for the last Bible talk, and at night Mr. Lane very willingly gave up his own chair to Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M.P. for the town, who stayed till the close of the after-meeting of 500 people. After a few words on the great value of Y.M.C.A.'s, Mr. Lane told the story of his conversion, which broke down many a soul. At the after-meeting a goodly number decided for Christ, as was also the case at every meeting.

HAWICK.—An Edinburgh correspondent, who has visited this border town, tells of much active and efficient endeavour as he witnessed it on a recent Sabbath in fellowship meeting, children's church, Sabbath-school, evangelistic meeting, and the ordinary church service.

JERUEL, QUARRY-ROAD, HASTINGS, serves a combination of good purposes. It is at once a Home for Invalids and a Y.W.C.A. Home. One department of service helps another, and conjoined with the two is a third, in the form of a free registry office for servants. It was in order to help servants of good character that the institution was founded. From the report for last year we learn that, of 256 cases received, the majority were in delicate health, and requiring rest; eighteen were homeless and friendless girls, not strong, needing training and fitting for service, although they were beyond the age eligible for training Homes. Eighty-four free weeks were given to such as required extra time, and who, unable to take situations, were without home or money. Misses Marchant and Harding are superintendents of the Home.

The Story of a Devoted Life.*

CHAPTER XIV.—LEADING.

Our worker never aspired to prominence. Her faculty of persuasive speech, especially the fine pathos by which she could powerfully move the heart of an audience and unseal the fountain of tears, might have opened her way to a post of eminence; but she shunned publicity, and confined her meetings to little quiet gatherings of her own sex; she was "only a visitor." Even on her own field she did not aspire to lead; and yet she was a leader. Her enthusiasm touched a chord in warm hearts. Her zeal kindled zeal. Her courage and self-sacrifice inspired others; her loving, generous spirit found a ready following. With moving tenderness she frequently appealed to her fellow-Christians to come "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." In effect she was ever saying, "This way, friends! Down here they are perishing. Hush; don't you hear that cry for help? Quick, quick to the rescue! See, the Lord Himself is leading us on!"

"What drew you to her?" I asked a band of young women whom she led in mission work.

"She was so real," replied one. The gracious soul instinctively turns to reality as the flower to the sun.

"I can't tell what it was," said another; I just liked to be with her." This power of attraction belongs only to the born leader.

"It was her lowliness," said a third; "she was always like one of ourselves." Meekness is more than mastery; gentleness can lead as well as genius.

"Once we had a little tea-meeting just to talk about the work, and each of us put something on the table," said another of the girls, "and she was so vexed we didn't invite her. 'I would have put something on the table, too,' she said, and there were tears in her eyes when she said it; she so loved us." Is there a nobler leader than love?

It is no mean service to enlist, organise, and lead a band of earnest souls in the war with the devil and sin. Without the wise brave leader much Christian work is lost. She frequently took a young Christian with her to initiate her in visiting, and to inspire her with a passion for the work of seeking the lost. Here is an instance of her way with young disciples. Miss —— writes:

"After forenoon service, we had a cup of coffee in the vestry, and went to visit. We distributed tracts at a good few houses, which nearly all took from her with a smile. Some asked her to come in and talk to them; but others shut the door in her face when they saw who it was. She took these rebuffs quite calmly, and said to me, 'Perhaps they will take it next time.' She told me of one door at which she had never been able to gain admission. They were Roman Catholics, and would not listen to her. 'If they do not remove this term,' she said, 'I shall get them to take a tract yet, I think.' After her district was gone over, she took me with her to see a poor little girl who was dying. When we went in, the little girl was lying half asleep on a bed in a room not the tidiest, which smelt strongly of boiled vegetables. There were other two girls in the room, busily engaged in dressing their hair. They put chairs for us at the bedside. My friend took the child's hand in hers, and spoke gently to her about the Good Shepherd—how He died for us, and how He takes the lambs in his bosom. In answer to one of he questions, the child said she believed that Jesus died for her. 'Then you are Christ's little lamb,' she said; 'and you need not be afraid to die. Jesus will take you up in his arms and carry you home to be with Himself. Shall we sing a hymn?' We then sang, 'Whiter than the snow,' and after kissing her we left her.

"We then went to see an old Christian woman. She was very glad to see her kind visitor, who asked about her health, and listened patiently to all her small troubles and ailments, sympathising with her, and saying, 'Poor body!' She then talked to her about spiritual matters, which the old woman seemed to enjoy very much. Before leaving we knelt, and she engaged in prayer. I remember being struck with the number of times she used the word 'Saviour' in it."

Abundant testimony is borne to her labours by her fellow-workers. Miss—— writes:

"She abounded in labours for the good of souls. From the day that she first came amongst us until almost the last day of her earthly pilgrimage, she was never idle. At one time she was encouraging open-air meetings; at another time planning house-to-house visitation.

"I remember, some years ago, it was laid upon her heart that something ought to be done for the lapsed masses that abounded in the vicinity of our church; and she resolved she would go herself if someone of the Christian women would accompany her on a course of house-to-house visitation among them. It was my privilege to accompany her on a good many of those visits. Before going, it was her custom to repair to the house of a Christian friend near by, where, on bended knee, we sought help from on high, to enable us to testify for our Master. Week after week these visits were repeated, until she had been in every home in the district, and had spoken to almost every soul about death, judgment, and eternity.

"Nor was she content with that: she induced as many of the Christian workers as could spare time to unite in a band, and go through the closes and sing hymns, in the hope that the sound of the holy strains might reach the ear of some one grown weary of a life of sin, and be the means of leading that one to Jesus, the sinner's friend. She has gone to her reward, but the work goes on; the Christian band are singing still, and eternity will reveal the results.

"She was often much exercised about the spiritual condition of the congregation; and from time to time, she managed to gather the Christian women together for a week of prayer. Oh, those hallowed moments spent in that little room at the back of our church—the remembrance of them sends a thrill through our hearts to this hour. It was good to be there; the Lord on those occasions was verily near, and we felt we had but to speak, and He would hear.

"Instead of taking the rest her enfeebled body required, she was ever ready to do her part in almost every phase of Christian work. Heedless of exposure to the inclemency of the weather, or its effect on a delicate constitution, she toiled on: out of doors or in doors, at open-air work or tract distribution, at our children's meetings or adult meetings, she was there speaking in solemn tones to some one grown old in sin; or, with beaming face, telling the dear little children of One who said: 'Suffer the little children to come unto Me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'

"The members of her young women's class will long remember the wise counsels she gave them. I remember on one occasion she said, 'Oh, you young women who can sing well!—you don't know how much I envy you; how much better fitted you are to go and visit the sick than I am! How soothing it is to the shattered nerves of many a poor sufferer when they hear a sweet hymn hummed in their ears by one who can sing well. There are many sick ones in our midst, and you have ample opportunity for laying your talent at your Master's feet, and saying with Frances Ridley Havergal:—

> Take my voice, and let me sing
> Always, only for my King.'

"She was ever ready with words of sympathy and deeds of kindness when any were in trouble. Her own acquaintance with suffering and weakness had been her best teacher as to how she might best comfort and cheer those who were suffering under the rod of affliction. By her kindly ways she endeared herself to us all; and her removal from amongst us has caused us to feel that a blank has been made in our ranks that can never be filled again."

Mr. A——, now a missionary in China writes:

"Perhaps more than others I knew how Mrs. Simpson laboured in district work. Sabbath after Sabbath she used to stand by my side at the open-air preaching. Her very presence cheered us in our district work. Often when not strong in body she was with us, in rain and in sunshine, helping in the singing. Often while the preaching was going on, she would enter the miserable homes, and have personal dealing with the people. Many of the people, I know, valued these kind visits. It is impossible to sum up her labours. Eternity alone will reveal the great influence she had on the church and district....Her place will never be filled. The people of the district will greatly miss her loving visits and acts of charity. Bonnethill has lost a true friend. No more shall these poor people listen to her gentle pleading to come to Jesus for rest. No more, alas! shall they hear her solemn warnings to flee from the wrath to come. I also mourn over the loss of a kind, dear friend, a friend who prayed for me, a praying friend. Oh, it is a great loss! Long before I joined Bonnethill Church I made her acquaintance. Many a blessed talk did she have with me. The Lord did use Mrs. Simpson in helping me forward in the way of life and in the Master's service. I really found in her a friend. May some of the zeal she showed for the salvation of the lost fall on us all."

It is interesting to notice how one conversation leads to another, and thus in turn each convert becomes in the best sense a leader. A single instance may be given. One night at a meeting on the street a woman was awakened. "I am a crimson-dyed sinner," she said. Conversion followed. She then brought with her a young woman, who also received the Word, and was saved. Not long afterwards that young woman, as she lay on her death-bed, sent this message to her friends at Bonnethill, "I am saved by a hair's breadth." These words became the title and theme of a tract which was sent in a letter to a ship-master's wife in Newcastle. The little message was used by the Holy Spirit to convey the saving knowledge of Christ to the ship-master's wife. Her husband on his return from a voyage, was amazed at her conversion. At first he stormed furiously, because she had become a "revivalist." By-and-by better thoughts prevailed, and he too became an earnest disciple and a diligent worker. And now one of his sons is preparing for the work of the ministry. So far, the young minister is the last link added to the chain: but who will say it ends there?

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.—Our readers are more or less familiar with the beneficent operation of this Orphanage. It was originated fourteen years ago in a time of famine, and has held on its way ever since, a means of blessing to many. The pastors of the Bithynia Evangelical Union have quite recently given it the seal of their approbation. Indeed, one can hardly over-estimate the importance and value of such an institution in a dark land, or the possibilities of ultimate Christian influence arising from the godly up-bringing of those destitute children. The average number of inmates is 100, and the Principal writes that the orphans are now in dire distress for want of food and clothing. Communications may be addressed to Rev. Dr. Brown, 32, Avenue, Bedford-park, Chiswick.

MRS. OSBORN,

Of the Soldiers' Home, Cape Town.

THE lady whose portrait we give this week is well known for her devoted labours on behalf of South Africa. It is of interest to remember that Mrs. Osborn was led to her sphere of work there through the influence of these pages. A brief statement of the Lord's gracious dealing with her will be interesting.

Mrs. Osborn was first awakened to an interest in eternal things during a time of illness in India. The seed sown in childhood, and watered by the unceasing prayer of her parents, was now to spring forth into fruit. She was ordered to England the same year, and made a lengthened stay at Brighton. While there, Mrs. Anna Shipton's writings and Dr. Bonar's hymns were mainly instrumental in bringing about her conversion. But it was during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first mission in London that Mrs. Osborn really left the region of "hope" for that of perfect assurance and liberty. Joining the ranks of the army of visitors who accepted districts, she early tasted the joy of suffering reproach for the Lord's sake; for the visitors found not a few who drove them rudely from their doors.

After the death of her husband, Major-General Osborn, Mrs. Osborn devoted her whole time and means to mission work in and around Upper Norwood. A night school for boys was her first effort; then a weekly service, with a free supper for tramps and loafers This led to public-house visitation, in order to find and reclaim some of her members, and ultimately to regular visits to the domain of King Bacchus. But such visits enforced the need of some place of refuge for confirmed drunkards, and this led to the establishment of a Home for that unhappy class.

It was at this time, when, humanly speaking, Mrs. Osborn had entered upon her life work, that the command came, "Depart!" A letter in THE CHRISTIAN from a soldier, setting forth the need of a Home for soldiers in Cape Town, caught her eye. The impression could not be shaken off. Just at this juncture Mrs. Osborn became acquainted with Miss Clara Lowe, who asked her, "Do you never think of the world beyond England?" This and other things were but the stirring of the nest. Letters of inquiry were written, and in a short time Mrs. Osborn was on her way to the Cape.

From the first, God set his seal upon the journey. In spite of the warnings of the captain that "The sailors will insult you," she, with her companion, went to the "fo'c's'le" to hold services for Jack. Jack was not sure the first night if he wanted a service or not; some thought not, but when the little gathering was over, one and all joined in begging the ladies to come again. Before the ship reached Cape Town, many of the sailors professed conversion; most of them still witness a good confession, and some have "gone on before." Arriving at Cape Town, Mrs. Osborn found that the need of the soldiers had been understated. A Home was soon opened near the barracks, followed shortly by a Sailors' Rest inside the docks. Since then (1880) the work has grown. Besides the missions mentioned, there is an open-air mission carried on by a working-man evangelist (Mr. Ramsey), who also received his call to Africa through THE CHRISTIAN. A letter from Mrs. Osborn, printed in these pages, led him to take this step. In addition, Mrs. Osborn has founded the Railway Mission throughout the Cape Colony and Natal; she travelled over 13,000 miles in the interest of the railway employés; sometimes with icicles hanging from the carriage, at other times under a broiling African sun. One man, a Jew, seeing this devotion, said, "I do not believe in their Christ, but, if it enables them to endure this, I will never mock his name again." There are also mission services for the dock artisans. Mrs. Osborn found time besides to edit a paper devoted to South Africa, called The Pioneer.

The funds for the work have been mainly provided by Mrs. Osborn out of her private means, but for the extra expenses she has depended upon God. There have been many wonderful answers to prayer. Over and over again our readers have been made the channel of help.

Failing health led Mrs. Osborn to offer to Mr. Spencer Walton the control of the various branches of her Mission. It was with this object that Mr. Walton left England last August with his mission band; the work is now known as the "Cape General Mission." Mrs. Osborn is now in England making known the needs of the Cape, and affording information, as opportunity may serve, of the character and extent of Christian effort there. She hopes to return to the colony in the course of the year.

Her interest is by no means confined to one part of South Africa, as will be evident from the following communication we recently received from her on

WORK IN NATAL.

During a recent visit to Natal and Zululand, I was deeply impressed with the extent of the work still waiting to be done among the finest of our South African races, the Zulus.

In the colony of Natal alone they number about 400,000. Bordering on Natal, divided only by the beautiful river Tugela, is their own fair land, a few years ago the scene of cruelty and bloodshed. English homes still mourn over that which time cannot heal; nor will time efface the disgrace to our country brought about by that most unrighteous war. The best of our soldiers hated it, and were loth to fight the brave, simple, noble people. Unlike Easterns, the Zulus neither cringed to their victors, nor did they bear malice. The moment hostilities ceased, they showed a generous, friendly spirit, and it was safe to be anywhere amongst them.

The Zulus have been named the aristocracy of South Africa, and also the soldier race among her many tribes. The men are said to be born policemen. The Natal and Zululand mounted police force are a splendid body, and such is their courage and loyalty that it has been proposed to employ Zulus as border and mounted police throughout South Africa.

Often the thought came, whilst among these people, what grand evangelists these men would make! Evangelists for Matabeleland and the Zambesi, and for the regions where few white men survive. Then I saw and heard one of them preach at an American mission station. The language was unintelligible, but the power was unmistakable. The faces before him hung on his words. I rejoiced to think that that bare-footed preacher, filled with the Spirit, had not been schooled and civilised before conversion; for herein lies our hope for the future, that the Gospel is powerful enough alone to change the naked heathen into a preacher of glad tidings; and we want these preachers quickly. Maziana, of whom I write, fought as a chieftain in the Zulu war; afterwards he came into possession of a Bible in his own tongue. He asked the American missionaries to teach him to read it, and the Holy Spirit finished his education.

The need of native evangelists is a pressing one. The Lord is opening doors for the Gospel on every side in South and Central Africa, and men to enter them there are none. From every mission station the answer is the same—"We want all we have for our own work."

I am in possession of deeply interesting details from Mr. Otto Witt, a Swedish missionary who has spent years among the Zulus, and who lately, since he has given himself to evangelistic work among them, going from place to place, has had remarkable blessing in the conversion of souls. He writes from Zululand: "We want men here full of faith and the Holy Spirit. If we get them we shall soon see wonderful things amongst our natives. They have so long been under the chastising hand of God that they are ready to accept of the Gospel of peace."

To the credit of the Natal Government, be it said that the sale of drink to natives is illegal in the colony; therefore this formidable obstacle to the spread of the Gospel does not exist there. "Zululand is not touched by the Gospel yet, or barely so," were words spoken in Natal, and they have become a voice which will not be silenced. May I, through your valued paper, invite communications from those who may be led to interest themselves in a purely evangelistic mission to the Zulus, including the training of the native evangelists?

May I also plead for more prayer on behalf of South Africa, and be permitted to say a word to my sisters in Christ? Why should not morning calls and afternoon tea-time be turned into seasons for united prayer? Why should not every Christian home have its one morning, or afternoon, or evening in the week for a missionary prayer-meeting? If the drawing-room be not available, let us have a kitchen-meeting, and invite "the poor of this world, rich in faith." It would, probably, be the better meeting of the two.

We earnestly commend Mrs. Osborn's plea to our readers. It is a good cause to which she has has given her heart in the love and fear of God, and we trust she will be privileged to see grand results of her untiring efforts.

LADIES' MISSIONARY CONFERENCE. — The first united Ladies Missionary Conference for the N.W.P., India, was held at Agra from February 4 to 7. Over fifty ladies from nine different societies attended. Papers were read on various subjects, including, "The Deepening of Spiritual Life of Native Christians," "Zenana Work," "City and Bazaar Schools," "Village Work," and "Baptism, Support, and Protection of New Converts," and very interesting discussions followed. This Conference was the outcome of much prayer, and each session was marked by a spirit of love and unity. On Friday morning, February 7, a united communion service was held at St. John's Church, and the last session was closed by a meeting for prayer and praise, when many requests for special blessings in connection with the work were handed in.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

Early last year the Marylebone Medical Mission entered upon more commodious premises at 12, Bell-street, Edgware-road, N.W. From the fourteenth annual report it appears that the work has proceeded with very encouraging success in the new surroundings. During last year 12,522 patients were seen at the Mission dispensary, and 2,760 new cases were visited in their homes. While waiting their turn, the dispensary patients have been talked to by the deaconess and other Christian ladies, and thus medicine for the soul as well as the body has been placed before them.

Dr. Robert Chambers, the medical superintendent, rejoices to tell of definite results of the efforts which have been put forth. A woman who had the form of godliness, but knew not its power, found Divine life and peace through enlightenment consequent upon direct Gospel appeal. She is now a valued voluntary helper, getting people to the meetings, and bringing them, as far as she can, to know the joy of real salvation. Another case afforded the workers great encouragement, as showing the winning influence of medical mission work. A German Socialist sent for the doctor to attend his children while unwell. A lady helper also visited the home, and ministered to the needs of the little ones, at the same time making known the way of salvation. At first the man heard in sullen silence. He hated the words; but he could not be rude to one who showed so much kindness to his children. At length he reasoned:—"There must be something in this religion after all, that makes a lady come to this house to attend my children." Thus a hearing was gained, and a great change has since taken place in the man. He no longer attends infidel and Socialist meetings, but frequents the Gospel services. The report is a singularly cheering one, and will, we trust, by the co-operation of friends, be followed by others of the same excellent type.

BRAZIL.—Rev. E. Vanorden writes on Feb. 5:—"Order and peace continue; though the financial condition is not as good as in the last days of the Empire. Civil marriage has been decreed, which takes much power out of the hands of the priests; also separation of Church and State, giving each State the right to pay ministers of religion, though it forbids the Government to interfere in ecclesiastical affairs. That is just what Rome seeks everywhere: money from the State, and the right to do as she pleases. The convents will be filled again with foreign monks and nuns; the bishop of Rio de Janeiro has sent orders to import them from Europe. There is great jubilee among the Jesuits. We are living under a military and civil despotism. We have, however, now as much, if not more liberty to do as we please for the Lord as under the Empire."

BURLINGTON HALL Y.M.C.A.

The members of the West-end branch of the Y.M.C.A. held their annual meeting on Friday evening. Gen. Sir R. Phayre presided.

The secretary (Mr. John Pearce) read an abstract of the report, which announced his resignation from the secretariat, after nearly thirty years of constant solicitude, and took a review of the work generally. Capt. Verney, M.P., in an interesting speech, urged the necessity of young men bringing their religious principles to bear on the political and social life. Sir T. Fowell Buxton referred to Mr. Pearce's long and faithful service in connection with this Association, and specially remarked on one feature of the work—viz., the connection of the Y.M.C.A. with foreign missions, and how lay help was needed in connection with them.

Mr. George Williams having remarked upon the good influence which Mr. Pearce has exerted upon scores of young men scattered over the world, Rev. C. S. Horne (Kensington Congregational Church) spoke with power on "The claims of Christ on young men." The closing speaker was Dr. T. Gilbart Smith, who alluded to the necessity of the social and physical aspects of the work, and exhorted the men to exhibit Christ's life in their pastimes and pleasures.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.

The monthly all-day meeting, held at the House of Rest on Friday last, was made specially interesting by the attendance of Mr. Daniel Matthews, superintendent of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, Murray River, New South Wales. Speaking in the afternoon to a large gathering, Mr. Matthews gave a brief but comprehensive sketch of his labours which cover a space of fifteen years. The Mission owes its origin to the sympathy and pity which was roused by the degradation and misery of the native tribes, and which led Mr. Matthews to abandon commercial pursuits in which he was engaged, and devote himself with his wife to a life in the bush, for the spiritual and moral benefit of a people who are among the lowest of God's creation. In the early days, a schoolhouse was built, and four blacks were the first who came under the influence of Christian teaching and training. Blessing and increase followed, and at the present time, one hundred and fifty-three of the natives are gathered in, and rescued from lives sunk in sin.

Various departments of work are carried on in connection with the Mission, and, with the assistance of other workers, Mr. and Mrs. Matthews pursue their noble work, rejoicing in the fruit of their labours, while bravely overcoming all difficulties, dangers, privations, and troubles which have come upon them. Special stress was laid upon the fact of the simplicity with which Christ's free salvation is accepted by the natives, and many examples were given to prove the genuineness of the work among them, and the reality of their faith. The sum of £1300 is now required to meet the demands of the Mission, and this Mr. Matthews is endeavouring to raise by interesting Christian England in the needs and claims of the native tribes in the sister country of Australia. The morning and evening meetings were well attended. In the former, Rev. Julius Rohrbach, of Berlin, Rev. T. J. Hazzard and Mr. Boyer, of Bow-common, Rev. W. A. Meaton, and several ladies took part; and at the latter, Mr. Butlin, the secretary of the Conference Hall, Stratford, gave the address.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH MISSION.—Mr. Benson, the evangelist, reports during the past year having held 457 meetings, 137 of them being held in the open air, the others in mission-halls, school-rooms, dwelling-houses, and work-rooms. He has taken 131 temperance pledges.

Notes from Cambridge.

The thirty-second annual report of the Cambridge Church Missionary Union is full of interesting matter. The Union was established in October 1857, and since then 1698 members have been enrolled. Of these, about 150 are now in residence, seventy-one new members having been enrolled in the past year. Eighteen University men have been accepted by the C.M.S. this year, compared with nine of last year. The names and destinations are as follow:—Revs. C. H. Stileman, B.A. (Trinity and Ridley), Bagdad; H. Eyton-Jones, B.A. (Jesus and Ridley), S. China; J. W. Charlton, B.A. (St. Catherine's), N. India; H. Knott, B.A. (Corpus), N. India; J. Hind, B.A. (Queen's), Japan; A. N. Storrs, B.A. (Queen's), S. India; H. Tugwell, B.A. (Corpus), Lagos; J. W. Fall, B.A. (Cavendish and Ridley), Ceylon; E. A. Douglas, B.A. (Christ's and Ridley), S. India; Messrs. G. Pilkington, B.A. (Pembroke), E. Africa; C. F. H. Battersby, M.B. (Trinity), W. Africa; J. D. Colter, B.A. (Trinity and Ridley), E. Africa; G. K. Baskerville, B.A. (Corpus and Ridley), E. Africa; Rev. E. Lewis (Corpus and Ridley), W. Africa. Also the following, whose locations have not yet been assigned:—Messrs. C. B. Clarke, B.A. (Corpus and Ridley); H. W. Hill, B.A. (Corpus and Ridley); Rev. H. P. Napier, B.A. (Trinity and Ridley); H. E. Dibben, B.A. (Corpus).

A paper was read on "Martin Luther" at the Protestant Union, on Thursday, March 6. On Wednesday, the 5th, Archdeacon Farrar spoke in the Henry Martyn Hall on "Brotherhoods," to the members of the Church Society. Many other members of the University were present, the Master of Trinity being in the church. After speaking for more than an hour, the Archdeacon devoted the remainder of the time to answering questions. The Rev. R. W. Forrest, D.D., has been preaching the last two Sundays at the University Church. Sermons on Sunday last were in behalf of the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics.

Among the interesting Christian undertakings of the members of the University, Jesus-lane Sunday-school demands a place. Founded fifty years ago, it is entirely managed and supplied by graduates and undergraduates. Many of the men now teaching in the school are but following in the steps of their fathers, who as undergraduates had also taught in Jesus-lane Schools. The management is splendid, and the children devoted to their teachers. It is, indeed, a pleasure to teach there, and much good work is being done. Missionary interest has also been successfully aroused.

has, for the past two or three years, been well known up here as a college where there was an earnest—though, perhaps, small, compared with the number of men in the college—body of Christian men. Saturday evening is devoted to a Bible-reading, generally taken by the gentleman speaking on the Sunday at the Alexandra Hall. There is also a prayer-meeting among the freshmen, and another for members of the first and second year.

Pembroke has also always taken part in the open-air services, occupying ground down in Barnwell. Like Trinity, John's, and Corpus, this college has a successful mission in London. It is found that many men will help in work like this, who will not, perhaps, join in the other Christian work going on in the college.

Among those who have been or now are labouring in the mission field are: Archdeacon A. Stock (New Zealand, 1858), Revs. H. W. Shackell (N. India, 1857; late Fellow of the college, fifteen and a half years in mission field), E. H. Fitch (E. Africa, 1884), J. W. Wright (Delhi, 1888), A. Westcott (Madras, 1885), Right Rev. W. Broughton (Bishop of Australia, 1886), Right Rev. A. Sillitoe (Bishop of New Westminster, 1879), Mr. G. Pilkington (E. Africa, 1889). The dates are those of their going out.

MR. DOUGLAS RUSSELL.

Writing with respect to his five months' sojourn in America, from which he has now returned, this evangelist says:—

On October 11 (afterwards joined by a brother evangelist, Mr. Richard Hill) I began a fortnight's Gospel work in New York, coupling with the indoor services preaching in the open air, where large and attentive crowds assembled. Leaving Mr. Hill to go on with the New York work, I visited Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Lockport in the United States and various parts of Western Canada, for longer or shorter periods, generally devoting from one to two weeks to each place, preaching the Gospel and giving Bible-readings. The Canadian campaign was wound up with eight days in London (where I had been for about a fortnight a few weeks previously), this time having been mainly filled up with the meetings of our brethren, Messrs. Moody and Stebbins, of which some notice has already appeared in your pages.

Remaining in London for some further service after their departure, in a few days I rejoined these brethren at the Michigan University, Ann Arbor (as this little city is called). Here we saw some good work done among the many hundreds of students (medical, law, and literary) as well as residents, who came together day by day, listening respectfully, and with manifest interest, to God's glad tidings spoken and sung. The Great University Hall was used for the evening meetings, and a large lecture-hall in the same building turned into an inquiry-room. This was regularly filled for the most part by students, many of whom had been steeped in various degrees of scepticism. All sorts of difficulties were advanced and dealt with, and it is hoped that, in cases not a few, unbelief gave place to assured confidence in Divine revelation and saving trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, while numbers who had already been on the Lord's side got an impetus from the simple earnest presentation of the old Gospel, and from the evident displays of its power, which may tell on the whole of their lives as well as on those of others through their testimony.

Chicago was our next point. During his brief stay Mr. Moody preached several times to large audiences in the Tabernacle so closely associated with his name, the inquiry-room revealing such blessed results in anxious and believing souls as greatly rejoiced the hearts of the workers. Thence Messrs. Moody and Stebbins proceeded to Ithaca, N.Y., another of America's seats of learning, for a Gospel mission there, while I was left behind for a month's Bible addresses to the students of the Chicago Institute. These hail from all quarters of the Union, as also from the Canadian provinces, and even Europe has its representatives among them; Christian workers, too, from outside, taking advantage of the privileges offered by the Institute, which supplies a "missing link" in Chicago and America at large.

Opening up the Word of God to a large company of young men and women thirsting for a fuller, deeper knowledge of it, with a view to personal growth and increased efficiency in the Lord's service, was found to be delightful work, while the pencils and note-books which were called into requisition and freely used all over the hall told of the avidity with which its truths were being taken in. Their afternoons and evenings are given by the students variously to private study, visiting the homes of the poor, engaging in Gospel work, &c., while an evening exposition is given for the benefit of those unable to attend the morning lectures.

Starting from the Western Metropolis on my homeward journey, I halted at Suspension Bridge for a little service there, and at Niagara Falls, and then came on to New York. Having had some closing Gospel testimony there, and seen something of the work for Christ of Messrs. Moody and Stebbins in Brooklyn—souls being awakened and saved, and Christians helped—I re-embarked for England.

MEDICAL MISSION WORK IN PERSIA.

The following paragraphs are from a letter received from Dr. Marcus Eustace, Medical Missionary of the Church Missionary Society at Julfa, Ispahan, Persia.

I am working very hard to get my little hospital in order; it is extremely difficult, as the people are so fond of dirt. I have been able to supply bedding for twelve beds. The rest I cannot do at present for want of the necessary funds. We do not give medicine free in the dispensary, but have decided to have the hospital, such as it is, quite free, and to supply the patients with everything. We have thus better opportunity for winning them for Christ.

The hospital here should be a proper building with proper foundations. If we had the money we could work to any amount even with our present staff. We could take in twenty or thirty patients to the one we at present take in. Building here is so cheap that £1000 would build a hospital capable of accommodating 250 patients, another £1000 would furnish and partially endow it. It is being done in Teheran. The sick people come to us from 200 miles. In the last six months we have treated fully 4000 people who have paid us over 12,000 visits. We have only been able to take in 80 patients, but have performed a large number of operations. The clergyman can hardly go anywhere, but to the medical man every door is open, the secrets of every heart are revealed. Medical missions can win the day for the Lord.

We are but an outpost, we should be a stronghold. The men are ready, the work waits, but must we be condemned to be always signalling for provisions when there is plenty with the main body which only require forwarding? Surely it ought not to be. Our present position is this; drugs have been ordered to the full amount of the C.M.S. grant. Sick people require medicine. The fees in the dispensary must cover all the good work done by the hospital, and pay two assistants. In such a way is our hospital cramped. Wednesday I give up to seeing inquirers. It would do your heart good to see these little gatherings.

THE IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY, which seats 3000 persons, has lately undergone a thorough renovation. The work has for some time been languishing, but it has now been taken up by Messrs. Middleton and Hogben. New life and energy have also been infused into the work. On Thursday, February 6, Dr. Barnardo reopened the hall by preaching in the afternoon, and at night giving a thrilling account of his work amongst the waifs and strays of London. The result was £130 in subscriptions, collections, &c.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH has arrived in England, and purposes remaining for several months. She has been thoroughly run down in health by her arduous labours in West Africa, and is at present resting previous to undertaking much public speaking. For two or three years past she has been in poor health, but was impelled by the wide open doors for evangelistic work to remain in Africa until compelled to seek change. At a small gathering of friends at Mrs. Boardman's, 3, Highbury-place, N., on Saturday afternoon, she gave an account of the remarkable manner in which, in answer to prayer, she has been renewed in health and strength since her arrival in England.

London Wesleyan Mission.

On Monday evening last, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission, abundant evidence was afforded that "Advance!" is not merely a war-cry, but an expression of the joyous experience of our Methodist friends. Exeter Hall was filled to its utmost capacity, and the speeches which were delivered were doubly inspiring, because they combined the narration of heroic effort with eloquent appeal for the sending of the Gospel chariot forward throughout the Metropolis. The Mission is in reality a union of missions, conducted by well-known workers in various needy districts. Time failed, of course, for anything like a full statement of the great things which God has accomplished by his servants during the year, but such a report as was actually rendered was gratifying in the extreme.

Mr. Clarence Smith, who occupied the chair, indicated one secret of the success of the Mission, by pointing out that the workers had not only been actuated by a sense of duty, but moved by warm love for the people among whom they had laboured. Rev. W. D. Walters, secretary of the Mission, rejoiced that wherever the work has been made known in the provinces, not only has great enthusiasm been aroused, but definite spiritual blessing has resulted. The Mission goes to the lowest of the population, and has shown itself to be a great work of God. Rev. Walford Green, treasurer, followed with some words of cordial sympathy.

Rev. Andrew Mearns drew upon his intimate knowledge as the author of the "Bitter Cry." He rejoiced that the Mission work is in the hands of the proper men. There is at the present time no difficulty in gaining access to the lowest haunts of London; there is no thieves' kitchen in the Borough where a religious service may not now be conducted. There probably never was a time when the artisans of London were more willing to listen to the Gospel, and the many outcasts were so easy of approach. Therefore, he said, the time has fully come for workers to join hands and enter the wide door and effectual which, in God's providence, has been opened.

Rev. J. H. Hopkins followed with an address on work in South London. He enlarged upon the terrible destitution and fearful ignorance with which he is continually brought face to face.

THE IRRELIGION IS APPALLING,

but the Christian who is sympathetic and large-hearted is soon understood by the people, and even treated with kindness by the most desperate characters. Mr. Hopkins dwelt upon the social problems which find such forcible illustration in the Borough, and rejoiced that his work in the Gospel was among those who stood in the greatest need. He referred to the hard lot of the children, and his budget of incidents included the story of the conversion of a man and woman who once kept one of the lowest public-houses in the district.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes spoke more generally. Having touched upon the work in Clerkenwell and Whitecross-street—full of encouragement and hope—he addressed himself to an account of effort in West London. Two years and a half ago there was no membership there; now there are a thousand persons meeting regularly in class. At least three-fourths of these had previously no connection with any Christian church. Speaking of the nursing work, Mr. Hughes called upon ladies of private means to consecrate themselves thereto. He trusted the time would come when the sisters would nurse a London hospital; the sisterhoods who at present monopolise this work are exclusive to a degree which many Christian people cannot approve. An urgent need, however, is another Home for Nurses, as the actual accommodation is not sufficient to provide for the nurses who would join the Mission. Mr. Hughes advocated a brotherhood without dispensable vows, hoping thereby to secure the steady co-operation, at least for a time, of cultured and wealthy young men, in carrying on work at the minor mission-halls. By various facts and arguments, he pressed home upon Christians in general the claims of the Mission, which he declared to be conducted on a broad evangelical basis.

Rev. Peter Thompson was full of joy in view of the continued blessing upon his efforts in the East End. He has now been engaged in the work five years, and every year he grows fonder of it. The work does not become less difficult, but the difficulties become better known. So the workers go on encouraged.

The speakers told good things, and the people "devised liberal things" when the collection was taken for the extinction of the debt on the Mission. The audience included a large number of converts from the various centres of operation.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

The tenth annual meeting of this Mission has been held at Salle Philadelphie, 23, Rue Royale, Paris. Baron Sébastien de Neufville took the chair, and warmly advocated its cause. Mr. W. J. Lockie, the Paris secretary, gave a brief report of progress. There are now practically ten engaged in the work of visiting the homes of the Parisian ouvriers.

Rev. R. W. McAll, who has three of the missionaries working under his superintendence, said it was evident that a great change was silently operating among the French people in favour of more seriousness of character. In the various mission-halls of his own and kindred societies (Rev. W. Gibson and Miss de Broën's) the attention of the people was most marked. In halls such as the "Salle Rivoli," where formerly the most disorderly scenes were witnessed, and socialistic and infidel doctrines promulgated, peaceable assemblies are now found listening to the teachings of the Gospel of peace and goodwill. Mr. McAll referred to the usefulness of the special work of the Paris City Missionaries, all of whom had helped him in the two "Salles Evangéliques," 31, Avenue Rapp, and 2, Avenue Trocadéro, during the six months of the "Exposition Universelle." The visits of the missionaries to the homes of the people whom they met in the Gospel-halls are the principal feature and work of the Mission. Mr. McAll said he could easily employ ten missionary agents in his work, if the funds could be obtained to support them.

Pastor Théodore Monod said it was his privilege every year to advocate the cause of this Mission, which supplied him with an excellent agent, Mons. Guillou, who was his right hand. M. Monod did not know how he could get on without his aid. Rev. T. Howard Gill spoke of some characteristics of the work which, he said, had his hearty sympathy. Rev. Patrick Beaton (minister of the Scotch Church) said he was living in hope of obtaining an agent.

Rev. S. H. Anderson (Congregational) said the Bible is unknown in France, save amongst the 700,000 Protestants who spread the knowledge of God's Word to others, but so slowly that in the majority of booksellers' shops not a Bible or Testament can be found, nor can they tell you where the Bible can be obtained. The missionaries spread the Word of God by distributing gratis Gospel portions and selling the Bible in families visited. Mr. W. Hawkins (missionary to the English in Chantilly) explained the providential links in the chain of circumstances which led him to France, and then to consecrate his energies to evangelistic work, under Rev. W. Gibson's direction, in Chantilly, La Morlaye, Creil, and surrounding villages. He had been at work for two months and felt much encouraged. Mons. Cerisier and Mr. Brewer, both of the McAll Mission, also spoke.

The meeting for French-speaking friends was also well attended, several workers giving cheering addresses. The hon. secretary for England is Mr. J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

Obituary.

MME. SIMON.

Many friends of Miss de Broen's work in Belle ville, Paris, will learn with regret of the death of the Concierge, Mme. Simon, whose figure was so well known in the dispensary attached to the Medical Mission. During the time she was with Miss de Broen she rendered invaluable service in the Mission work, and the light which shone so brightly in her life has been the means of leading many others to the Source whence her light was derived.

PROFESSOR FRANZ DELITZSCH, LEIPZIG.

By the death of Dr. Franz Delitzsch, the Church of Christ loses a distinguished teacher, and the Jewish people a warm-hearted friend. Born in 1813 of Christian parents, Delitzsch rose to eminence over forty years ago as an Orientalist and a theologian. As the years passed, his fame increased, for his industry in research and authorship bore continual testimony to his high and wide genius. Students from all parts of the world have hung on his words, and Biblical scholars have long recognised in him an exegete of exceptional accomplishments and acumen. We gave a portrait and sketch of the deceased in March last year.

Dr. Delitzsch was a professor of theology during a period of forty-four years, successively at Rostock, Erlangen, and Leipzig. He was a linguist of large acquirements, and, being a master of Rabbinical literature, he broke many a lance for the Jews against anti-Semites who falsely accused them as to the sanctions of the Talmud. He was a great friend of missions to Israel; and his translation of the New Testament into Hebrew has already gone through several editions, and been much used of God in the enlightenment of Jews. Most of his commentaries on Old and New Testament books have been translated into English. Among other things Dr. Delitzsch wrote on Biblical psychology, Christian apologetics, and Jewish culture in the time of Christ, and he was a constant contributor to theological periodical literature. To the last he was an earnest student, ever ready to review, in the light of the present, the conclusions which he had arrived at in the past.

As a man the deceased was humanity and kindness personified. Great as he was in intellect, he gloried in the cross of Christ. As a young man of nineteen, after soul struggles which he was never ashamed to own, he was, as by a light from heaven, placed in the position of Thomas of old, and, with visions of Jesus, led to exclaim, "My Lord and my God." He had the joy of bringing his Jewish benefactor, Hirsch Levy, to the Saviour; and in his early Christian career saw good fruit of the earnest words he was privileged to speak at devotional gatherings in the houses of his friends. As a thinker Dr. Delitzsch was singularly independent; but as a Christian he was implicitly dependent upon his Lord. His position was well expressed in an article entitled "The Deep Gulf between the Old Theology and the New," contributed by himself to The Expositor for January, 1889. He said: "If in many Biblical questions I have to oppose the traditional opinion, certainly my opposition remains on this side of the gulf, on the side of the theology of the cross, of grace, of miracles, in harmony with the good confession of our Lutheran Church. By this banner let us stand; folding ourselves in it, let us die." A surviving son of the deceased is Professor Friedrich Delitzsch, of Leipzig, the eminent Assyriologist.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF-HIGHWAY, E.—At the monthly meeting of workers at the Rest on Friday last, the hon. sec., Mr. J. T Isaacs, asked for more helpers, especially for the Scandinavian work, and put forward another plea for help in dealing with the rough lads of the Highway. Rev. Jas. Douglas, of Brixton, delivered a helpful address on "Power in Ministry," and Mrs. Osborn gave an account of Christian effort at the Cape.

Dr. Pentecost in Paisley.

After the large meeting on Sabbath evening, in the Geo. A. Clark Town-hall, to which reference was made in our last issue, Dr. Pentecost settled down to his evening work during the week in the Free High Church. This beautiful building is seated for about 1200, and is well adapted for being the headquarters of a "forward mission," having a complete suite of halls attached to it, and standing in the very centre of the town. Whilst the audience is assembling, a prayer-meeting is held in one of the halls, which has steadily increased, necessitating the removal to larger rooms. This is hopeful, for where prayer abounds the word is with power. That a deep impression was being made on the audience, which throughout the week numbered about 700, was evident from the start, in the hushed attention which was given to the speaker, and in the singularly earnest and touching character of the singing. Nearly all remained to the after-meetings, which were fitted to be useful not only to the anxious but also to the most experienced Christians, because of the happy illustrations which were employed to light up the entrance of the narrow way, and induce the sinner to close with Christ.

Dr. Pentecost's method of getting inquirers to confess Christ is more thoroughgoing than that which is usually adopted, as they must come to the front and take their places on a seat set apart for them, where they receive from him two cards which they are expected to sign at home, retaining one and forwarding the other to their minister, if they have any church connection. Their names, addresses, and church connection are also entered in a book, so that they can be watched over and guided by Christians detailed off for this work. The Doctor had been told frequently that his plan would not work in Paisley, but he has kept by it with this result, that whereas five stood up on Wednesday evening, none came forward on Thursday, and eight stood up and came forward on Friday. Among these eight was an aged lady with a face beaming with joy, looking as if she had been made young again; a young man who confessed that he attended no church, and had spent his Sabbaths in pleasure-seeking; and a poor homeless lad, who, in passing through Paisley, had been led, in the cold, wet night, to enter the well-lit church, to which he saw so many people going. The young man referred to, when asked, "Did he not find it trying to get up before so many and walk to the front?" replied, "To confess Christ, who has done so much for me, I would walk from end to end of the High-street, though it was lined with people." The work is the subject of much talk in the town, and on the streets and at the fireside earnest discussion is heard on such subjects as conversion and confessing Christ. This is drawing attention to the mission. The prayer of many is that Paisley may be shaken as by a mighty rushing wind.

ANSWERED PRAYER.—Upwards of four years ago, prayer was asked through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN "for either the conversion or removal of a clergyman of a country parish who had built a dancing saloon on his vicarage grounds." Within six weeks of that date he left. Now his place is occupied by a faithful pastor, one who is in earnest in winning souls, and greatly beloved by his people. His hands are greatly strengthened by the co-operation of some devoted Christian ladies, who have come to reside in the parish, and so much blessing has resulted from their united labours that only the other day the policeman said to a friend: "I have now practically nothing to do, for the whole village is so completely changed."

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS.—One of the Canadian secretaries of the Order of the "King's Daughters" being at present in London, is anxious to communicate with, and if possible to meet, any English members of the Order who may reside in or near London, with a view to the better organisation of the work in England, and also the appointment of a general secretary for Great Britain. Inquiries or communications may be addressed to Mrs. E. ARCHIBALD, 35, Abercorn-place, London, N.W.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION.

THE Protestant Reformation Society, now in its sixty-third year, is the only Society in connection with the Church of England which carries on the work of the Reformation by means of missions to Roman Catholics in Great Britain, and efforts to perpetuate Reformation principles amongst Protestants. There is great need for the work of this Society in Oxford, where there are not wanting some who are very successful in making perverts to Rome, especially amongst the graduates and undergraduates of the University.

The work of the Society has been carried on in Oxford since 1881 by Commander Williams, R.N., who visits the University men in their rooms in the different colleges, and helps them much in their spiritual life. At the present time he knows a large number, many of whom attend his Bible-readings on Sundays and the daily meetings for prayer which he holds in his house. Sometimes these meetings are attended by Ritualists; two were lately brought over from their Ritualism, and are now working as curates under sound evangelical vicars. Commander Williams makes a point of calling on freshmen and inviting them to his meetings. He is always glad to hear from parents whose sons are about to join, or have joined, the University, that he may try to influence them for good.

Another important branch of Commander Williams's work is amongst the townspeople of Oxford. He holds Protestant educational classes for young men, young ladies, and children. Rev. Canon Christopher, rector of St. Aldate's, has borne a very warm and hearty testimony to Commander Williams's efforts and the value of his work. A few months ago he wrote in The Protestant Churchman:—"I feel more and more thankful for his residence amongst us, and for his quiet, persevering help in spiritual work among undergraduates and townspeople. His gentleness is known to all who have the privilege of his friendship, but they know also his decision for the truth of the Gospel."

Persons desiring other details of the work of the Society may communicate with Commander Williams, Stoke House, Farndon-road, Oxford.

SPAIN AND FRANCE.—Mr. G. E. Meakin, of Tangier, writes:—"I am hoping to start shortly for a month's tour through Spain, and an equal period in France, and am anxious to do what I can on the way in distributing Gospel tracts or in any other work that may be possible to me. The expense of the tracts will, however, limit the quantity exceedingly, unless some Christian friend will kindly help. I would like to be supplied with, say 500 each of the French and Spanish translations of Mr. Hastings' 'Is the Bible Inspired of God?' and about the same number of various selected publications in either language, and orders on the Bible Society's Agents for a supply of Testaments and portions. The value of the whole would be from £5 to £6."

THE GOSPEL IN BERLIN.

MR. JULIUS ROHRBACH, who for the past ten years has been labouring in the Gospel in Berlin, attended the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Tuesday week, and gave an address on the progress of the work of God in the German capital. In the population of a million and a half, there are 100,000 Roman Catholics and 70,000 Jews; the remainder are nominal Protestants, the majority of whom belong to the Lutheran State Church. There are in Berlin fifty Lutheran churches, and evangelical preaching is the order of the day. The Emperor takes an interest in all Christian movements, and much earnestness is being evinced in reaching the lapsed masses of the people. The necessity for the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit is not insisted upon as it should be, however, although recent years have shown improvement in many directions.

Having referred to several good agencies more or less connected with the Lutheran Church, the speaker dwelt upon the manifold endeavours of the Y.M.C.A., and the operations of the various bodies of evangelical Dissenters. Notwithstanding all the combined Protestant efforts, only about one in a thousand of the population attends a place of worship. Religious indifference is widespread and deep. Hoping to do something towards bringing about an improved state of things, he commenced an evangelical mission in Berlin about ten years ago. Beginning in Moabit, the north-west suburb of the city, he experienced much blessing and encouragement, and five years ago a branch of the work was opened at Charlottenburg, a town about two miles distant from Berlin. Moabit has a population of over 80,000, with only two places of evangelical worship; Charlottenburg has a population of about 60,000, and only two Protestant places of worship. As the work has developed, mission-rooms have been erected, and to-day, there are several useful agencies clustering round both centres.

After describing his interesting mission, Mr. Rohrbach told with joy of the encouragement which God has vouchsafed him. There have been some cheering conversions, even from the ranks of the Socialists, whose pronounced principles tend to a disregard if not a denial of all religious belief. A family of father and mother with four sons, late Socialists, was one seal of Mr. Rohrbach's ministry. The Moabit Mission Hall was built four years ago; the Charlottenburg Hall is now being erected. Mr. Rohrbach has come to England in the hope of securing funds to aid in carrying on the work.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—A two weeks' mission in Prestonpans, East Lothian, March 16 to 30, conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.——A special mission to young men at the King's-cross Y.M.C.A., 91, Euston-road, N.W., March 16 to 23, conducted by Mr. Louis Marks.——Special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at the Congregational Chapel, Alton, Hampshire, March 15 to 18.——A ten days' mission, by Rev. E. A. Stuart, at St. Matthew's Church, St. Petersburgh-place, Bayswater, W., March 16 to 26.——An eight days' mission, by Rev. Thomas Waugh, at the Wesleyan Chapel, Hampstead, N.W., commencing March 23.——A special mission in Free Church, Fordoun, N.B., commencing March 16, conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith.——A ten days' mission at the Howard-street Mission Hall, New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W., March 9 to 18.——A united mission of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., in Shaftesbury Hall, Ealing, by Mr. J. de Burgh Rochfort, of the Evangelisation Society, March 16 to 30.——A mission at Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent, by Mr. Henry Lakin, commencing March 16.——A mission, to be conducted by Mr. William Lloyd, at the Baptist Chapel, Poulner, Hants, March 16 to 23.——A mission by Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, in Edinburgh, March 16, in St. Andrew's Episcopal Church and St. George's Hall, Edinburgh, in connection with the Scottish Evangelistic Association.——Special services, by Rev. J. S. Harrison, at Vernon Chapel, King's-cross, till March 21.——A mission by Mr. Henry Thorne, at Dundee, till March 17.——A mission at New Cross Public Hall, Lewisham High-road, S.E.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. G. C. Needham has been holding meetings in St. Louis, where times of blessing have been experienced.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has held a series of services at Centralia, Ill., U.S. The large Opera House was crowded daily, and many professed faith in Christ.

Mr. Charles Garnett, the Wesleyan evangelist, who has recently conducted successful missions at Worksop and Denby Dale, began a mission at Church Gresley on Sunday last.

Tottenham.—A ten days' mission has been held at Westerfield Hall, by Mr. William Mitchell, of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's Evangelistic Association. The word preached, by the grace of God, was much blessed to the conversion of souls.

Mr. Wm. Nobbs has held a five weeks' mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end. Our brother has been much cheered by the manifest blessings that have sealed his preaching. There have been some remarkable conversions, and believers have been blessed.

Seacombe.—Mr. Hall, of Southport, has held a week's mission here in connection with the unsectarian work in Demesina-street. Among those who yielded themselves to God were some young men. The friends of the work are constantly being cheered by evidences that their labour is not in vain in the Lord.

Southern Counties Evangelistic Crusade.—The workers in connection with this organisation have held seven missions this season in connection with Brighton churches. The desire is to labour in really needy districts, and small churches will find it easy to command the ready help of the crusaders. The hon. secretary is Mr. B. Farringdon, 5, North-street, Quadrant, Brighton.

The Irish Gospel Mission.—A series of very successful meetings in connection with this Mission were held in Cork from March 2 to 7 inclusive, by Messrs. Smith and Hook, evangelists. It was very pleasing to see many of the poorer class (including over seventy Roman Catholics during the week) night after night listening to the Gospel told in a simple and impressive way. There is reason to believe that there were several conversions. During the daytime the evangelists visited several houses in the slums of the city, and were greatly cheered and encouraged by the conversations they had.

Mr. J. Townsend Trench has been addressing meetings at Stewartstown and Dungannon, co. Tyrone. In the former place he lectured on the Evidences of Christianity, cheering Rev. J. Elliott in his earnest work. At Dungannon he helped on a series of evangelistic meetings in the Methodist Church, under the direction of Rev. Mr. Fullerton. In both places Mr. Trench was resorted to by many sick people and such as were suffering from bone and skin diseases; and the soundness of his advice and the efficacy of the medicines he administered have since been the subject of wondering and grateful conversation.

Ireland.—Gospel missions have just been conducted by Rev. W. E. Burroughs, of Kingstown, in Killylea; by Rev. George Howell, of the Church of England Parochial Mission, in St. James's, Dublin, when from four to six services were conducted daily with excellent results for nearly a fortnight; by Rev. Mr. Meeke and others, in Newtownhamilton; in Castlecaulfield Methodist Church, by Mr. John Gault; and at Mohill, by Mr. and Mrs. Powers. In several of these places the prevalent influenza epidemic interfered somewhat with the attendance, but in each the power of the Lord was present to save.

DR. HARRY GUINNESS has recently visited Bristol and Plymouth, conducting in each town a series of evangelistic and missionary meetings. In these latter, he sometimes makes use of a very fine triplex oxy-hydrogen lantern, to display to the eye the scenes in China, Africa, and elsewhere, of which he speaks, and the portraits of those to whose missionary labours he alludes. It is well to reach the heart and mind by eye-gate as well as by ear-gate, and in some cases entrance can be effected by the former far more readily than by the latter. Any means are useful whereby the distant and unfamiliar heathen world and the actual state of its inhabitants can be made to seem real and near to English audiences.—Regions Beyond.

The Temperance Cause.

In Boston, U.S.A., under high licence, the arrests for drunkenness in 1889 amounted to 15 per cent. over the total for 1888.

The German Reichstag has asked the Government to consider how the drink traffic may be suppressed in the German colonies.

Some members of the London County Council are making commendable efforts to prevent the holding of coroners' inquests at public-houses.

A nine days' Gospel Temperance mission was held recently at Dix Cove Station, West Coast of Africa. In connection with the local society there are 13 workers and 146 members.

Rev. G. W. McCree blames the police largely for the shameful violations of the licensing laws common in the Borough and other parts of London. The same complaint is heard from most large towns and cities.

The Atlantic Monthly says of the public-house:—"It stifles progress, fosters pauperism, brutalises husbands and fathers, breaks women's hearts, puts rags on the working man's back, disease in his body, and shame and despair in his heart."

The report of the Council of the British Medical Temperance Association, based on facts and statistics obtained by Drs. John Moir, Thos. Morton, and Walter Pearce, on behalf of the Council, is most encouraging to advocates of the treatment of disease without alcohol.

The statement has often been made that the closing of public houses does not necessarily promote temperance. Mr. Alexander Chance, J.P., of the firm of glass manufacturers, Oldbury, holds the opposite view. The closing of four public-houses in his neighbourhood has been attended with highly salutary results.

An extended temperance mission has been held at the Pilgrim Hall, New Kent-road, S.E. It was concluded by an illustrated lecture, entitled, "The Temperance Picture Gallery," given by Mr. Charles Wakely, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union. The interest was well sustained, over two hundred pledges being taken during the mission.

"Wine as a Mocker" was the title of a lecture delivered by Dr. B. W. Richardson a few days ago at a meeting of the Jews' College Literary Society. In the course of a discussion after the lecture, it was pointed out that it is owing to the fact that wine has been consecrated to high uses in Jewish religious ceremonies that the people have not fallen into excessive drinking. Dr. Hermann Adler stated that all through Hebrew literature there runs the strongest condemnation of intemperance. He pointed out that unintoxicating raisin wine might properly be used at Jewish festivals.

Seldom (says The Daily Chronicle) has the temperance advocate been supplied with so powerful a text against the evils of drink as is contained in the New York telegram respecting the disastrous bursting of a dam near Prescott, Arizona. This calamitous occurrence, which has caused the loss of many scores of lives, and has swept away houses, homesteads, and others substantial buildings, might have been averted had it not been that a messenger sent to warn the inhabitants of the valley below the dam stopped at a drinking saloon, got intoxicated, and so failed to deliver his message. A second messenger, who tried to repair the criminal neglect of the first, died in the attempt to faithfully acquit himself of his dangerous task.

A warm supporter of our movement, a member of a County Council, asked the medical officer why he approved of beer forming part of the dietary of the patients under his charge in the County Lunatic Asylum, and was told that the beer tended to make them heavy and sleepy, and therefore more easy to manage. Our friend, continuing his investigations, found that the beer (brewed on the premises) given to the officers was fully twice as strong as that given to the patients, and therefore, on the doctor's reasoning, likely to make them twice as heavy and sleepy as those they had to look after. Strange logic, this, it seems to us. Supported by other doctors, however, the reformer partly had his way, the brewery was abolished, and a comparatively small account opened with a neighbouring brewer. The London County Council has done better still than this; they have decided that no beer shall be included in the dietary of the asylum patients, and that even the officers shall receive the money equivalent of the useless drink.—Band of Hope Chronicle.

Norway spends annually in drink 40,000,000 kroner. It is estimated that 7000 homes are every year broken up by drink, and that there are £15,000 drunkards, and 100,000 who occasionally become drunk.

In the iron ore works with which Mr. Caine, M.P., is connected, 1200 men are employed for a turnover of £250,000 each year. Mr. Caine recently went over a brewery in which the annual turnover was £1,000,000, but only 660 men were employed.

A Cincinnati gentleman, who has preserved a record of 320 railroad accidents happening in America during last year, finds that only thirteen out of the lot occurred from causes beyond human control. Every one of the others was due to drunkenness or carelessness.

"Crime is on the increase in the United States," says the Governor of Iowa, "but Iowa does not contribute to that increase." In his retiring message, the Governor, Hon. W. Lanabee, shows at length the enormous benefits which have followed the adoption of Prohibition by the State.

The Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance has received from the executors of the late Mr. William Lawrinson, of Warburton, near Warrington, a bequest of £100. Mr. Lawrinson, who thus kindly remembered the needs of the Alliance in his last will, was a postman at Warburton, and died on October 18, 1887.

At the time of Mr. W. S. Caine's visit to India a Hindoo religious teacher was so much impressed with a temperance address by Rev. W. Evans, of Mussourie, that he commenced a crusade. Calling the head men together, they adopted caste pledges, which meant that any found the worse for drink would be out-casted. Such is the power of caste in India that by this act of the Mahant no fewer than fifty thousand of the working people of Benares have been brought under the temperance pledge. The liquor sellers are thus almost ruined, and have appealed to the magistrates, praying that their licence fees may be remitted.

The general superintendent of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad (U.S.A) has issued a circular to the employés of that road, which contains some stringent rules against intemperance. It begins with the sweeping restriction: "Men known to be in the habit of becoming intoxicated shall not be taken into the employ of the company." Next, it warns men who frequent drinking places to stop at once, if they wish to remain in the service of the company. If known to have been drunk either on or off duty, they will be discharged. We have talked with some of the train men (says The Union Signal), and find this circular has a very wholesome effect upon the appetite. It is one of those bracing enactments which the State ought to put upon weak citizens. Let the liquor seller be outlawed; then declare drunkenness, what it is and always has been, a crime against God and man, with suitable penalty provided, and there would soon be vacant wards in the now overflowing insane asylums to accommodate all who, beause of dipsomania, inherited or acquired, should prove unable to comply with the law. When society, like the railroad corporation, becomes convinced that intemperance yields it nothing but evil, it will find speedy means of relief.

MR. MOODY ON INFIDELITY.—In conversation with a newspaper reporter Mr. D. L. Moody recently said:—"I do not find as much infidelity now in a month, in questions which are asked by the young men after a meeting, as I used to find five years ago in one day. Then the young men were full of Ingersollism, and thought that Christianity was worn out. But they have found that there is nothing in infidelity. It tears down, but does not build up. It does not give anything. This is part of the same movement which we see in France. The men there are going back to the Churches."

THE POLYTECHNIC (Regent-street, W.)—The enterprising friends at the Polytechnic have arranged for early morning classes on various subjects relating to commercial life—Shorthand, Book-keeping, Arithmetic, French, German, and Typewriting. They have done so in order to prepare clerks for competitions for London Chamber of Commerce certificates on these subjects. The classes are to be held from seven to eight a.m., for thirteen weeks, commencing April 13. The arrangements permit of students having breakfast at the institution, so that they can proceed directly to business after the period of tuition. Circulars, with full details, can be had from the Secretary, at the Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, W.

MAJOR WHITTLE AT GREENWICH.

It was my pleasure six years ago to send you a brief record of the united mission which was conducted by Major Whittle in Greenwich. By the good providence of God our beloved brother has been spared to revisit us. Many remember with joy the former blessing which God sent through his servant, and great expectations filled the hearts and minds of these when it was known that Major Whittle was to come again to deliver the Gospel message.

Much believing prayer had been offered for a Holy Ghost manifestation, and on the first Sunday, March 2, these petitions were graciously answered. Notwithstanding the bitter cold, South-street Baptist Church was filled with eager listeners. All felt "the glory of that light," while God's servant discoursed upon the saving power of the Holy Spirit. In the afternoon a special service for men only was conducted, and some six hundred gathered to have the pointed question put to them, "Wilt thou be made whole?" Once more, at 8.15 on this the soul's market day, were the good things of the kingdom placed before a crowded congregation, and much power accompanied the address on "The heavenly vision." Many will thank God all through eternity for this Sabbath and all its glorious privileges.

Monday and Tuesday were days to be chronicled by meteorologists as the intensest for cold that had been for some years; but the hearts and ardour of the workers were warm enough to make them brave the elements, and the first week-night meeting was well attended. The Bible-reading also brought together a large number. By the Holy Spirit's power many were strengthened to "stretch forth the hand," and by "looking unto Jesus" seeing their iniquity were also led to "cease from sin." Every afternoon the people of God have been brought right up to the Son of God to find "repentance," "rest," and "victory over sin"; while at the evening meetings the Gospel has been faithfully presented to the unsaved. A large choir has led the singing, while the solos of Miss Whittle, Miss Earl, and Mr. Stevens, have all helped to make the gatherings pleasant and profitable. On Wednesday the male choir from Stratford, by their singing and testimony bearing, gave additional interest to the meeting. Special blessing has also followed the young women's assemblies after the larger service was over; Miss Whittle conducting these in the social room at the rear of the church. During the following two weeks efforts are to be made to reach young men, and I may hope to report success attending these endeavours.

The evening services are being held during this week in the Presbyterian Church, and the afternoon Bible-readings are given in the Lewisham-road Baptist Chapel; while the closing meetings will take place in the Congregational Church, Greenwich-road, and the Wesleyan Church, London-street. Thus unitedly God's people are looking for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the conversion of many souls.

Greenwich. C. SPURGEON.

MISSION WORK IN VAUXHALL.—Mr. W. Snow, of the Christian Police Association, writes from 23, Ravensdon-street, Kennington Park, S.E.:—"We have been holding Gospel meetings in the Veterinary Institute for some months, and have had the Lord's hand with us in the conversion of men and women. The place has just changed hands, and we have had to leave. We are now holding meetings in the house of a converted drunkard, and in a wood-chopper's shop. There are several thousands of people here who are in darkness, and will not go to a church or chapel. They will come to a mission service, simply conducted, and we are desirous of securing premises to convert into a suitable hall."

Letters to the Editor.

"APOSTOLIC WARFARE."

SIR,—With regard to the first of the two issues to which Pastor Douglas now limits his objections to "Apostolic Warfare," I will merely say that I think even he must by this time be satisfied that I did not intend to charge with unbelief any evangelical minister. I merely urge my readers to associate in their minds the ideas of a powerless Church and an abandoned faith. Where the man is who does believe the whole Bible, there you find, with rare exceptions, the old crowd of interested listeners.

With regard to the second question, I must confess astonishment at the pastor's assertion in big black type that I said "Alas! nothing" in reply to his call for Scriptural authority for our system of Government. And this, too, although he admits that I mentioned the entire Old Testament.

Not content, however, with pointing out that the entire Book which was the only Bible of the Apostles directed God's people to establish and submit to just such a government as that of the Salvation Army, I also referred to "Paul's orders to Timothy, Titus, and the Church at Thessalonica." I did not think it needful to ask you for space to quote any of those orders. But, as nothing but quotation will suffice, permit me to supply a few specimens taken only from these Epistles.

"Paul, an Apostle by the commandment of God our Father" (1 Tim. i. 1), says:—"I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands," &c. (ii. 8.—N.B.—Act, place, and mode specified); "Refuse profane and old wives' fables" (iii. 7); "These things command and teach" (iii. 11); "Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old," &c. (v. 9); "I give thee charge...that thou keep this command" (vi. 13, 14); "Do thy diligence to come before winter" (2 Tim. iv. 21); "For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city as I had appointed thee"—New Version: "And appoint elders in every city as I gave thee charge"—(Titus i. 5); "A man that is a heretick after the first and second admonition reject" (iii. 10); "When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis" (iii. 12); "I sent [Timotheus] to know your faith" (1 Thess. iii. 5); "I charge you by the Lord that this Epistle be read unto all the holy brethren" (v. 27); "If any man obey not our word by this Epistle, note that man and have no company with him" (2 Thess. iii. 14).

I could easily multiply quotatious, but surely nobody will again assert that we say "alas! nothing," when called upon to show Scriptural authority for the military government of the people of the Lord of Hosts. I have never heard, in connection with an army, of any authority more absolute than that which Paul evidently exercised over all ranks of his comrades.

But once more let me say that we do not attack the system of government which Pastor Douglas or any other brother in the service of God may desire to live under. All we claim is that we are not without ample Scriptural warrant in taking upon ourselves or submitting to a government such as that under which we hold that the kingdom of God has always prospered most in the past. We have not, and, thank God, do not want, any Papal power to exact or enforce vows, for God's promise is fulfilled to us, and "Thy people offer themselves willingly in the day of Thine Army" (Ps. cx. 3, R.V. marg.). RAILTON.

The Salvation Army,

DEAR SIR,—It has hitherto been the Roman and Romanising parties alone which have appealed to Old Testament institutions for models of evangelic order. May I earnestly warn Mr. Railton and all his associates against the great perils of such a course? If they handle these edged tools, there will be many cut fingers. The claims of the Pope to be Aaron's successor as high priest, and of the Roman Hierarchy to continue the authoritative directing, sacrificing, absolving powers of the Levitical priesthood, will be found to outshine brilliantly every modern claim or display of authority and order. Judaising in Church government will lead to secession to Rome itself from those now at the opposite extreme, little as they may expect it.—Yours, EXPERTO CREDE.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me to say how earnestly I hope that the inquiry into the above subject will be conducted in a calm, loving spirit, with singleness of purpose, seeking only to know the mind of the Lord as revealed in his Word. Our brother Railton writes in such a spirit, but I could have wished he had adduced some Scripture proof in support of the office of General, as held in the Salvation Army.

The one simple question before us is, "What saith the Scripture?" We read that on one occasion a strife arose among the disciples, "which of them should be accounted the greatest." Not fully understanding the nature of Christ's kingdom, they evidently took it for granted that one of their number should be selected as their chief or general. Then it was that our Lord interposed with these memorable words: "The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth" (Luke xxii 25-27).

Christ here shows how directly opposed He was to anything like military rule, or the setting up of autocrats in his Church. And with respect to the assumption of titles He explicitly commanded: "Be not ye called Rabbi: for ONE is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant" (Matt. xxiii. 8-11). But, alas! the Church soon became "corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." Men arose who "loved to have the pre-eminence," and to be "as lords over God's heritage." Christ "gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers"; but of autocrats having been given to his Church, we do not appear to have any record. May God, by his Holy Spirit, guide us into all truth, for Jesus' sake.—Yours in Him, J. G.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to THE CHRISTIAN of February 28—the second paragraph of "Notes and Comments" led me to think if all Christians would "lay by as God hath prospered" them for the cause of God, how different a state of things would exist. For many years I have been in the habit of laying by on Saturday evening twopence in the pound sterling on every pound I have received in trade. I am a small retail tradesman. The result has enabled me to contribute £5 18s. to our foreign missions in 1889, where otherwise I would have considered one guinea a suitable contribution for the year.

As the £5 18s. arises from one-fourth of the twopence, I have had the other three-fourths to contribute to the home work and to the poor. Let some such scheme be adopted by the Church, and instead of having to seek a popular preacher to incite a congregation to give to a praiseworthy object, it would be, as Paul desired, "no gathering when I come" (1 Cor. xvi. 2), but it would be as of old, "the people bring much more than enough for the service of the work" (Exod. xxxvi. 5).—Yours faithfully, D. E. D.

THE MIDLAND RAILWAY.—DEAR SIR,—Have any of your readers sufficient interest with the directorate of the Midland Railway to assist us in getting leave to place our hanging rolls of texts and Scripture text-books in the waiting-rooms on their line? Every other line of railway is so supplied, and I feel sure that it must be through some misapprehension that we have been hindered in this direction. If any such will communicate with me I will be very grateful.—Yours faithfully,

P. B. MAXWELL.

47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

MISS MACPHERSON, of the Home of Industry, attended the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting on Monday last with her fifty-ninth party of young emigrants for Canada. Miss Macpherson and Mr. Joseph Merry, who is accompanying the party to Canada, delivered brief addresses, and Mr. Robert Paton, who presided, spoke a few words of earnest counsel to the lads, from the text, "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass." Several friends in earnest prayer commended them to the care of God during the voyage, and in all their future life.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Ryle) is to preach in St. Paul's Church, Onslow-square, S.W., next Sunday morning, at 11 o'clock.

A Union has been formed in connection with the Church Missionary Society, to be called the Vigiles, and to consist of all who may join of those clergy—there are four hundred of them—who have been educated at St. John's Hall, Highbury. The object is to excite an increased interest in foreign missionary work among themselves, and, through them, in the parishes in which they labour.

The Dean of Madagascar (Dr. Cowan) preached a sermon at the Church of St. Lawrence Jewry, Gresham-street, on Sunday morning. When this century began, he said, there was scarcely a Christian to be found in Madagascar, and slaves were exported from there at the rate of from 10,000 to 30,000 yearly. The traffic was stopped by English influence, and this raised us in the estimation of the natives as one of the most humane and Christian nations. Missionaries were sent out, and now the capital of the country, with 300,000 inhabitants, is as much Christian as any capital. There are, it appears, 2,000,000 people in Madagascar who are Christians, or nominally so, but there are also 3,000,000 living in darkness and cruelty, having no conception of a God beyond a fetish.

Dean Lefroy is very active in Norwich, and his voice is in frequent demand. He recently opened a richly adorned chancel of an old parish church. He told the congregation that it might be a joy and an attraction, but it would not bring them nearer to God: they must have God dwelling within them. The Norfolk and Norwich Unity of Oddfellows had, on Sunday week, a church parade, and attended the afternoon service at the cathedral. The sermon, preached on "Original (or birth) sin," was the first of a course of five discourses on "Christian doctrine." On the same evening, Dr. Lefroy delivered a Gospel address in the circus. The Dean is going out into the highways and byways among the people, whom he is inviting to special evening services in the nave of the cathedral.

On Sunday evening, the Bishop of Rochester preached in St. Paul's Cathedral on "The Divine Silences." Dishonest, presumptuous, speculative, and controversial questions, he urged, Christ did not answer. Of these, the Bishop instanced such problems as the origin of evil, and those which skirt the borderland between sense and spirit, between the visible and invisible worlds—"questions on which neither of the three great revelations vouchsafed to man (in Scripture, and conscience, and nature) cast one gleam of light; questions for which science properly so-called has nothing but unspeakable disdain and religion a solemn indignation." Dr. Thorold closed with the striking sentence: "Christianity distinctly declines to be proved first and practised afterwards. Its practice and its proof go hand in hand, and its real evidence with its power."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Martin Lewis, of Gravesend, has refused a call to the Cairns Memorial Church, Melbourne, Victoria.

Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser has nearly completed forty years of continuous ministerial work. He has advised his congregation at Marylebone to obtain the services of an assistant minister.

Rev. Dr. Rentoul, of St. Andrew's, Woolwich, at the last meeting of the South London Presbytery, tendered the resignation of his charge. Dr. Rentoul, who is practising at the Bar, said he had come to the conclusion that he could not longer do justice to his congregation.

BAPTIST.

A Young Men's Christian Band has been formed in connection with Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow, E. Mission operations are to be carried on in a house situate near the centre of Bow-common.

Mr. J. E. Roberts, of Regent's-park College, and son of Rev. R. H. Roberts, of Ladbroke-grove Chapel, Notting-hill, has accepted an invitation from the congregation of Union Chapel, Manchester, to become assistant to Rev. Dr. Maclaren.

King's-road Church, Reading (Rev. C. A. Davis, pastor), raised during the past year £2025; of this £335 was for foreign missions, £160 for home missionary work, and £531 towards the building of a new chapel in another part of the town. The church has ten village mission stations under its care.

Revs. Dr. Maclaren, Chas. Williams, F. B. Meyer, Dr. Clifford, and Mr. J. M. Bruce have been requested to act as a committee to make the necessary arrangements to secure a yearly visit to the Baptist Churches of Australia from eminent ministers of the denomination in England, Collins-street Church, Melbourne, undertaking to defray all travelling expenses of the visitor and his wife, and provide suitable entertainment for them while in the Colony. The invitation in the first instance is to be given to Mr. Meyer.

On Monday week Mr. W. Olney invited the members of the Metropolitan Tabernacle who subscribe to the Baptist Missionary Society to meet Rev. D. J. East and Mrs. East, of Jamaica, and Rev. J. J. Turner, of China. After tea Mr. Spurgeon earnestly commended the cause of foreign missions, and Mr. Olney made a fervent appeal for increased contributions. At the usual weekly prayer-meeting which followed, Mr. East referred to the work of the Society in Jamaica, and much earnest prayer was offered for the Divine blessing.

CONGREGATIONAL.

During the past year, the addition to Harley-street Church, Bow, numbered 132, and the membership at the commencement of the present year, after careful revision, stood at 888. The amount raised for all purposes during 1889 was £4220.

Craven Chapel, Regent-street, W. (Rev. Arthur Hall, pastor), reports forty-four new members received during the year; there are now 330 on the church roll. The Sunday scholars number 639. There are seventeen organisations in connection with the church for carrying on mission and other work in the neighbourhood.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, held last week at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, an invitation was received from the Congregational churches of Swansea for the Union to hold its autumnal assembly in that town. It was unanimously agreed to accept the invitation.

The Society for Helping the Thrifty Deserving Poor established in connection with Park Chapel, Camden Town, has been the means of doing much good work during the past year. A register which has been kept of the unemployed in the district has resulted in a large number of persons obtaining work. By its aid, also, girls have been fitted for domestic service, and the children of distressed parents enabled to attend Sunday-school.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friend of Missions for March is full of missionary news, at once most interesting and stimulating. The reports of Friends' work in Japan, Madagascar, India, Syria, Alaska, and China are calculated to gladden the heart of the Church at home, and the accounts of home work, though more familiar, are not less cheering.

American Friends are actively at work in advocating peace and in opposing the naval craze now prevalent. They have sent an able memorial in support of arbitration to the Conference of Delegates of the Independent States of America, to be held at Washington; and they are petitioning against the recommendation of the Senate's Committee to build 227 war-ships at the cost of, may be, a hundred million pounds.

A very successful eight days' mission has been held in connection with the Bristol-street branch of the Severn-street Christian Society, Birmingham, by Herbert Nicholson of Sunderland, and Howard and Louisa Nicholson of London. The three adult classes of Severn-street Schools, meeting at Bristol-street Board Schools, form the nucleus of this meeting, and the mission has been greatly blessed to the members of these classes, as well as to many outsiders who have attended the very full services held each evening from February 23 to March 3. A workers' meeting preceded, and a converts' meeting followed the mission. The power of the Lord was evidently present; many were broken down. More than 200 went into the inquiry-rooms.

METHODIST.

Rev. Edward Smith has formally resigned the pastoral oversight of the Central Branch of the London Wesleyan Mission, and will leave the Mission at the end of the present Connexional year, which terminates in August. During a four years' ministry in Clerkenwell, Mr. Smith has aimed at reaching the working classes simply by preaching the Gospel and by the ordinary methods of mission work. St. John's-square Chapel, Clerkenwell, now numbers over six hundred members, against a little over one hundred when Mr. Smith commenced his ministry.

This month the reports for the past year of the Primitive Methodist Connexion are being made up. "A majority of the stations in Great Britain and Ireland report an increase both of church members and funds. In chapel estates, in Sunday-schools, in missionary enterprise, in evangelistic labours, in temperance, and in liberality, the reports show that the Connexion is in the stream of a remarkable revival." For many years, it is said, the Connexion has not been so deeply and generally moved with the determination to bring the people to the Saviour as now.

Rev. H. J. Chapman, of the Lady-lane Mission, Leeds, has sent out an appeal on behalf of a sisterhood for the United Methodist Free Churches denomination. He is prepared to commence the work at once at Leeds, if suitable sisters offer themselves. He says: "It is not for 'Bible-women' I plead. They have their place; but it is for ladies with the means, the education, and the enthusiasm that will enable them to give the best hours of most days to going about in Christ's name and for Christ's sake, ministering alike to the souls and bodies of their depraved and wretched sisters."

A remarkable work of grace (says The Methodist Times) is being witnessed on the Rhosymedre Primitive Methodist station. A new cause was recently started at a place called Copperas-hill. One evening, whilst a few earnest souls were holding an open-air service in driving rain, a man was so moved by the sight that he invited them to enter his house. That man and several members of his family have been led to Christ. A place has been secured where a hundred gather regularly to hear the Gospel. Forty have been converted, a Band of Hope started, and a Sabbath-school organised. At Black-park, in Flintshire, a revival has been going on for several weeks. One night thirteen found the Saviour, on another evening eleven. The people have carried deep conviction of sin with them to their homes, and some of them to their work. Over twenty have been saved at Pontfaen. Altogether, at least one hundred and thirty conversions have taken place on this Rhosymedre station during the last few months.

SALVATION ARMY.

The flag was unfurled in Norway only two years ago. To-day there are thirty corps in the kingdom, with seventy-five officers. At Christiania the soldiers and recruits number almost a thousand; at Bergen, where the work commenced in September last, the rank and file total three hundred.

The first of a series of holiness meetings, conducted by Mrs. Bramwell Booth and Commissioner Howard, was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday afternoon, last week. It was well attended, and at the close twenty persons went forward and knelt at the penitent form for the definite blessing of purity of heart.

Mrs. Ballington Booth has been visiting Philadelphia, and has had some good meetings. The Christian Standard says:—Mrs. Booth's talks were full of thrilling incidents, told with a directness and simplicity that found a way to the hearts of her listeners, and, as one said, "made her ashamed of any little prejudice that had once existed in her mind against these soldiers of Christ."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Protestant Orphan Society for the counties of Antrim and Down has now 683 orphans on its books, and its income last year was £3598.

A largely attended and very interesting Conference of Sabbath-school workers was held in Banbridge on Tuesday week, when addresses were delivered by Rev. Professor Leitch and others.

A special address on the importance of knowing Christ as a Saviour was delivered last week by Rev. Dr. Hanna to a body of over 200 soldiers, who were about proceeding from Belfast to Gibraltar, and who were deeply impressed by what they heard.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. J. A. Leaky, vicar of Weston, near Bath.—Rev. David Young, for thirty-nine years minister of the English Presbyterian Church, Chatton, Northumberland.—Rev. T. J. Hall, Strict Baptist minister, South Hackney.—Rev. J. K. Fotheringham, pastor of Week-street Congregational Church, Maidstone, Kent.—Miss H. Heap, a well-known and active Christian worker at Lutterworth, Leicestershire.—Rev. Charles Friskin, pastor of Spennymoor Presbyterian Church, Durham, for over thirty years.—Rev. J. Stevenson, Congregational minister, Bishop's Waltham, Hants.—Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, parish minister of Strathy, Caithness-shire.—Rev. Thomas Voysey, for thirty-two years pastor of the Baptist Church at Sandy, Bedfordshire.—Rev. W. Pirie Smith, D.D., senior minister of Keig and Tough Free Church, N.B.—Rev. J. Timmins, Primitive Methodist minister, Burnley.—Rev. T. Ashford, pastor of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church, Denbigh.—Rev. D. F. Sage, minister of the Free Church, Keiss, Caithness-shire.—Rev. D. Anthony, of Babell, Cwmbarla, for upwards of sixty years a minister of the Calvinistic Methodist Church in South Wales.—Rev. James Foster, Presbyterian minister, of Newmills, co. Tyrone.—Rev. W. A. Primrose, Presbyterian minister, at Primrose-hill, co. Cavan.—Rev. John Kerr, D.D., Wesleyan Methodist minister, Ballinamallard, Ireland.

MR. H. M. STANLEY'S forthcoming book is to be called "The Darkest Africa; and the quest, rescue, and retreat of Emin, Governor of Equatoria." It will be published simultaneously in several languages. The American agents are said to have received orders for 50,000 copies.

MISS SKINNER, author of the "Friendly Letter Series," is leaving Bath shortly, and would be thankful to any friend who could point out an opening for Christian work, especially amongst miners or colliers. Though not strong in constitution, Miss Skinner can give addresses and conduct Bible-classes. She holds herself in readiness to take charge of a mission in a needy district. Her address is 5, St. James's-square, Bath.

MISS L. M. VON FINKELSTEIN was married at Delhi, India, on February 3, to Mr. C. E Mountford, postmaster of that city. We are sure her many friends in this country will congratulate her on her settlement in life, and wish for her every happiness. Mrs. Mountford writes to us to say that though her plans about revisiting England are altered, she will not relinquish her lecturing work in connection with life in the Holy Land. Her husband is in fullest sympathy with her in this matter. After a period of rest she purposes visiting the chief cities of India, giving her illustrated expositions of Palestine manners and customs. Her address is care of Post-office, Delhi.

Girl Life in London.—For some years past some members of the London Y.W.C.A. have been working with encouragement among the young women of West-end business houses by means of a Flower Mission. The Mission has a threefold need:—(1) Friends in the country to send flowers; (2) the help of such as have time to arrange the bunches; and (3) the co-operation of Christians who will visit the workrooms with the flowers. It is hoped that centres will soon be established in all parts of the Metropolis. Communications should be addressed to Miss J. G. Weatherley, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, London, W.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 16.—Nehemiah XI.

It was very important that Jerusalem, newly risen from its ruins, should become filled with a numerous and prosperous community; so only could the temple be maintained, or the land properly governed. A tenth of the rural population was therefore drafted into it. But it was infinitely better that many, disregarding the certain disadvantages which must accrue to their own interests, were willing to renounce all that attached them to the country, and to brave persecution, reproach, and trouble, in order that they might help to populate and strengthen the holy city (2). There are many opportunities still for this willing dedication to the service of God. And surely there is nothing dearer to Him who has done so much for us, than to see us making personal sacrifices for his cause.

There is given next a register of those who elected to live in the holy city (3, &c.). "Israel" must mean individuals from all the tribes who had returned from Babylon. Joel was governor of the city, and Judah his deputy (9). Many priests chose to reside in Jerusalem, even when not attending to the duties of their course (10). The ruler of the house of the Lord (11) had superintendence of secular matters, and is afterwards called the captain of the temple (Acts v. 24). The singers and choir were specially maintained (23). Those who praise God like the song-birds can count on maintenance from God. The porters and gatekeepers are also specially mentioned (19). Thus each special officer and department of ministry is passed under review. All was full of interest to God. And as we go to our special spheres of service, let us remember that our names also are recorded and our work known.

MONDAY, MARCH 17.—Nehemiah XII.

The names of the chief of the priests and Levites who returned from the exile are again given (1-26). We should remember the names of those who have done special service to the cause of God (Heb. xiii. 7). There is also a list of the high-priests for several generations towards the time of Christ (10, 11). If this Jaddua were, as Josephus tells us, the high priest who went out to meet Alexander the Great when he came to Jerusalem, then these two verses must have been added later by another hand. The reference of ver. 24 is probably to antiphonal singing, the psalms being sung by opposite choirs.

The dedication of the wall (27-43).—They began to build in fear, they now dedicate with joy. Sow in tears, reap in songs. Let us never forget to acknowledge the great goodness of God. It is also proper to consecrate all we have to God, putting it in his holy keeping, and employing it for Him. Two companies of princes, priests, Levites, and singers were appointed. One, headed by Ezra, went to the right, the other, led by Nehemiah, went to the left. They thus made a circuit of the wall in different directions, meeting on the opposite side of the city and going in one great body to the temple. There was great attention given to matters of purification, which was probably effected by sprinkling the water of purifying (Num. xix. 9) on persons, wall, and gates—type of the precious blood of Christ, through which we draw nigh to God, and our person and work are accepted (Heb. ix. 14).

The appointment of the officers and portions of the temple (44-47).—What care was manifested for the worthy maintenance of those who ministered in sacred things! And what glad outbursts of minstrelsy and holy joy! The long captivity had indeed done its work in these respects. Pruning should always result in fruit-bearing.

TUESDAY, MARCH 18.—Nehemiah XIII.

Separation (1-9).—The Word of God cuts like a two-edged sword against evil. Happy are they who attend to its solemn monitions. The law referred to here was Deut. xxiii. 3-5. What a blessing it would be if the Church of God put away from her the mixed multitude which adulterates and impairs her influence on the world. God can turn all the curses of our foes into blessing (2). Tobiah was an Ammonite, and it was a scandalous thing that the high priest was not only allied to him by marriage, but cast out the stores of the temple, to make a room for him there, in the sacred edifice. And Tobiah's influence was so great that the rest shrank from putting the law of separation in operation against him; but when the single-minded Nehemiah returned from a long sojourn in Persia, he cast out all Tobiah's goods, and restored the chamber to its proper use. If we have given up a chamber in our heart to any Tobiah, we must be prepared to do likewise.

Reformation (10-14).—How often have we to institute careful scrutiny over ourselves, to see that we are not running back from our solemn vows and protestations. The blame did not attach to the Levites so much as to the rulers. When God has entrusted us with power over others, we are bound to exercise it, or be held blameworthy. What touching ejaculations (14 and 22). When we have done our best, we still need God's sparing mercy (Heb. vi. 10).

Sabbath keeping (15-22).—Let us remember that we should keep perpetual Sabbath in the citadel of the heart. No burden should be allowed to enter there, but God's peace stand sentry (Phil. iv. 7).

Dismissal of strange wives (23-31).—Twenty years before Ezra had done this very thing. But the evil had risen up again. The evil spirit had come back (see Mal. ii. 11). Alas, how sadly do children expose the inconsistencies of their parents, and bewray the evil of unequal marriages. We see plenty of this around us; and where there is such a mixture, the balance is certain to turn in favour of the world, as against vital godliness. The grandson of the high priest had actually married a daughter of Sanballat (ii. 10, iv. 1). Nehemiah did not hesitate to add strong acts to strong words. Josephus says that this expelled priest was Manasseh, and that he went to his father-in-law, Sanballat, who built a temple for him on Mount Gerizim, like that at Jerusalem; and that this was the origin of the religious rivalry and hatred between Samaritans and Jews (John iv. 20).

ESTHER.

This book is a striking record of the Divine providence. In the foregoing books we learn how God watched over the Jews who returned from captivity. This tells us how those who remained still in exile, scattered through the great heathen world, were marvellously preserved. Though the name of God does not occur in this book, yet his hand is everywhere manifest; and we may ask whether, though his name does not often occur in the daily paper, which records the history of our times, yet the workings of God are not also clearly recorded there. Verily our God hides Himself.

The time occupied by this story falls between the going up of Zerubbabel from Babylon to Jerusalem, and that of Ezra. The Persian empire was at the zenith of its glory, extending from the Indus to the Mediterranean. It is supposed that the Ahasuerus here mentioned was Xerxes, the invader of Greece. The feast in chap. i. corresponds in point of time to the great council he summoned to decide on that invasion. His winter palace was at Shushan, and his court given to revelry and excess. It is held by some that the book is an extract from the imperial records of the time, and was perhaps drawn up by some pious Jew, Mordecai or other, who was annalist then; and if this were the case, it would account for many parentheses and explanations which are inserted, but which would not have been required by ordinary Jewish readers.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19.—Esther I.

The Book opens with a royal festival, which lasted for six months (1-9). Perhaps the princes came up from their governments to partake of it in rotation. It finished with a banquet, open to all the people who dwelt in Shushan, great and small. The good custom was that each guest was left to do as he would with respect to wine; but there seems to have been little self-restraint, and intemperance was the rule, with all its attendant sins. The beds spoken of were couches, or divans (6).

Whenever men are overcome with wine, there is grave peril to woman (10, 11). Coarseness, indelicacy, impurity, troop in at the door which has been unlocked by excess of wine. Who can tell the anguish which has been caused to women, children, and the dumb creation through the intemperance of man! Here is a glimpse given of a noble woman, who respected herself too highly to yield to a demand which was wholly foreign to the customs of the time, forbidding women to appear in public.

Of course the king was incensed, all the more so because he knew that he was in the wrong. He had command over 127 provinces, but he could not rule his own spirit, and the sense of moral weakness is always irritating. He consulted his counsellors, who were only too glad to fall in with and humour the royal whims; and they counselled that the divorce of Vashti was a public duty, for the repression of wife-insubordination throughout the empire. Men are not always to be trusted when they legislate about women, or in respect to their own dignity. When wine is in them they may be expected to say and do very stupid things. It has been truly said that every Ahasuerus has his Memucans, sycophants, and parasites, who hold their influence by humouring caprice and lust.

THURSDAY, MARCH 20.—Esther II.

The king, when cooler, soberer moments came, seems to have repented of his decree as to Vashti, and he would probably have reinstated her, had it not been for the fundamental constitution of the realm that royal edicts could not be retracted. And it would have gone hard with his counsellors if she had been taken back; so they made proposals which, by engaging the king's thoughts, and pleasing his lowest desires, averted the stroke they feared.

Esther was a captive and orphan, but the Lord cared for her (Ps. xxvii. 10). We must not judge her by our own standards, but by the custom of her time, which did not consider that there was harm in doing as she did. Each of these young girls was considered to be married to the king, was kept under his roof, and was his wife of a lower rank. How great the influence of Christianity in raising our standards and pervading the world with a loftier morality!

She was not bidden to deny her parentage, or to lie to conceal it; only advised not to proclaim it (10). But, when afterwards she attained to power, there was no flinching from identification with her race. And so she attained the highest position in the world to which a woman could aspire. God lifted her there to serve a high and noble purpose. We, in like manner, are where we are for similar ends (1 Sam. ii. 8).

Mordecai discovered a plot against the king, and told it to his ward, the queen, and she to her royal spouse. The deed was unrewarded, but in this the faithful doorkeeper would not be disappointed. He acted not for reward, but from a sense of duty. But the act was registered both in heaven and on earth, and it bore fruit. It is enough for us to do our duty, and please God.

FRIDAY, MARCH 21.—Esther III.

Josephus says that Agagite means a descendant of Agag, the common name for the kings of the Amalekites (Numb. xxiv. 7). The refusal of Mordecai was founded on religious grounds (Exod. xvii. 16; Deut. xxv. 17). It is probable also that something of the nature of religious homage was demanded, and this Mordecai could not tolerate for a moment. It would have been as bad as the falling down to worship the golden image of Dura. He, therefore, sturdily refused. What diabolical cruelty was here, to meditate the destruction of a nation to satisfy a personal grudge!

The resolve was taken in the first month, when Esther had been queen for five years; but the lot indicated the twelfth month for its execution, so that Esther had twelve months in which to counterwork it. The disposing of the lot was evidently God's (Prov. xvi. 33).

All went well in Haman's request of the king. The bribe of four millions sterling, which he probably hoped to get from the spoils of the slaughtered Jews, would, without doubt, help to pave his way, and make the king favourable. The matter was soon settled, and the posts were carrying the edict of slaughter to the furthest limits of the realm. It reminds us of the decree for the massacre of the Huguenots.

But God was over all. The strongest assaults are vain against Him (Ps. ii. 4). He will not let high-handed wrong proceed beyond a certain point (2 Kings xix. 28). Let us shelter behind Him and rest (Ps. lxxvi. 10).

SATURDAY, MARCH 22.—Esther IV.

A paroxysm of agony and grief followed the progress of the posts throughout the empire. And Mordecai did not scruple to avow his anguish of soul before the entire city.

Esther was in sore straits. She could not communicate in person with Mordecai. She could only hear of his grief, and address him through others. She seemed powerless to do anything. None could enter the king's presence unbidden, save at the risk of life; and the king's affections seem to have somewhat cooled towards her (11).

How different her lot to ours, who may at any time come boldly to the throne of grace. The golden sceptre is always stretched out to welcome us.

There were four points on which Mordecai insisted. (1) That she was equally involved with the rest. (2) That the cause of the Jews would certainly prevail, if not with her, then without her; it would be wise, therefore, to ally herself with a winning cause. (3) That if she did not do what she could, she would have to suffer for her unfaithfulness. (4) That it was for this that God had made her queen. When once we know that we are on God's plan, we need not fear consequences. But if we evade the duties which call for us, we may seriously fear lest, like the unfaithful servant, we should not only be deprived of our talent, but sent into the outer darkness.

What a beautiful instance of united prayer. Though we cannot join the assemblies of God's people, we can pray in our homes. And when such prayer is ascending, we may be sure that our steps shall not err, or our purpose miscarry. There is no venture for those who enter the presence-chamber of the King of kings.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 23.

Christ Forgiving Sin.—Luke v. 17-26.

Golden Text: Verse 21.

Parallel accounts of this miracle are found in Matt. ix. 2-8, and Mark ii. 1-12. It took place in the city of Capernaum (Mark ii. 1), and probably in the house of Peter. The occasion was a very important one. A very large company crowded not only the room itself, but outside the door as well (Mark); so enthusiastic were the people to hear Jesus. Among the hearers were some persons of note—"Pharisees and doctors of the law" (17). These men have already come into conflict with Jesus (John v.); and they have gathered among this company not in order to hear for their own profit, but only to find reason for condemning Jesus. Nothing that Jesus could say or do would benefit such hearers until their unreasonable prejudice was given up. Notwithstanding their presence, "the power of the Lord was present to heal" (17). Connect this with the secret prayer of Jesus which preceded this meeting (16). Was it not then that our Lord, as Son of Man, received his power? No lesson is more important for the teacher than this. Do some come to the class only to hinder and annoy the others? Power to subdue them can be obtained by communion with God.

This important gathering suffers a remarkable interruption. What was it? A palsied man, helpless with disease, having heard of the fame of Jesus, was being brought to Him. The friends who brought him are worthy of all praise. They were friends indeed. They felt considerable sympathy for the sick man, but they did not waste their sympathy in useless words. They did the very best thing for their friend. For what greater blessing can we give to others than to lead them to Jesus? Aim at this with every unsaved friend or scholar. Attempt always to get the class into contact with Jesus, and have confidence in his power to save the worst.

Their perseverance is highly commendable. Their benevolent purpose was beset with difficulty. To carry the man by the four corners of his mat, or quilt (Thomson) was easy; but the crowd around the door prevented their access. In those days, as in these, mere onlookers and hearers for their own enjoyment crowd out of revival meetings those who need the Saviour. But there are more ways into a building than by the door. To reach the low roof of an eastern house was possible either "by a flight of steps outside, built against the wall, or by a ladder, or even from the next house, for the houses frequently communicated with each other by the terraces."—Godet. The roofs of the houses were constructed of large beams, then joists, then brushwood, and over this gravel rolled hard—Robinson. "Tiles" (19) in this case were used instead of brushwood. Even such a roof could not be removed without difficulty, nor without occasioning some inconvenience to those below. It was a work to which faith prompted the four friends (20). This the Saviour saw, and commended. True faith will always work, and will meet and overcome difficulties. Nothing paralyses like unbelief; but nothing gives energy and courage like strong confidence.

This strange interruption served to display the power of Jesus. His first word displays his power to look beneath the outward condition of the sick man. "Thy sins are forgiven thee" (20). From this we conclude that the man was conscious of his sin, and that the "faith" which Jesus saw must have included his. Only the consciously guilty can receive pardon, and none are pardoned except on condition of personal faith. Thus to forgive sins is one of the most remarkable displays of Divine power (24). The miracle was a further display (23-25). The principle upon which they had reasoned was not denied. For anyone save God to forgive sins is blasphemy. Sin is against God, and only He can forgive it. Priestly confession and priestly absolution are a deception. Their attempt to fasten upon Jesus the sin of blasphemy has failed, and they are shut up to one of two alternatives—either acknowledge Him to be the Son of God, or stand convicted of guilty rejection of Him in face of clearest light. They came in hope of condemning Him; they return condemned themselves.

LESSONS.

(1) Forgiveness of sins is our first need.—Even scholars know that unforgiven sin can destroy their happiness. Nothing can cause such anguish as an accusing conscience. Jesus, therefore, dealt with the sin first. To be forgiven is of more importance than to be healed.

(2) Forgiveness is God's prerogative.—The power of Jesus in healing the body was the evidence of his authority to forgive sins. It is important that our scholars should know how utterly valueless is a pardon spoken by man alone.

(3) Divine forgiveness is based upon atonement.—This is suggested by the fact that God speaks pardon through Jesus. He came to bear sin, and to make it righteous for God to justify the ungodly.

(4) To believe his word is the way to receive pardon.—Jesus said, "Thy sins are forgiven": the palsied man had but to believe his word. So let his word be received to-day (John v. 24).

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—The Broadway Tabernacle, New York, was the scene of a memorable meeting in the interests of Dr. Dowkontt's Medical Missionary Society. A very large attendance of representative women from numerous churches and missionary circles was gathered to hear Mrs. Dr. Woodside, of India, who spoke about the blessed work she had witnessed in the various city dispensaries superintended by Dr. Dowkontt, where "the poor have the Gospel preached to them," while their maladies are healed. She gave some moving incidents from her wide experience in the practice of medicine among the heathen women and children of India. She had always found that for every patient cured there were scores, sometimes hundreds, who would flock to her for treatment. Accordingly, she felt the pressing need of more hospitals for women in heathendom. Dr. Dowkontt stated that in seven years more than 67,000 patients had been treated in the dispensaries under his charge, thus forcibly showing the wide range of experience and observation which his band of sixty students had enjoyed while in active training here for the ministry of healing which they will enter upon when they reach foreign shores.

A NEW METHODIST SISTERHOOD.—About thirty ministers and laymen were invited by Dr. T. B. Stephenson to meet him at Cannon-street Hotel in order to consider an experimental scheme for a Methodist Sisterhood. For fifteen years past Dr. Stephenson has been steadily developing a branch of the female diaconate in the "sisters of the children" who take charge of his Children's Home, and twelve months since he received a promise from Mr. Mewburn of £500 towards the establishment of a Training Home for Sisters. Mr. J. E. Vanner has also promised to contribute £50 a year for three years towards the expenses. At the request of Dr. Stephenson a number of gentlemen have consented to form a council of advice. The Home is to be near Bonner-road, Victoria Park, and is to be capable of accommodating ten or twelve probationary sisters. Applicants must (unless in exceptional cases) be members of the Methodist Church. Of course, no vows will be required, but Dr. Stephenson hopes that candidates will be moved by a deep conviction that God has called them to this work. They will be specially trained with a view to three great fields of usefulness—(1) Work in connection with orphanages, industrial schools, &c.; (2) ministering to the sick poor; (3) evangelistic visitation.

Factory Work in Lancashire.—In a recent issue it was stated in a "note" that as recently as 1883 the hours of child-labour in factories near Manchester were eleven per day, and that children of five were employed. The date was a printer's error; it should have been 1833.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

An Association has been organised in Delaware State College.

The Antwerp Association gives special attention to work among soldiers.

The Manchester Association have arranged a public "protest" against betting and gambling for March 31.

The Buffalo (U.S.) Association has a membership of close on 3000. It is looking forward to an early visit from Mr. Moody.

The Railroad Branch of the Philadelphia Y.M.C.A. has nearly 400 members, and is ambitious to get 1000 before the close of the present year.

A "cake and coffee social" in a Vermont town brought to the Association premises many young men who had never entered its doors before.

"State Secretary" Hall of New York says that 2000 members have been added to the Associations in the State during the year; the total number is now 36,000.

The Finsbury Park Association is pushing its temperance work. At the recent annual meeting of its temperance branch, the various aspects of the question were vigorously handled.

It is asserted that in the city of Prague nine out of every ten young men spend their evenings in places of temptation and sin. The local Association is much in want of a new building.

A convention held last month at Brantford, Ontario, has been a source of much stimulus to the work. The secretary here is Mr. George E. Williams, late of the Brixton branch.

The "Flood Commission" in Johnstown, Pa., have refused to give any portion of their unused balance towards the erection of a Y.M.C.A. building in place of that destroyed in the catastrophe of last year.

The Missionary Society in connection with the Ealing Association are carrying on an evangelistic work among lodging houses in Brentford. Free meals have been given, when Gospel addresses were delivered to those assembled.

The Holyoke, Mass., Association is working for a new building to cost 80,000 dollars. The instructor in physical training here is a Mr. George Williams; there seems to be quite a crop of gentlemen in Y.M.C.A. work bearing that honoured name.

We learn with sincere regret that the project of securing a new and adequately commodious home for the Aldersgate-street Association "hangs fire." We believe there is no association in London doing better and more genuine work, and it deserves a habitation in keeping with its extensive operations. Will not some wealthy City man come to the rescue?

The growth of the Association at Pueblo, Colorado, during the past year (the first of its existence), is described as "phenomenal." "The keynote to the success thus far has been the evangelistic, aggressive Christian spirit that has aimed directly at the saving of young men from the temptations of that growing, restless, prosperous, materialistic, city."

The Y.M.C.A. Beehive, organ of the Manchester Association, says:—"With reference to the alleged case of persecution of a Y.M.C.A. delegate to the Stockholm Conference, reported in The Nineteenth Century to have spoken there of the sufferings of his co-religionists in the Baltic provinces, and who was stated to have been arrested on his return home and transported to Siberia, information is to hand that the writer must have been misinformed upon the circumstances."

CHINESE IN CHICAGO.—Mr. Smithson, of Chicago (late of Dublin), has launched a new enterprise designed to benefit the Chinamen residing in that great city. He has secured a building which he purposes fitting up as a "Home." He has long been persuaded that the Chinese Sunday-school needed some such additional agency to emphasise its lessons and give John a chance to live like a Christian. Of the 1500 Chinamen in Chicago, several hundreds regularly attend Sunday-school, and about fifty have made profession of the Christian religion. It is intended to have a Chinaman for superintendent, and Mr. Smithson is in correspondence with Lee Hain, an exceptionally bright and intelligent Chinaman, who has just completed a two years' course at Mr. Moody's school at Northfield, Mass.—Faithful Witness.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Memorials of Edwin Hatch, D.D. Edited by his Brother. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The many admirers of the late Dr. Hatch will welcome this volume, which contains several biographical notices, collected from periodical literature, and twenty-five sermons preached at various periods of his thirty years' ministry. Some of the discourses were delivered to congregations of artisans and village folk; others from the pulpits of Oxford University and Westminster Abbey. All are characteristic of the man, cultured and large-hearted. Every page bears evidence of the strong mind and great power of the preacher, of whom an excellent portrait is given by way of frontispiece. The sermons on "Humility" and "The place of Controversy in the Christian life," are among the best in the book, which is from first to last a rich mine of thought and instruction.

Russia. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. The reader in the Russian and Slavonic Languages in the University of Oxford has made a valuable addition to the very useful "Story of the Nations" series. Not professing to be exhaustive, the book presents an outline of Russian history enabling the reader easily to follow the development of the great northern Power from the little Grand Duchy of Muscovy in the fifteenth century to the present empire with its hundred million inhabitants. Though by no means drawing his sketch from an English standpoint, the author has not concealed the darker shades of the picture. The work is not a mere compilation, but based upon original authorities, and is well written and admirably illustrated. Though not itself political, this book describes, with comprehensive precision, the political and social institutions of the country.

Cookery for Working Men's Wives. 3d. Alexander Gardner. A book of greater practical value than many larger works having a like object. The instruction is presented as taught by Martha H. Gordon in the domestic economy classes instituted at Govan, Scotland, by Mrs. John Elder. Some useful hints are added on washing and sanitation, and "What to do till the Doctor comes."

THE ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1889

(With Complete Statements of Accounts, duly audited by Chartered Accountants), is published, Price SIXPENCE,

UNDER THE TITLE OF

and should be diligently perused by all who are really interested in the rapid extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

There are now 4,100 trained officers labouring in the foreign field, and 4,400 in Great Britain; holding upwards of 46,800 Gospel Services every week, and the scores of penitent anxious souls faithfully and effectually dealt with in visiting, as well as at the meetings in every district, demonstrate God's approval and blessing. Every department of the work has so marvellously increased, that it is now deemed expedient to appeal to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN for his or her prayerful and practical support.

The Sick and wounded Officers from far and near must be cared for. The Slum Sisters must be supported. The Rescue Deliverers must be kept going. The Training of Officers, in still larger numbers, must go forward. The advance throughout the world must be continued and increased, and the general oversight of all these operations, both at home and abroad, must be sustained.

Amount needed for the	Slum Work	£2,500
	Rescue Work	8,000
	Training of Officers..	10,000
	General Spiritual Fund	17,500
	Food and Shelter Depôts	2,000
	Erection of New Buildings	10,000
	Extension of Work Abroad	15,000
	Help to the Sick, Maintenance of Homes of Rest	5,000
		£70,000

Kindly detach, and forward this either to General Booth, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

OUT of thankfulness to God for the thousands of my fellow creatures rescued through the instrumentality of the Salvation Army, and desiring to help to carry on this war against sin, misery, and hell, I will contribute the sum of

GALVANIC BELTS

FOR the CURE of NERVOUS DISEASES

HAVE RECEIVED TESTIMONIALS from over FIFTY MEMBERS of the ROYAL COLLEGE of PHYSICIANS of LONDON, including THREE PHYSICIANS to HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. SCIATICA and LUMBAGO.

39, Union-street, Tranmere, Birkenhead, 28th February, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I feel I ought to thank you as the means, in the hands of a merciful God, of restoring me to health and strength. For upwards of four months I had been in a helpless condition, suffering from Sciatica and Lumbago, and was under three medical men; a fourth doctor was called in, and he informed me that my sciatic nerves and lumbar muscles were contracted, and the muscles of left leg completely wasted for want of circulation, and my sufferings were so great that they injected morphia to give me rest. One doctor advised electricity as a last resource, and I wrote to you, and from the first hour I wore your Galvanic Belt I obtained immediate relief, and day by day the cramps and severe pains gradually left me, and my muscles are perfectly restored again. I have now resumed business, believing my cure to be permanent. I have recommended your treatment to many of my friends and neighbours who have witnessed the wonderful cure effected in my case, and I consider your Galvanic appliances a marvellous scientific invention. One of the doctors called on me to know the result, and asked me what I thought of your Belt. I replied, I don't think, but I know, it has been my Salvation.—Yours faithfully, J. PHILLIPS.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION and NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Melview, Clonmel, Ireland, February 21, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I have only worn your Galvanic Bands for two months, since which I have had no return of the ailments I suffered from in consequence of the damp weather (indigestion and nervous debility). I now feel strong and healthy, which I believe is due entirely to using your electric appliance, and shall feel obliged if you will send me some of your pamphlets for my friends.—Yours very truly, (Mrs.) L. MALCOMSON.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. EXTREME NERVOUS DEBILITY and SLEEPLESSNESS.

12, Henry-street, Rawtenstall, Lancashire, February 17, 1890.

Dear Sir,—You will be pleased to hear of the recovery of my apparently hopeless case. It is now some months since you persuaded me to try one of your Electric Belts. I was then suffering from nervous weakness, loss of appetite, sleeplessness, and pain in the side. In fact, I was a complete wreck, and two physicians whom I consulted told me that I should never be well again. Before I consulted you I had lost 3 stone in weight, and was so completely broken down, I lost all hope; but after wearing your Belt for a short time I began to revive, and in two months the improvement was so rapid that one of my physicians told me I should get well again; and now that I am restored to health, you are at perfect liberty to use this letter as a testimonial.—Faithfully yours, J. NORTH.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

BRONCHITIS.—CASE at LLANGOLLEN.

Mr. H. ROBERTS, Quarryman, VRON, LLANDYNAU, near Llangollen, North Wales, took cold through getting wet. This settled on his chest with severe cough, and profuse expectoration, which had partly assumed a purulent character. The disease was lapsing into Broncho-Phthisis. Profuse night sweats followed, reduced strength, and loss of flesh all over the body.

From this he recovered, and having occasion to write me relative to his son, he says: "I was under your treatment three years ago, and it completely cured me."

Recently I made some enquiry, to which he answers that he continues to enjoy good health, and further writes:—"My son is much better, he takes your medicine occasionally; he has such faith in it he will take no other."

CADBURY'S

REFRESHING COCOA SUSTAINING

Cadbury's Cocoa is closely allied to milk in the large proportion of flesh-forming and strength-sustaining elements that it contains. It is prepared on the principle of excluding the superabundance of fatty indigestible matter with which cocoa abounds—supplying a refined thin infusion of absolutely pure cocoa, exhilarating and refreshing, for Breakfast, Luncheon, Tea, or Supper—giving staying power and imparting new life and vigour to growing children, and those of delicate constitutions.

SUITABLE FOR A GIFT-BOOK.

The Christian Portrait Gallery:

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED Life-like Portraits and Biographic Sketches of Prominent Christian Workers of the Present Day.

Handsomely Bound, Demy Quarto, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"In respect of truthful portraiture, nothing could be more desirable than the sketches here presented; many of the faces familiar to the public of to-day starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects are drawn from a very extended tract of religious life; and a meed of praise is rendered equally to the popular pulpiteer; the worker in the slums; the gleaner in the Indian mission field; and the South African evangelist."—Scottish Leader.

"The statement on the title-page that the portraits are 'life-like illustrations' is no empty boast. Of the kind there are few which more nearly fulfil the exacting requirements of popular taste, or indeed of artistic criticism. The letterpress also is admirable. The book is handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt edges and lettering. As a worthy record of noble lives it deserves a place on every Christian drawing-room table."
Methodist Recorder.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller in the United Kingdom or the Colonies.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

A DEVOTED LIFE.

BY REV. JOHN MACPHERSON.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. | WITH MEZZOTYPE PORTRAIT. | Bevelled boards, Gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"In its subject and in execution this biography is of no common order. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life, a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. . . . The sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."
Cambridge Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

OLD MARGARET:

OR, A SAINT AT LAST.

BY REV. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

Tinted Covers, 6d. | WITH STRIKING PORTRAIT. | Cloth Boards, 1s.

"Dr. Cumming has given a most interesting little sketch of a very remarkable life. To those who knew the dear old woman no recommendation is needed. They will laugh and cry by turns as they read the humorous and pathetic incidents which the story tells: and others cannot fail to be interested in it. . . . Dr. Cumming has given us a most delightful little memoir."—Life of Faith, February, 1890.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

"All who have heard Major Whittle will be glad to possess this excellent little volume. It is just the book to put into the hands of young converts. We wish it a wide circulation."—Railway Signal.

"It is a thoroughly characteristic little book by a man who is evidently on fire with a holy enthusiasm, and it may be helpful to many."—Christian Leader.

P. P. BLISS:

HIS LIFE AND LIFE-WORK.

By MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE and REV. W. GUEST.

Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Special Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 6d.

"The narrative is a most affecting one, and will be read with the deepest possible interest. . . . A fitting tribute to the memory of one whose earnestness in his Master's cause seems to have been almost without parallel in the present age."—Grantham Journal.

"Cannot be too highly prized or too widely circulated; in fact, for the good it is calculated to do, it ought to be in the hands of every English reader."—Midland Gazette.
